Hindoos	96,534	39,839	136,373
Mussulmans	41,428	19,626	61,054
East Indians	970	265	1,235
Europeans	624	116	740
	141,546	59,846	201,392
Hindoos in service	41,109
Mussulmans in service	6,950
Native lodgers, or passengers	15,891
Total	265,253

These are distributed in 201 villages. In the thannahs on the east side of the river, the number of mehals is described as 187; brick houses, of one and two floors, 3,606; native huts, 57,850; and native houses, 1,262; whilst the total resident population to these number of habitations was 143,537, exclusive of servants and lodgers.

In examining the tables of the mortality, which is found to prevail in Calcutta, we shall perceive a great difference in the comparative rate amongst different classes, even during the same periods of years. It is not possible at present to obtain any great degree of accuracy, from the difficulty of allowing for the increase or fluctuation of the population. The numbers of the last census have been, therefore, assumed as the standard of comparison. The deaths amongst Protestants are derived from the average of the burials registered in the Protestant burial-ground for the twenty years from 1817 to 1836, inclusive, comprising also, since 1826, those which are separately distinguished for the Scotch burial-ground to the latter date. The Catholic burials are for the same twenty years, recorded against the classes of French and Portuguese, in the burial-grounds of the church of D. Rozario, the principal church, and of the Boitoeknah church. It is satisfactory to observe, that the burials amongst Protestants have not increased of late years, though the number existing must have been considerably augmented. The Europeans and Eurasians live in comparative comfort; but the Portuguese, who form the larger proportion of the Catholic burials, are described as very subject to sickness and exposed to much privation. Another circumstance to account for the less mortality apparent amongst the English may be the fact, that their numbers are recruited by the immigration of persons in the prime of life; but even allowing for this circumstance, the difference is still very great. The deaths amongst the Hindoos and Mussulmans afford a better standard of comparison with the population enumerated in the census, as they are comprised in the period from 1832 to 1842, and which being five years before and five years after the year in which the census was made, may be presumed to represent a more correct average of the mortality per cent. in these two classes. It should be observed the years 1833 and 1834, following the sea inundations, were marked by an unusual degree of mortality amongst both these classes.

	Living 1837.	Deaths per cent.
		Average 1832 to 1836.	Average 1832 to 1842.	Average 1817 to 1836.
Protestants (English and Eurasians) ..	7,884	3.46	..	3.5
Catholics (Portuguese and French) ..	3,350	11.82	..	12.44
Mahomedans	59,604	2.7	3.47	..
Hindoos	157,473	6.07	5.71	..
Armenians	636	4
Native Christians ..	49	7.14
	238,996

In the whole population, the mean of all the observations shewed an average mortality of 4.56 per cent. per annum. For the three years immediately following the census the following is the average mortality:—

7.—Mortality per cent. in the different Classes in 1837-8 and 9.

	Christians.	Mahomedans.	Hindoos.
1837	5.46	2.29	4.56
1838	5.81	2.53	6.22
1839	5.44	2.35	4.17
Mean	5.57	2.39	4.96

On the average of deaths from 1813 to 1830 the mortality in six large towns in England, namely, York, Norwich, Plymouth, Hull, Portsmouth, and Liverpool, was 2.95 per cent., and that of London, for the same period, 2.84 per cent. By comparing the latter with the proportion for some of the classes into which the population of Calcutta is divided, it may be concluded that some improvement may be effected when this subject has obtained the attention it merits, since it is evident that other causes than that of climate must exist to create so wide a difference. There are many reasons, for instance, to account for the greater mortality amongst the Hindoos than the Mahomedans, though both are natives of the same place. The latter are decidedly more cleanly in habit, and enjoy a better diet, whilst all accounts concur in placing both the physical and moral character of the former at a very low ebb. But those causes which principally affect the health, habits of uncleanness, insensibility to the feelings of others, by which the sick and dying are neglected when they most need attention, the profligacy of many of the castes from the restriction on the remarriage of widows, and the obscenity, the drunkenness, and the degraded character of their religious festivals; the practice of polygamy, which has been found every where to deteriorate the health of the population where it prevails; and lastly, their wretched clothing, and even the want of fuel to meet the changes of the season (a want which may sound strange to an English ear in connection with an Indian climate); all are characteristics of the Hindoos, which have a fatal effect on their general health, and have been noticed at large by more than one writer.

To compare properly the mortality amongst Europeans in India with that in other countries, the half-castes or Eurasians should have been separated from the Protestants, with whom they appear combined, but the mortality of the soldiers in garrison at Fort William may be compared with that of soldiers in other places:—

8.—Mortality amongst the Garrison of Fort William compared with that of Soldiers in other Places.

	Per cent. of strength.
	Admitted into Hospital.	Died.
1832 to 1838.—In garrison at Fort William	188	7.33
— Dinapore	240	10.00
1835 to 1844.—Bengal Presidency	179	7.28
— Madras Presidency	134	3.85
— Bombay Presidency	174	5.07
1830 to 1836.—Dragoons and Dragoon Guards in Great Britain	93	1.4

Compared with the military returns in European countries, and even in other parts of India, the mortality amongst the troops in Fort William is very great; but that the health of the soldiers is susceptible of great improvement, by attending to their condition, and encouraging the formation of more steady habits in the men, may be proved by a very interesting table prepared by Dr. Macleod, and printed in Dr. Martin's admirable Report on the Medical Topography of Calcutta.

9.—Health of Temperance Societies in Regiments in Bengal, as shown by the Admissions and Number in Hospital per Cent. of Strength.

	Admitted into Hospital.		Daily in Hospital.
	Temperance Members.	Remainder.	Temperance Members.	Remainder.
January	5.33	10.15	3.54	8.05
February	4.78	10.07	3.27	8.27
March	6.94	13.66	3.94	8.66
April	9.35	18.81	5.47	10.32
May	5.38	14.77	5.24	10.06
June	5.06	14.66	4.55	10.33
	36.84	81.51	3.84	9.37

From an inspection of this table it will be seen that on an average of six months, where 81 admissions into hospital took place amongst soldiers who were not members of the Temperance Societies, only 36 of those who were members were subject to attacks of sickness; and that, whilst the number of the former who were constantly in hospital was nearly 94 per thousand, that of the latter was only 38. The average number reported sick at 74 monthly musters in Great Britain, according to Mr. Finlaison's Report, was, in the infantry, 4.98 per cent. of strength. A considerable difference will consequently be observed in favour of soldiers belonging to Temperance Societies, even whilst exposed to the risks of the climate of India. These are facts which, if made known to the men themselves, might assist the efforts of those officers who are anxious for the health and comforts of the soldiers, and desirous of pointing out to them how much they may gain by their own efforts, and by a firm determination to refuse indulgencies which, however exasperating they may appear at the time, lead to confirmed habits, demoralizing to the character and fatal to life.

This letter has already extended to greater length than was originally expected; but if the subject should appear of sufficient interest, it may be continued in another, in which I should beg leave to make a few observations on the mortality amongst children, and on the influence of the seasons on the health of the inhabitants of Calcutta.

I remain, Sir,

Equitable Office,
Blackfriars, 24th March, 1848.

Your obedient servant,
SAMUEL BROWN.

LEGAL PROCEEDINGS.

VICE-CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

MARCH 11.—Mitford v. Reynolds.—The present application was a petition by Miss Eliza Henrietta Pattle, the daughter of a Lieutenant Pattle, who was the brother of Mrs. Mitford, and was killed in action in 1803. Miss Pattle, after the age of 18, was adopted by Mr. and Mrs. Mitford, and resided with them. Whilst at Dacca, she became engaged to a gentleman named Huddleston, a Roman Catholic. On the 31st of October, 1824, her uncle, Mr. Mitford, signed a bond, by which he became bound to James Pattle and William Pattle (uncles of the petitioner) in the sum of 40,000 sicca rupees, the said bond to be void on payment of 20,000 sicca rupees, with interest at 6 per cent. An indenture of settlement was also executed of even date, between Huddleston of the first part, the petitioner of the second part, Mr. Mitford of the third part, and the testator's uncles and another person of the fourth part, which, after reciting the intended marriage, and certain stocks to which Miss Pattle was personally entitled, and that in prospect of the marriage Mr. Mitford had executed the bond, provided, that until the solemnization of the marriage according to the forms of the Protestant Church, or in case it should not be solemnized within twelve calendar months after the date of those presents, the said James Pattle and William Pattle, or the survivor of them, should stand possessed of the trust moneys, &c., in trust for the said Eliza Henrietta Pattle, her executors, &c., absolutely; and a bond was also executed by Mr. Huddleston. The marriage was not solemnized, and Mr. Mitford delivered the bond and settlement to the petitioner, and after the marriage had been broken off the testator expressed his intention of taking a legal opinion as to the petitioner's legal rights against Mr. Huddlestone, and she delivered the bond and settlement back to him, and he wrote across the back of the bond these words, "Cancelled, Robert Mitford;" and died in January, 1836. The matter having been referred to the Master, he had made his report on a state of facts carried in before him, and evidence adduced as to the above circumstances, and on the words written on the back of the bond, disallowed the claim; and the petition was now presented upon that report, praying that she might have the benefit of the bond in question, and being, in fact, a species of exception to the Master's finding.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said it was a monstrous case, and dismissed the petition, with costs.

LITERARY NOTICE.

The Parlour Library, No. XIII. Schinderhannes, the Robber of the Rhine. By LEITCH RITCHIE. London and Belfast, 1848. Sims and M'Intyre.

THE addition of Mr. Ritchie's celebrated novel of "Schinderhannes" to those already published in this cheap form cannot but be very acceptable to the patrons of the Parlour Library. Mr. Ritchie's style is eminently popular; and in stirring scenes and sustained interest this work is inferior to none of the productions of his pen. The selection of this work for the Parlour Library is another instance of the judgment displayed by Messrs. Sims and M'Intyre.

I shall be much obliged to those of my friends who may have changed their residence to inform me of it, that there may be no error in the delivery of the proxy papers.

I have the honour to be,

Your faithful and obliged servant,

J. CAULFIELD, Major-General.

Committee Room, London Tavern,
March 30th, 1848.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK.

Ladies and Gentlemen,—

A VACANCY having occurred in the number of Directors of the East-India Company, out by rotation, I beg to state that it is not my intention to offer opposition to General Caulfield at the annual election, which will take place on the 12th proximo.

I have adopted this course under the advice of friends whom I believe to be well acquainted with your sentiments and wishes, and from conviction that this courtesy is due to a candidate who has secured the promise of support from a very large majority of the Proprietors.

At the very next vacancy which may occur, I have the assurance of assistance from so many of the present friends of General Caulfield, in addition to the strength I already possess, that I pledge myself unhesitatingly to proceed to the ballot, and shall do so with the fullest confidence of success, not in the least doubting that the result will shew your approval of the course I have thus determined upon.

With very grateful thanks for the favour I have hitherto experienced, and in humble reliance upon its continuance,

I have the honour to be, Ladies and Gentlemen,

Your very obedient and humble servant,

H. T. PRINSEP.

37, Hyde Park Gardens, March 11th, 1848.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK.

My Lords, Ladies, and Gentlemen,—

I HAVE the honour to acquaint you that the Committee for conducting my election on the 19th of April is now open at the London Tavern, where I earnestly solicit the attendance of my friends, and those honourable and independent Proprietors who may feel themselves at liberty to favour me with their support.

I have the honour to be, very respectfully,

My Lords, Ladies, and Gentlemen,

Your very faithful servant,

JOHN ARTHUR MOORE, Major,
(Late on Staff, Hyderabad, Deccan).

London, 27th March, 1848.

P.S.—It is most particularly requested that any alteration in address may be communicated to my Committee.

J. A. M.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK.

Ladies and Gentlemen,—

I HAVE the honour to apprise you that it is not my intention to proceed to the ballot at the general election which is notified to take place on Wednesday, the 12th proximo.

I have every reason, however, to expect that I shall, at an early subsequent vacancy, be in a position to claim the suffrages of those proprietors who have kindly promised me their support.

I have the honour to be, Ladies and Gentlemen,

Your most obedient servant,

JOHN CARNAC MORRIS,

Late of the Madras Civil Service.

10, Mansfield Street, Portland Place,
22nd March, 1848.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK.

Ladies and Gentlemen,—

ENCOURAGED by many promises of support from my friends, I have the honour to inform you that it is my intention to offer myself as a Candidate for a seat in the East-India Direction on the first favourable occasion after the ensuing general election.

Should that integrity of purpose and independence of character which marked the lengthened career of my uncle, the late Mr. Campbell Marjoribanks, as a Director, still retain a place in your recollection, I trust, upon his account, and that of others of my family who have been connected with India, a favourable reception will be allowed to me when I wait upon you to solicit your suffrages.

I shall only add, that should I, through your kindness, be so fortunate as to succeed in this my great object of ambition, my time and the best energies of my mind shall be devoted to your interests in promoting the welfare of our empire in India.

I have the honour to be, Ladies and Gentlemen,

Your most obedient humble servant,

DUDLEY COUTTS MARJORIBANKS.

34, Wimpole Street, 17th Feb. 1848.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK.

Ladies and Gentlemen,—

I BEG leave respectfully to announce that it is not my intention to offer myself as a candidate for the present vacancy in the East-India Direction, but, encouraged by the kindness and courtesy with which I have uniformly been received during the progress of my canvass, I shall continue to prosecute it, in the confident hope of being enabled to appear at the ballot at an early period.

I have the honour to be, Ladies and Gentlemen,

Your most obedient servant,

H. BORRADAILE.

Ham, Surrey.

H. & T. PEAT, SADDLERS, HARNESS-MAKERS,

&c., No. 167, PICCADILLY, LONDON, avail themselves of the present opportunity gratefully to acknowledge the patronage which they have received for so many years from their numerous connections in India, and to solicit a continuance of that preference which it has ever been their endeavour to deserve. At the same time, they beg to state that, from their very severe losses, they are compelled to decline the execution of any orders unless accompanied by an order for payment (when shipped) upon some agent or mercantile house in London.

It is also necessary that the name of an agent at the presidency should be given, to whom the goods are to be consigned, as the utmost despatch will be used in the shipments from London.

H. and T. Peat feel bound, in justice to themselves, to make it known that large quantities of saddlery, &c., bearing their name and address, which are not of their make, are sent out to India, and elsewhere, by other parties, and are of very inferior qualities. Gentlemen should, therefore, send their orders direct to H. and T. P. to ensure articles of their manufacture.

All military orders, whether Cavalry, Infantry, Staff, Artillery, or Engineer, will be executed according to the latest regulation, and a discount of 5 per cent. allowed for cash payments.

N.B.—H. and T. P. beg to recommend for durability their 10, 11, and 12 lb. saddles, in preference to the lighter ones of 7, 8, and 9 lbs., at present so much in demand for India; and likewise to observe that, in all cases where the goods are not insured, H. and T. P. cannot be accountable for any damage the same may receive after shipment.

CALDWALL'S PATENT NATIONAL SELF-FLEETING WINDLASS, CAPSTAN, AND RIDING BITS COMPANY.—Provisionally registered, and to be incorporated by Act of Parliament. Capital, £100,000, in 5,000 Shares of £20 each.

Deposit, 2s. per Share.
No Shareholder will be liable beyond the amount of his subscription.
Offices of the Company, —73, King William Street, City.

The intrinsic value and sterling merits of Caldwell's Self-Fleeting Windlass, Capstan, Riding Bits, and Purchase, over every other principle in use, is demonstrated by the patronage of the Lords of the Admiralty, Hon. Trinity Board, numerous shipowners, and the testimonials of the most practical, scientific, and influential nautical men in the kingdom. The anchor can be dropped, and any length of cable can be given without serge or jerk; fewer hands are required, and the anchor obtained in one half the time than with any other windlass or capstan.

These inventions, in addition to their superiority over the old windlass, capstan, &c., have the recommendation of greater economy, as they can be supplied at a less price, affording a very handsome profit, and consequently a large return to shareholders.

Models may be seen in operation, prospectuses obtained, with a list of the Directors, and every information given by the Secretary and Engineer, at the Company's offices, from 11 until 4. Early application for Shares is desirable, as the allotment will take place almost immediately.

AGENTS IN INDIA.

Calcutta Messrs. Robinson, Balfour, & Co.
Madras Messrs. Line & Co.
Bombay Messrs. Ritchie, Stuart, & Co.
Ceylon Messrs. Ackland, Boyd, & Co.

The following peculiar advantages are offered by this Company:—

1. Their policies cover the risk of living and voyaging over a far larger portion of the globe than do those issued by any other Company in existence. They allow the assured to reside in the Australasian and North American colonies, and at the Cape of Good Hope. They also allow to the assured for the whole of his one passage out and home to any of those colonies. For British India a very moderate extra premium is charged, and the premium is reduced to the English scale on the return of the assured life to England for permanent residence.
2. Premiums may be paid, and claims settled at Sydney, where there is a Board of Directors and Trustees; and at Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, where there are Agents.
3. A third of the premiums may remain unpaid for five years; nor is it necessary for the maintenance of the Assurances to pay up the premium at the end of that time, but the unpaid thirds may remain as a debt against the policy, if the interest be regularly paid upon them as the renewal premiums fall due.

ECONOMY IN OUTFITS.

VARICOSE VEINS.

SURGICAL ELASTIC STOCKINGS & KNEE-CAPS, of a new and ingenious fabric, for cases of VARICOSE and WRAKES, are introduced and extensively manufactured in every form by POPE and PLANTÉ, 4, WATERLOO PLACE, Pall-Mall.

This precious elastic yields an unvarying support and equal pressure, WITHOUT THE TROUBLE OF LACING or bandaging. Patronized by very eminent surgeons.

Instructions for measures on application, and the article sent by post.

S. W. SILVER and CO. CLOTHIERS, NAVAL, MILITARY, and GENERAL OUTFITTERS and CONTRACTORS, respectfully acquaint the public, that they have completed the alterations at their warehouses, 66 and 67, CORNHILL, which enables them to concentrate and exhibit all the requirements of an OUTFIT. Being the manufacturers (with experienced managers) of the chief and most expensive portions of OUTFITS, they are enabled to produce and render them at WHOLESALE PRICES; thus preventing MILITARY and NAVAL OFFICERS, CADETS, and PASSENGERS generally sacrificing the usual intermediate profit. LADIES' OUTFITS (which are under the management of Females) on similar terms.

SILVER and Co. having a correspondent in nearly every ENGLISH COLONY, their customers may at all times avail themselves of their assistance. SILVER and Co. pack and ship their customers' outfits, clear and warehouse their baggage homewards, without receiving a commission for such business. Moreover, they do not allow the too usual commission to persons who introduce customers to them, that purchasers may derive every advantage. For example, individuals who are about to leave for India are generally inundated with applications and lists from Outfitters, who obtain the name and address of the party going abroad from persons to whom they pay (if they supply the outfit) so large a commission for the information, as to materially increase the amount of the outfit. Now, SILVER and Co. never forward a list of necessities to any one, unless directed to do so by the party (or friend) going abroad. Thus SILVER and Co.'s prices are not burthened with commission, because all recommendations to apply to them are pure and disinterested.

The OUTFITTING WHOLESALE and RETAIL CLOTHING DEPARTMENTS, &c., are at 66 and 67, CORNHILL, and at LIVERPOOL. THE SHIRT DEPARTMENT for home use is at No. 10, CORNHILL. THE WORKSHOPS for Clothing, at 43, Bishopsgate-street Within; for SHIRTS and CABIN FURNITURE, at 23 and 24, Nassau-place, Commercial-road; and for SHIRTS, STAYS, BRACES, &c., at LANDPORT, near PORTSMOUTH.

Leadenhall-street (opposite the East-India House).

W. M. BOYCE and CO. in returning thanks to their friends and supporters for the liberal patronage already bestowed on them, beg to intimate that their offices are now established at No. 127, Leadenhall-street.

W. M. BOYCE and Co. continue to forward supplies and goods of every description to Messes, Families, and Individuals, on the most moderate terms, by the Cape or Overland. Passages to the Three Presidencies, or China, by sailing vessels, via the Cape, or by steam, via the Red Sea, negotiated on the most favourable terms.

PAY and PENSIONS drawn and remitted to any part of Great Britain or the Continent. Luggage cleared and warehoused, and Parcels and Letters forwarded Overland to India.

In order to render their agency as efficient as possible, W. M. B. and Co. would call particular attention to the following points, which they consider of great importance, not only to their friends, but to the public generally.

It frequently occurs that gentlemen residing in India are compelled to send their wives and children home, and remain in India themselves. Circumstances often compel ladies and children to land in England without any one to receive and relieve them from the troubles and annoyances attendant on disembarkation, after a long and fatiguing voyage, and the clearing of their luggage through the Custom-house. In order to meet these cases, one of the Firm is prepared to attend any so situated, personally, and to escort them to their friends. Parties wishing to avail themselves of this accommodation should communicate their intention, in writing, by the Overland Mail, in sufficient time to admit of proper arrangements being made for their reception. Parents in India wishing to send their children to England for education, and unable to accompany them, may avail themselves of W. M. B. and Co.'s agency, who will undertake to receive them, place them at school, and act as guardians, if necessary. If requisite, reference can be given to parties who have already availed themselves of this arrangement. Inconvenience is often felt, and great expense incurred, in consequence of families arriving from India without having previously decided upon a place of residence. This may be obviated by timely application to BOYCE and CO., who are prepared to engage permanent or temporary residences for all parties arriving from India.

A residence of upwards of twenty years in India, the greater portion of which was passed in the East India Company's naval service, renders the head of the Firm peculiarly fitted for the business which is now sought, and which is merely reverted to here as a guarantee that the most scrupulous attention to the interests and wants of their supporters will be attended with the advantage of being able to impart, from actual experience, any information which may be required relative to India.

THRESHER'S INDIA GAUZE WAISTCOATS.

THESE really important articles of under clothing, although manufactured expressly for India, are equally valuable in all tropical climates, and are strongly recommended by all medical men as the most effectual preventative of the many diseases arising from check of perspiration to which the residents in warm climates are so particularly liable. This manufacture possesses all the advantages, without the inconvenience, of flannel waistcoats; the texture is light, soft, and delicate, perfectly free from all irritating or disagreeable qualities, and a very superior absorbent, consequently the very best description of under-waistcoat that can be worn in India, or in any warm climate. The valuable qualities of THRESHER'S INDIA GAUZE WAISTCOATS are well known, and have been long tested in India, and the very general approval and consequent demand for them has given rise to many inferior imitations, which, with a view to deceive, have been variously marked India Gauze, Oriental Gauze, Gauze Vigonia, &c. Messrs. THRESHER and GLENNY, therefore, beg most particularly to impress upon all parties the necessity of applying direct to their establishment, 152, STRAND, LONDON, for any they may require, and also most especially to caution the public against purchasing any article of the kind except those which are marked THRESHER'S INDIA GAUZE, as none others can be depended upon.

These waistcoats are made both for ladies and gentlemen, and Messrs. Thresher and Glenny undertake to forward them in dozens or half-dozen to every part of England and the principal towns of Ireland and Scotland, carriage free, at the following prices:—Gentlemen's, 78s. per dozen, and Ladies', 60s. per dozen; and also to pack and forward them, free of expense, to any agent in India, by the overland route, at the following additional rates, via 12s. per dozen to Calcutta, Madras, and Ceylon, and 18s. per dozen to Bombay.

SUMMARY & REVIEW OF EASTERN NEWS.

THE commercial advices from India are, on the whole, as satisfactory as could be looked for, reference being had to the recent convulsions. "Trade," says the Hurkaru, "continues to improve, and our commercial prospects are beginning to be somewhat more cheerful than they have been of late." Another Union Bank meeting had taken place, an account of which will be found in a subsequent part of our publication.

Sir THOMAS TURTON had resigned the office of Ecclesiastical Registrar to the Supreme Court of Calcutta. According to the Hurkaru, he "is believed to have suffered severely by the recent commercial disasters; and it is rumoured that an investigation of his accounts, now in progress, is likely to disclose a very serious deficiency." If the following, which we find in the Bombay Times, be accurate, or at all approaching accuracy, the deficiency is "very serious" indeed.

"The Ecclesiastical Registrar and his assistant, not content with their emoluments, have embarked in trade with the money entrusted to their care, and lost very severely by the Union Bank. The defalcations are said to exceed 150,000*l*. When directed by the Chief Justice to produce their books, and exhibit the Government paper in which the money was said to be invested, paper was borrowed from a native merchant, and exhibited as that belonging to the Registrar. It was immediately lodged by Sir Lawrence Peel in the Treasury, when the fact just stated became known, by the party from whom it was borrowed making application for his own. The system of borrowing paper from the Union Bank for the purpose of deceit, seems to have been a regular branch of business."

Regular though it were, it was surely not a very creditable one.

THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL has made his début as a patron of education, having presided at the general distribution of prizes to the government schools.

Sir JOHN H. LITTLE has arrived at Calcutta and taken his seat in Council.

At MADRAS the departure of the late GOVERNOR, and the arrival of the new COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF, seem to be the most important incidents which have occurred.

The progress of the GOVERNOR of BOMBAY seems to have been marked with great rapidity. A few particulars, some more important, some of a lighter description, will be found in our selections.

ARRIVAL OF MAILS.

The Bentinet with the mails left Calcutta March 8, Saugor 10, Madras 15, Point-de-Galle 18, Aden 29, and arrived at Suez April 6. A mail left Hong-Kong by the Lady Mary Wood on February 28, making Singapore March 7, Penang 9, and reaching Point-de-Galle March 15. The Sesostis with a mail left Bombay on the 15th ult. and arrived at Aden on the 24th. The three mails thus brought were forwarded to Alexandria, at which place they arrived on the 9th inst. and were put on board the Caire (French steamer), which reached Malta on the 14th, on which day the Oberon, with the Marseilles portion, left, arriving at her destination on the 18th. The Hindostan, with the remainder, may be expected at Southampton on or about the 28th inst.

The Lady Mary Wood, with the London mail of December 24, arrived at Hong-Kong February 28.

The Haddington, with the London mail of January 24, reached Calcutta March 6.

The Atalanta, with the London mail of Feb. 7, reached Bombay March 7.

The Ardent, with the London mail of April 7, reached Malta on the 13th inst. at 8 P.M. (in 6 days 15 minutes from London).

DEPARTURE OF MAILS.

A mail for Ceylon, Madras, Calcutta, the Straits, and China, vid Marseilles, will leave London this evening.

The next mail for Bombay, vid Southampton, will be despatched on the morning of Wednesday, May 3. Letters should be posted in London on the previous evening, or, if marked vid Marseilles, on the evening of Monday, May 8.

The following notice has been issued from the General Post-office:—

General Post-office, March, 1848.

Her Majesty's Government having decided to discontinue the packet between Southampton and Alexandria, which now leaves the former port on the 3rd of each month, letters intended to be sent to India, &c. vid Southampton, can only be forwarded, after the despatch of the packet of the 3rd of May next, once in each month; namely, by the packet which sails from Southampton on the 20th of every month.

The mails, however, for India, &c. vid Marseilles, which leave

The intelligence from the PUNJAB is altogether unimportant.

The Delhi Gazette of 8th March furnishes some information as to the movements of YAR MAHOMED KHAN.

"The Kabul news last received extends to the 15th of February. The announcement of the expedition of Yar Mahomed Khan into Toorkistan is confirmed by the first of our letters, he being encamped, with a considerable force, at Shibburghan. The chiefs of Khoondooz, Koolloom, Bulkh, &c. had combined to oppose his advance, but with very little chance of success, as they had no efficient artillery. Sixty loads of silk had arrived at Kabul from Bokhara. The quantity of snow in the passes is said to have been as great as that which fell in the season of 1841-42. Sirdar Haider Khan had attacked and destroyed one or two detached forts of Mahomed Shah Khan, but was unable to prosecute his operations on account of the extreme severity of the winter, even in the comparatively mild climate of Lumphah; and subsequently because he was desired by his father to discontinue them. On receipt of these instructions, he quitted the Lumphah valley and encamped at Tutting, the castle of Nawab Jubber Khan. The second letter informs us that the King of Bokhara, having remonstrated with Yar Mahomed as to his invasion of Toorkistan, the chief of Herat replied that his only object was the punishment of the plundering Allemanni, who carried his subjects off into slavery, and that if necessary he would even cross the Oxus to effect that object. This is good on the part of one who lived at one time by the traffic in slaves."

A late number of the Mofussilite gives the following from Oude:—

"We learn from 'our correspondent in Oude,' that Man Singh, the late Amil of the Sultanpore district in that territory, still continues in rebellion against his sovereign the King of Oude, and has moreover persuaded the Amerati Rajah to make common cause with him. Their combined force amounts, it is said, to about 12,000 men. The Chakildar, Wajid Ali Khan, has proceeded against them, and being supported by the King's regular troops, under the command of Major Bunbury, there is every hope of the rebels being speedily subdued. The cause of the rebellion is understood to be the dismissal of Man Singh and Rugburdial Singh, his brother, from their late governments, on account of the embezzlement on their part of some fifteen lacs of rupees of the revenue, the collection of which was entrusted to them. A great part of the money thus embezzled is supposed to have been invested in the purchase of landed property in the Company's territories. Facts like the above require no comment; none at least from us. It cannot fail to strike the most inconsiderate that the state of that government which allows an officer to misappropriate a sum of fifteen lacs of rupees (not underhandedly, but openly), and afterwards maintain a force of some 12,000 men in arms against it, must be bad enough to call urgently for correction. It would seem that his majesty of Oude has not escaped any more than the rest of the world from being 'done' during this time of general misfortune. We do not see why he should not have the privilege (if he does not possess it already) of suing in the Company's courts for the recovery of his rightful claims against the dismissed Amils, who in the present instance appear to be possessed of considerable property within the limits of the Company's jurisdiction."

From GWALIOR, not long since an object of great interest, the Delhi Gazette, March 4, has a piece of intelligence relating to the health of an important personage at that place, illustrative of the ordinary state of affairs at Eastern courts:—

"We learn by letters from Gwalior that the octogenarian minister, Ram Rao Phalkea, was taken so seriously ill on the night of the 29th of February, that his life was despaired of. On the following day, however, he was pronounced out of danger, and it is well it was so, as his death at this time would probably have been attributed by his friends to the machinations of the Baeza Bhaee, now at Gwalior, whose feelings of enmity for Ram Rao are no secret. Brigadier Parsons returned to Scindiah's capital on the 1st of March from his tour of inspection."

We close our periodical budget with an extract from the Hurkaru, relating to the condition of merchants engaged in trade in the Burmese dominions, which we are inclined to think not unworthy of attention:—

"From Maulmain complaints are frequent of the ill-treatment by the Burmese officials of British subjects residing at Rangoon; and the propriety and security of posting a Resident of the court of Ava are insisted upon, apparently with good reason."

BENGAL.

THE UNION BANK.

The adjourned meeting of proprietors of the Union Bank, convened under the 9th resolution of the last meeting, took place at two o'clock in the afternoon, on Saturday, Feb. 26, Mr. T. C. Morton in the chair.

The chairman submitted to the meeting the report of the executive committee, of which he himself is president. The following is a copy of the document:—

"REPORT OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE UNION BANK IN LIQUIDATION. CALCUTTA, 26th FEBRUARY, 1848.

"The committee regret to state that although they have devoted themselves daily to the liquidation of the bank's affairs, but little progress has been hitherto made. The amount received from contributions on the pro ratâ call up to the present date is only Co.'s Rs. 1,01,000, and the amount received on the loan call Co.'s Rs. 1,15,000. During the last fortnight very small sums have been collected on either of these accounts, and the committee can only attribute the backwardness of shareholders in this respect to a prevalent impression, but a most mistaken one, that if liability on the post-bills can be resisted, there will be little necessity for the contributions. The committee are of opinion, that in any event the full amount of contribution will be required, and that the only result of excluding the post-bills from the bank's liabilities will be the greatly improved prospect of repaying the whole contributions with interest, and leaving an ultimate surplus divisible amongst shareholders. The committee therefore earnestly entreat the proprietors, one and all, to make immediate arrangements for meeting the call to the best of their respective abilities, as the only mode of saving from sacrifice the bank's property and their own.

"The committee have now to say a few words on the subject of the documents known as post-bills. At the date of the last meeting, the president and some of the members of the committee had not even seen one of these documents; and the bank's liabilities seem to have been taken for granted on all hands. Shortly after that date, notwithstanding the resolutions passed unanimously at the creditors' meeting, the executive committee received intimation from certain post-bills holders who had not attended that meeting, that they declined to acquiesce in those resolutions. The actions commenced by those parties were accordingly proceeded with, and other actions were instituted. This led the president of the executive committee to look into the question of the strict legality of the claims, and gave doubts upon the subject immediately suggested themselves. At the same time communications were received from shareholders of the bank protesting against liability on these documents. The following is an extract from one of them.

"Not having been present at any meeting of shareholders, or having had any opportunity of expressing my sentiments, I trust I may be excused if I take occasion to remark that I think it an intolerable grievance that shareholders should be made liable for any of the bank debts that were not regularly incurred, or that cannot bear the scrutiny of the most rigid legal investigation. I can speak only from newspaper reports and hearsay, but if bank post-bills have been issued without the signatures of a sufficient number of directors, or if these documents are in themselves illegal, or if their legality admit of question, I for one protest against the payment of them, and not only do consider that common fairness to ourselves requires our refusal of the payment, but justice requires that men whose unprincipled recklessness has involved so many in ruin should be made to suffer from their own misdeeds. I think, too, that, creditors who suffer from having taken insufficient documents have no more right to complain than we have, since the wrong is done them by the same person."

"The committee therefore submitted the question to the bank's counsel, from whom they received a clear opinion that the bank was not liable. Under these circumstances, and with reference to the resolutions expressly prohibiting the committee from incurring any new liabilities, except in extinction of existing ones to an equal or greater amount, the committee considered that they had no alternative but to submit the question to legal investigation, and judicial decision. If the shareholders of the bank are not liable in law upon the post-bills, no recognition by the committee could make them liable; and with the view of trying the question fully and fairly, the solicitors of the bank communicated with the solicitors of the plaintiffs in the actions instituted, in order to bring one or more of the cases on for trial immediately. This application was however rejected, except under terms as to payment of costs to which the bank could not accede; and it was only about ten days ago that the holder of a due post-bill was found, ready and willing to try the question at once. The committee are in hopes that a judicial decision upon the question will be obtained by the middle of the ensuing month.

"Your committee on the 31st instant communicated the substance of the foregoing matters in a letter to the creditors' committee, who, they regret to state, have taken umbrage at the course which your committee have adopted. The creditors' committee consider that they ought to have been consulted upon the question of the post-bills; and notwithstanding the explanation offered on the subject, they have intimated their resolution to resign their committee-ship.* Your committee considered that the question was not one which required to be submitted to the creditors at all, being a matter in which your committee themselves had no discretionary power whatever. Your committee were and remain of opinion that it would have been worse than idle to have taken the opinion of the creditors' committee as to whether the question of liability ought to be raised or not when they actually possessed no power to bind any one in the matter except themselves.

"Your committee, in conjunction with the Indigo committee, have anxiously considered the question as to the best mode of providing for the carrying on for the present season of the factories in which the bank is interested. The lateness of the season and the general depression in the commercial world preclude the hope of immediate sales. Your committee have to state that arrangements have been in progress, and are now nearly complete, for the carrying on of all the factories which it is considered advisable to retain. These arrangements involve no greater outlay to the bank itself than about a lac and seventy thousand rupees.

"The committee hope now to have more time to devote to the examination and making up of the accounts of parties indebted to the bank, and to the taking of the necessary steps for their adjustment.

"The establishment of the bank has been reduced to the following:—

"Secretary, accountant, assistant accountants, treasurer and assistants, and nine native writers.

"The former purchaser of the bank premises having declined to complete his purchase, and rested his refusal upon a flaw in the title (which, though of no real importance, your committee were advised he might legally insist upon), the premises were advertised for resale, and a purchaser has been found for Rs. 60,000, of which 40,000 are to be paid down in cash, and the remainder within six months, bearing 8 per cent. interest.

"Your committee much regret that it is not possible to declare a dividend on 1st March, as originally intended, and they consider that, until the decision of the court has been given as respects the liability of the shareholders of the bank for post-bills, it would be ill-judged to make a dividend to other claimants, especially while the sum collected in contributions is so much smaller than had been looked for. It is hoped, however, that, by the end of next month, a dividend will be declared, and it will, of course, rest on the expected decision of the court whether such dividend shall apply to the claims of holders of post-bills, in common with other claimants of the bank.

"The committee suggest that this meeting be adjourned 'till the last Saturday in March, 25th prox.'

"Your committee in conclusion would again urge on all shareholders the vital necessity which exists that a combined effort be made to carry out on their part the general spirit of the original resolutions, and thus to insure as far as possible the forbearance of creditors, for the protection of such shareholders as have responded to the call to the best of their ability. In every point of view it is for the interest of substantial shareholders to come forward promptly with their aid, for it is certain that stringent measures will be adopted by the holders of post-bills, in the event of success in their actions; and unless the committee are in a position to satisfy such creditors, that every shareholder will be in peril; while, on the other hand, if the court decide that no such liability exists, there cannot be any risk of ultimate loss to parties holding debentures, and every prospect of early return with interest of such sums as are now paid to the loan.

"T. C. MORTON,
"MANACKJEE RUSTOMJEE,
"H. BURKINYOUNG,
"JAMES STUART,
"GEO. SHEARWOOD."

* The following from the Englishman, of March 3, will shew that subsequently a different course was resolved on:—

"There was a meeting of the creditors of the Union Bank yesterday afternoon in the Chamber of Commerce. The advertisement was addressed to the creditors generally, but few except 'posters' attended. Little passed, but it is clear that the non-liability of the bank for its post-bills is not the received opinion. This however will be decided by the highest legal tribunal in the country about the 10th instant. The following resolution, proposed by

Upon concluding the perusal of this document, the chairman said it had been found utterly impossible to give the accounts in detail. The executive committee had drawn up such a figured statement as the limited nature of the transactions hitherto had enabled them to prepare, and it was now open to the inspection of any shareholder that desired to examine it. It exhibited no thing more than a few realizations of claims held by the bank; a certain amount obtained as payments upon the call for a pro rata contribution, and another collected in the shape of the proposed loan, both which realizations had been mentioned in the report, and which it might be seen were considerably smaller than what it had been expected the committee would have been able to realize. On the other hand, there had been very few payments made, except very small sums disbursed for the establishment of the bank, and about Rs. 1,000, given upon Union Bank notes and Bank post bills.

Mr. Longueville Clarke proposed that the report be received. The motion was seconded by Mr. J. Sutherland, and after some discussion, carried without dissent.

The chairman now read the report of the special committee appointed to investigate into the circumstances under which the the Union Bank post bills had been issued out of the institution.

Mr. Grant offered a reply to the report. A long and somewhat stormy discussion ensued. Ultimately, Mr. J. Sutherland moved, and Mr. Mollon seconded, the following resolution:—"That the report of the post bill committee be referred to the executive committee, and that they be requested to communicate upon the subject with Mr. W. P. Grant, and that the result be stated at the next month's meeting;" which was carried without a dissentient. After another disorderly conversation—

Mr. Clarke said the chairman would now read to the meeting the report he had framed upon the disposal of the moneys of the Commercial Bank of Bombay by the Union Bank. He had stated already, that he had taken no part in the preparation of the report which had just been disposed of, although he had been named upon the committee which had drawn it up; but he had devoted himself to the document that was now about to be produced, and he held himself alone responsible for the statements it contained. He had purposely abstained in it from offering any observations, or drawing any conclusions. He had thought that he would best perform the duty cast upon him, by simply collecting facts, dates, and figures, leaving it to the meeting to form its own opinion upon them.

The Chairman here read the report of Mr. Clarke. As it introduced the name of Mr. Scott, of Hickey, Bailey and Co., in connection with the dealings of the Union Bank in this particular transaction, it had been submitted to that gentleman for perusal, that he might prepare himself for any explanation he might desire to offer. Mr. Scott did make observations upon certain passages of the report, and we annex both documents:—

MR. CLARKE'S REPORT.

"Mr. W. H. Abbott, the secretary of the Calcutta Union Bank received a set of letters from Mr. T. E. Tanner, the acting manager of the Commercial Bank of Bombay, dated the 22nd, 23rd, and 24th of November, enclosing bills for 40,000*l.*, drawn by that establishment on the Joint Stock Bank of London. The directions given were, that the Union Bank should dispose of these bills at a rate not exceeding 1*s.* 10*d.*, the proceeds to be invested in Bank of Bengal post bills of ten and fifteen thousand rupees each, at 20 days' date, which were to be remitted to the Bombay Bank. A copy of the letter of instructions is annexed.

"2. Mr. W. P. Grant, the then vice-president of the Union Bank, has stated, at a meeting of the proprietors, that he was present when one of the set of letters was received by Mr. Abbott, and that he saw the bills, but that he had not any knowledge whatever of the proceedings which will be hereafter detailed until after the loss had been incurred. Mr. Abbot has stated that he certainly communicated the misappropriation to two of the directors, namely, Mr. W. P. Grant and Mr. John Storm, the then president and vice-president, soon after the 13th of December, but at what particular stage he does not recollect. Mr. Grant and Mr. Storm state, that they were not made acquainted with the matter until after the mischief was done. It would also appear that neither of them communicated the circumstances to any of their Co. directors. On the 6th of January, upwards of three weeks afterwards, a gentleman asked Mr. Shearwood, one of the directors, whether such a transaction had taken place, which he positively denied, be-

Mr. C. Hogg and seconded by Mr. Ritchie, was put, and carried unanimously:—That Messrs. Richards, Kelsall, Allan, Cowie, and Ramgopal Ghose be requested to resume the functions of creditors' committee and to communicate in their discretion with the executive committee of the Union Bank."

believing that had it occurred, it must have come to his knowledge, as he had attended every meeting of the directors since his election in August last. In consequence of further information he went to the bank the next day, the 7th, where he ascertained that the statement was true; Mr. Shearwood immediately communicates the facts to Sir Thomas Turton another director, and who was equally ignorant of what had taken place. These gentlemen called a meeting of the directors that afternoon. On the next day, the 8th, there was a special meeting of the shareholders, previous to which, Mr. Shearwood communicated all the circumstances to Mr. Longueville Clarke, whose name was at the head of the requisition convening the special meeting, for the purpose of the matter being publicly brought forward, and which was accordingly done by Mr. Clarke. It is unnecessary to trace the matter further as what as since taken place has been published in all the newspapers.

"3. By a letter dated the 2nd of December, Mr. Abbott, as secretary of the bank, acknowledged the receipt of Mr. Tanner's letters, and promised to comply with his instructions.

"4. Messrs. Hickey, Bailey, and Co. were the brokers of the Union Bank, and Mr. Alexander Scott, one of their partners, appears to have transacted for his firm all the bank's business, and it was to him that Mr. Abbott delivered the bills for 40,000*l.*, and also Mr. Tanner's letter of instruction, directing him to carry them into effect by selling the bills on England and purchasing Bank of Bengal post bills.

"5. Mr. Scott sold 20,000*l.* of these London bills to Mr. J. G. Gollan, as agent of the North Western Bank of India, and the other 20,000*l.* to Mr. J. B. G. Dallas, as agent of the Cawnpore Bank, the proceeds of the whole 40,000*l.* were Co.'s Rs. 4,31,460-10-9, Rs. 30,000 were paid by the purchasers of the London bills in cash (or Bank notes) and the remaining 4,00,460-10-9 was paid by checks drawn on the Bank of Bengal by Mr. Gollan or Mr. Dallas, in favour of Mr. Abbott as secretary of the Union Bank, or to his order. It is stated by Messrs. Gollan and Dallas, that being aware of the nature of the transactions, they purposely drew the checks in Mr. Abbott's favour, as a matter of precaution. The receipts given by Mr. Scott to Mr. Gollan and Mr. Dallas are merely signed Hickey, Bailey, and Co., as if they were sellers of the bills, no notice being taken of their acting as brokers, nor of the Union Bank, nor Mr. Abbott.

"6. Company's Rupees 76,000 were paid by Mr. Scott into the Union Bank, and on the 4th of December Mr. Abbott wrote to Mr. Charles Hogg for three Bengal Bank Post Bills of Co.'s Rs. 10,000 each, and three of Rs. 15,000 in duplicate, making a total of Co.'s Rs. 75,000; these were received, and on the same day remitted to Mr. Tanner, in a letter from Mr. Abbott. This left a balance of Co.'s Rs. 1,000 in the Union Bank, which could not then be sent, as the bills were to be remitted in sums of ten and fifteen thousand.

"7. A further sum of Co.'s Rs. 15,000 having been paid by Mr. Scott into the Union Bank, Mr. Abbott again wrote on the 11th of December to Mr. C. Hogg for a Bengal Bank post bill of Co.'s Rs. 15,000, in duplicate, and this was remitted also by letter, on the 13th of December, to Mr. Tanner. This sum, with the former remittance of Co.'s Rs. 75,000, making a total of Co.'s Rs. 90,000, is the whole which has been sent to the Bombay Bank, out of the Co.'s Rs. 431,460-10-9 the proceeds of the bills on London.

"8. The Co.'s Rs. 30,000 which Mr. Scott had received in cash or Bank notes (paragraph 5) was paid by him into the Union Bank, and have not been remitted to the Bombay Bank. The sum was not in any way ear-marked, but mixed up with, and treated, as part of their own assets. From the foregoing it will appear, that Messrs. Hickey, Bailey and Co., are not answerable for the two sums of Co.'s Rs. 90,000, remitted to Bombay, and Rs. 31,000 which has been lost in the Union Bank, making together Co.'s Rs. 121,000. The remainder Company's Rupees 310,460-10-9 is now to be accounted for.

"9. On the 15th of December, Mr. Scott gave a written order, in the name of his firm, addressed to the Union Bank, directing them to debit Hickey, Bailey, and Co.'s suspense account with one lack of rupees, which was to be credited to the account of the Bombay Commercial Bank. On the 17th of December Mr. Scott filled up one of Union Bank's regular engraved checks for Co.'s Rs. 310,460-10-9, making it payable to the secretary of the Union Bank on account of the Bombay Bank, and also directed it to be carried to the suspense account of Hickey, Bailey, and Co. To prevent mistakes, copies of these checks or orders are annexed. These two sums make the Rs. 310,460-10-9 remaining in Hickey, Bailey, and Co.'s hands, which with the former sum of Rs. 121,000 paid by them into the Union Bank, completes the whole amount of Co.'s Rs. 431,460-10-9, the proceeds of the Bombay Bank bills on London. On both of the orders or checks drawn by Mr. Scott, Mr. Abbott has directed payment.

"10. The course therefore adopted by Mr. Scott for paying the Co.'s Rs. 3,10,460-10-9, which amount in cash he had actually received, was by directing his firm to be debited with the amount in their suspense account, and that when he knew that the money was the property of the Bombay Bank, and had seen their instructions in writing for its application, and perhaps at that very moment had them in his possession, for Mr. Abbott has stated that he gave the letter to him with the bills.

"11. It was stated at a meeting of the shareholders that at this time Hickey, Bailey, and Co., were largely indebted to the bank. This was immediately denied by Mr. Scott. Now, on the 11th of December, Mr. Abbott, by order of the directors, addressed a letter to Hickey, Bailey, and Co. expressing their great dissatisfaction at Hickey, Bailey, and Co.'s suspense account, exhibiting a balance due by them, on the 11th of December, of Rs. 4,82,069-0-3, and Mr. Bonnaud, the accountant of the Union Bank, states, that in his opinion, Hickey, Bailey, and Co. were then, and still are, largely indebted to the bank. A copy of Mr. Abbott's letter of the 11th is annexed.

"12. The committee having collected and arranged the foregoing statement of facts, dates, and amounts, submit them to the consideration of the shareholders, and purposely abstain from making any comment."

MR. J. S. B. SCOTT'S EXPLANATIONS UPON MR. C.'S REPORT.

"Para. 1. This paragraph is incorrect in every way, as far as I can state.

"Para. 2. Mr. Grant, Mr. Storm, Mr. Abbot, Mr. Shearwood, and others named, can speak to these facts better than I can.

"Para. 3. I have no doubt to be correct.

"Para. 4. Messrs. Hickey, Bailey, and Co. were the brokers of the bank. I, J. W. B. Scott, then partner of Hickey, Bailey, and Co., went into the bank parlour (where Mr. Abbott was sitting instead of at his usual desk), accompanied by Mr. Wm. P. Grant, upon matters of which I have no recollection. At the moment we were seated, Mr. Abbott threw across the table a letter containing bills on the Joint Stock Bank of London, stating that it was a letter from the Commercial Bank of Bombay. I opened it, glanced at the instructions, and learned, more from Mr. Abbott than from the letter itself (which was not in my hands half a minute), that the bills were not to be sold at a worse rate than 1-10*l.*; and that the proceeds were to be remitted in Bank of Bengal post-bills. But I was not aware till now that the post-bills were to be at 20 days' date, and in sets of Rs. 10,000 and 15,000. Mr. Abbott did not deliver to me possession of the bills for 40,000*l.*, nor Mr. Turner's letter; nor did he instruct me to purchase Bank of Bengal post-bills; all he did do on this occasion was to pass over the letter to me, mentioning verbally in doing so the instructions contained in it, and asking me to ascertain if the bills could be sold.

"Para. 5. Mr. Scott, on the part of Hickey, Bailey, and Co., sold the 40,000*l.* to Mr. R. J. R. Campbell, managing director in Calcutta of the North-West and Cawnpore banks, who afterwards declared that 20,000*l.* were for North-Western Bank, and 20,000*l.* were for the Cawnpore Bank. "Mr. Campbell was placed in communication with the secretary of the Union Bank, and was aware of the transaction, and wrote to Mr. Abbott stating that he would pay the moneys into the bank for the bills. Messrs. Gollan's and Dallas's checks were not made payable to Hickey, Bailey, and Co.; but were checks in favour of H. W. Abbott, Esq., as secretary of the bank, and were made so purposely to shew they were the proceeds of the bills on England.

"Para. 9. I did sign, at the request of the officers of the bank, a written order dated the 15th of December, for one lac of rupees, to transfer that amount to the credit of the Commercial Bank account, and to debit of Hickey, Bailey, and Co.'s suspense account; and I did further sign a check dated 17th December, for Co.'s Rs. 2,10,460-10-8, in consequence of payment having been carried to the credit of my own account and that of Hickey, Bailey, and Co., instead of to the credit of the Commercial Bank.

"The occasion of these transfers was in consequence of the moneys paid in by the two banks through me having been spent by the officers of the bank for the current demands against it, and they did not wish the accounts to appear at the credit until the money was remitted. At first the sums paid in were placed direct to the credit of the Commercial Bank, and further sums were kept by the officers of the bank in abeyance for some days; and I found out afterwards that two sums amounting together to Co.'s Rs. 90,730-5-4, paid by Gollan's and Dallas's check in favour of H. W. Abbott, Esq., were actually passed to the credit of the Commercial Bank account, and transferred from that of Hickey, Bailey, and Co.'s suspense, without order or check; and in consequence of this I immediately had the account adjusted.

"Para. 10. This paragraph is answered by my remarks to No. 9. I knew perfectly well that the money was the property of the Bombay Commercial Bank, and as such the money was paid into the Union Bank; but it is absurd to suppose that I was to do all the duties of the Union Bank. Mr. Abbott is in error in stating that he delivered the letter and bills to me. The letter never was in my possession, and the bills were delivered through my firm when called for by the purchasers.

"Para. 11. It was stated at a meeting of the shareholders that at this time Hickey, Bailey, and Co. were largely indebted to the bank, which I distinctly denied, and now deny. The letter addressed to Hickey, Bailey, and Co., on the 11th December, was done through mistake, that arose from the bank keeping two accounts for my firm—namely, a "suspense of" and a "Union Bank post-bill account." As the bank was largely indebted to my firm, I immediately requested the directors to meet me, which they did on the 12th, and I requested the accountant and Mr. Jones to produce the required accounts, which at once explained the whole matter; and the directors expressed their regret that they should have troubled me in the matter; and also that I had their thanks for my exertions, instead of their censure. On the 11th December, the Union Bank post-bill account exhibited a sum against Hickey, Bailey, and Co.; but on the other hand, the "suspense" account on the same day was credited some nine lacs of rupees. To square the post-bill account, a check was given on the 7th December for four lacs upon the suspense account of the balance then at debit, after crediting the said four lacs being due to Hickey, Bailey, and Co., for commissions paid to various parties on account of the bank.

"Para. 12. My firm will be largely indebted to the Union Bank for dishonoured bills on London, for balance of purchase-money of property purchased from it, and also for liabilities for Messrs. Cockerell and Co., on notes and post-bills, but not so on account of its suspense account and the account for the post-bills on account of the bank. I acted in the capacity of broker to the bank. I was bound to receive my orders from the secretary, and from no one else. To him alone was I amenable, and to him did I forward the note of negotiation of the 40,000/., and to him were the moneys subsequently paid. I have nothing to do with the internal management of the bank in regard to their books, letters, accounts, or any thing else; and whatever the state of the firm of Hickey, Bailey, and Co.'s account may at that time have been, whether in debit or in credit, is not and cannot now be matter of consideration. That is an affair entirely apart, and I am willing that these accounts be submitted to the strictest investigation. My present duty is to prove that the moneys arising from the 40,000/., were paid into the bank by me; and with that payment my responsibility in this transaction ended, and that of the secretary commenced."

The reading of these documents was succeeded by a renewal of the interchange of violent and contradictory observations. Finally, the following resolutions were agreed to:—

"3rd. That the report on the transaction with the Commercial Bank of Bombay be received, and that Mr. Scott's explanation be appended to the report. Moved by Mr. Sutherland, seconded by Major Sewell, and carried unanimously.

"4th. Proposed by Mr. Molloy, and seconded by Mr. Clarke, that Mr. H. M. Elliott be requested to act as a member of the executive committee, and that with this view a communication be made to Government to obtain their sanction. Carried unanimously."

The above was owing to the resignation of Mr. James Stuart.

"5th. Moved by Mr. Sutherland, and seconded by Major Sewell, that this meeting be adjourned to the 25th day of March next. Carried unanimously."

The meeting then broke up, with an unanimous vote of thanks to the chair.—Abridged from the Hurkaru.

MISCELLANEOUS.

LOCAL.

MESSRS. SMITH, COWELL, AND CO.—There was a meeting of the creditors of Messrs. Smith, Cowell, and Co. on Thursday. The firm exhibits a steady and profitable business, and it is the unanimous wish of the creditors that it shall be continued.—Englishman, Feb. 19.

ESTATE OF CHAPLAINS—The question as to the estates of chaplains being dealt with in the same manner as those of commissioned officers, subject to the Articles of War, has been decided against the local military authorities by the Judge Advocate General.—Delhi Gaz., Feb. 19.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE ASSIGNEES OF THE LAPSED FIRMS—Many of our readers, and particularly those at a distance, will not think the space unprofitably occupied if we occasionally give such details of the proceedings of the assignees of the lapsed firms as may come within our reach.

Messrs. Cockerell.—First, and perhaps the most important, is the estate of Cockerell and Co., Mr. C. J. Richards and Mr. H. Cowie being assignees. During the preceding month of January there has been realised Rs. 1,32,964, against which are disbursements in the same period Rs. 82,339.

Messrs. Hughesdon.—The estate of Hughesdon, Brothers, is of minor importance; the assignees are Mr. C. J. Richards and Mr. Kelsall. Here, too, some progress has been made. The amount realised during January, is Rs. 20,186, the disbursements are Rs. 4,035.

Messrs. Gilmore.—Mr. Macpherson and Mr. Richards are assignees to the old firm of Gilmore and Co. This charge has been handed over to them with accounts from April, 1872, and their statement extends to 31st January last. It appears the total amount received is Rs. 480,000. Of this there have been paid away in dividends, Rs. 150,000, or thereabouts. There are unclaimed dividends in the hands of the Accountant-General, Rs. 14,582. Expenses paid to release various properties, and for other purposes, Rs. 3,13,420.

The balance in the estate first mentioned, amounting to about Rs. 50,000, is in the Bank of Bengal; likewise that of the second, Rs. 17,000. In the estate of Gilmore and Co., Rs. 11,000 is invested in Government securities.—Englishman, Feb. 25.

EXTENSIVE SALE OF SHARES.—Messrs. Adam and Co. held an extensive sale of shares yesterday. The competition was not very brisk. Shares in the Family Endowment Fund brought Rs. 540 each, and in the Cargo Boat Association Rs. 195.—Ibid.

INSOLVENT MEMBERS OF THE BENGAL CLUB.—We understand that the resolution brought forward at a meeting of the members of the Bengal Club on Friday afternoon, that any member applying for the benefit of the Insolvent Act should thereby cease to belong to it until re-elected by ballot, was negatived by a majority of two. We have been informed, however, that, according to the rules, it has, on the requisition of more than the required number of members, been ordered to lie on the table for the full period of five weeks from the date of its being first advertised, that the Mofussil members may have the opportunity of voting upon it. We shall offer no opinion upon the proposed regulation, as we do not think it proper to make the affairs of the club a subject of newspaper discussion. We merely state the result of a proposal to adopt a rule duly advertised in this and other journals for the information of absent members. We may add, however, that such a rule as that proposed exists, as we are informed, in every club in London.—Hurkaru, Feb. 28.

INTRODUCTION OF PUNKAHS INTO BARRACKS.—Our Saturday evening's paper contained a General Order providing for the introduction of punkahs into the European barracks at the different stations on the plains in this presidency. Punkahs were put up in Fort William a long time since, but as no provision has hitherto been made for pulling them, they have been of little use. We find now, however, that not only are the troops in the plains to have punkahs, but there is to be a monthly allowance of Rs. 25 per company for pulling them. The punkahs, too, will not only be hung in the barrack rooms, but in "libraries, canteens, and main-guards." We are glad to see that there is so little niggardliness about this measure, and are pretty sure that Government will not lose by thus paying attention to the comfort of the soldiers. We believe the opinion of medical men is unanimous as to the good effects of an artificial circulation of air both by night and by day in this country; and we have no doubt but that the annual per centage of sickness will be diminished by the measure under consideration. We are glad to observe that Lord Dalhousie at the commencement of his administration has given such a proof of his regard for the welfare of the army. The "Punkah Order" may not be thought a very important one by the public in general; but there are some thousands of men, women, and children roasting on the plains of Bengal, who are likely to hold in high estimation both the order itself and the source from which it emanates.—Ibid.

HEALTH OF SIR H. SETON.—Sir Henry Seton is so far recovered from the attack of inflammation in his eyes as to be able to resume his seat in the court.—Friend of India, March 2.

CURIOUS FRAUD.—The Englishman, in his journal of Wednesday, gave an account of a singular fraud which has just been discovered in Calcutta. Fourteen chests were shipped on the Tomatin, said to be indigo, but which on examination was found to contain nothing but coal! The matter has been referred to the police office.—Ibid.

RESIGNATION OF SIR THOMAS TURTON.—Sir Thomas Turton, the registrar of the Supreme Court, resigned his appointment at the close of last week. One of our contemporaries states that the accounts of his office not having been brought to a close, a commission, consisting of the Advocate-General, Messrs. Macpherson, Higgins, and Smoult, has been appointed to wind them up.—Ibid.

APPOINTMENT OF MR. SANDES TO THE REGISTRARSHIP.—Mr. Maurice Fitzgerald Geoffrey Sandes, one of the advocates of the Supreme Court, having been appointed to the office of registrar of the court, vacant by the resignation of Sir Thomas Turton, was sworn in yesterday. Mr. Sandes has been appointed upon a consolidated salary, fixed at Co.'s Rs. 2,000 per month, in lieu of commissions.—Hurkaru, March 2.

ATTORNEY.—Mr. Robert Robertson was yesterday admitted an attorney in the Supreme Court.—Ibid., March, 3.

FIRE AT THE COURT OF REQUESTS.—On Thursday a fire broke out at the Court of Requests, which was fortunately put out before any material injury had been done. It was discovered in one of the rooms, occupied by the native assistants of the court, where a number of papers were kept. Several engines were on the spot in a short time, and water being available in the aqueduct adjoining Tank Square, contributed greatly to an early extinction of the fire. A number of papers was destroyed, and the beams forming the roof of the room in which the fire made its appearance were scorched. The whole building, but for the timely assistance afforded by the police, would probably have been consumed. The fire is supposed to have been occasioned by accident.—Ibid., March 4.

DEPARTURE OF THE MOOREHEDABAD NEWAB.—His Highness the Newab Nazim takes his departure from Calcutta this morning, in the state boat Sonamookes, which will be towed up by one of the government inland steamers, the Thames.—Ibid., March 7.

EARTHQUAKE.—About twenty-five minutes before six on the 20th ult. Calcutta was visited by an unusually smart shock of earthquake, accompanied by a loud rumbling noise. The direction of the shock seems to have been from E. N. E. to W. S. W., though accounts differ as to this. The same shock has been felt at Jessore, Hooghly, &c., and we shall probably hear that it has been very extensive.—Ibid.

SICKNESS.—We are sorry to hear that sickness has broken out in the Fort, several men having died of cholera.—Ibid.

MEETING OF THE LAUDABLE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—A meeting of the Indian Laudable and Mutual Assurance Society was held on the 28th ult. The report of the committee appointed to examine and report upon the accounts was read and approved, but the committee were censured for having published their appendix to the report, disclosing, as it did, the private affairs of individuals, until it had been submitted to the meeting to be called for receiving it.—Ibid.

FIRE.—The Englishman of the 1st inst. states, that a fire broke out in the arsenal in Fort William, on Monday night. It was put out before much damage was done.—Ibid.

FLOWER SHOW.—The Earl and Countess of Dalhousie visited the Flower Show, at the Town Hall, on the 2nd instant. The display of flowers of every sort were the best we have seen in Calcutta, and as it was known beforehand that the Governor-General and his lady would be present, the hall was filled with visitors at an early hour.—Ibid.

NATIVE ADDRESSES TO MR. CAMERON.—The Addresses of the native inhabitants of Calcutta and of the Hooghly district were presented to the Honourable Mr. Cameron, the President of the Council of Education, on Friday last.—Ibid.

A "SCHOOL" OF ELEPHANTS.—As the Haddington was passing Hooghly Point, on her way up the river, she suddenly came upon what was at first supposed to be a wreck, but which turned out to be a "school" of elephants! No less than nine of these animals were crossing the channel, each with a mahout on his back. They were all tied together, and were being towed or guided across by a boat.—Ibid., March 8.

Mr. H. B. HARRINGTON, of the civil service, has been admitted to a furlough of the present season.

MOFUSSIL.

BENARES.—Steam.—The steamer Mirzapore, belonging to the Ganges Steam Company, reached Mirzapore on the 16th inst., at 10½ a.m., after a splendid run from Calcutta, though she had put forth but half her ordinary power on the way up,—for one of the starboard boilers having been found to leak a little, she made use of the larboard boilers only!—Considering that during the month of February the river is always at its lowest ebb, and that during the present February it is usually low, this voyage of "the leviathan of the Ganges" has been a truly triumphant one.—Recorder, Feb. 18.

CANNON.—Robbery of Gunpowder from the Government Stores.—A letter from Cawnpore communicates intelligence of a most barefaced robbery of 100 barrels of gunpowder, having been committed in the magazine of that station. As a committee of inquiry has been ordered thoroughly to investigate the circumstances attending this severe loss of Government property, we shall not enter into the rumours of particulars that have reached us beyond repeating what is stated, on good authority, that Government carts and servants are said to have been employed in removing the stolen property to Bithor. We shall doubtless hear further details. Since the above was written we have received further information, from which we gather that the quantity of powder (all of the very best description) abstracted from the magazine, is nearly double the number of barrels stated above. A further discovery had taken place, and some was found in the Bazaar on the morning of the 13th. The military authorities are making the most strenuous exertions to effect an exposé.—Delhi Gazette, Feb. 16.

— Further Particulars.—The proceedings of the military court of inquiry appointed to investigate the magazine robbery at Cawnpore, have closed and been forwarded to the authorities, and Mr. Deputy Commissary McDonald has, pending further instructions, been placed under arrest. The whole of the powder is said to have been recovered.—Ibid., Feb. 23.

CHINSURAH.—Feb. 21.—Earthquake.—There were two smart shocks of an earthquake at this station on Sunday the 20th inst. The motion seemed to be east and west, and the two shocks, accompanied by a hollow rumbling noise, excited great alarm amongst the natives, who set up a shout of horror, and called upon their gods to protect them. The houses shook violently, and a wooden partition in the building I at present occupy made a clattering noise, and waved to and fro just as if a number of people were trying to shake it out of its place. These shocks occurred at about 23 or 24 minutes past 5 p.m. The air was still and the heat oppressive. The thermometer stood at 82.—Hurkara, Feb. 23.

GOALPARA.—Attack on a Magistrate.—We give prominent insertion to the following, which has been sent to us for publication:—"The Goalpara correspondent of the Bhaskur, in yesterday's issue, gives an account of rather a serious affair which befel the magistrate of that place. It appears that that functionary, on the 15th Maug (27th January), took up his head quarters on the topmost range of a hill or mountain called Poteemaree. The magistrate went some distance on a shooting journey, leaving fourteen sepoy in charge of the camp, when suddenly a body of the hill tribes, known as Geroses, made a sudden incursion, attacking and wounding the sepoy guard. Just as they were about retiring, the magistrate returned and attempted to intercept their retreat, and in the attempt shot three or four of the marauders; but his endeavours were effectually resisted, as the party made their escape, after severely assaulting the magistrate, whose left arm is described as broken. The magistrate immediately returned to the plains and adopted measures for the capture of those concerned in the late attack; and on the strength of large offers of reward, obtained the co-operation of some of the hill people themselves; but the result was unfavourable, as those who went on the expedition shared the fate of the sepoys." The "magistrate" of Goalpara here referred to, must, we suppose, be the sub-assistant commissioner, who, according to the last directory, is a Mr. W. S. Hudson.—Hurkara, March 1.

HOOCHLY, Feb. 21.—Earthquake.—The shock of an earthquake—the smartest I have ever felt in Bengal Proper—was experienced at this station yesterday evening, the 20th instant, at about half-past 5 o'clock. It appeared to me to pass from west to east, but I am not certain.—Weather—sultry for the season. Morning cloudy with slight fog—winds variable and light from E. to S.E. and in the evening from S.W. Though sharp, the shock could not have lasted more than 15 to 20 seconds; each undulation increasing in violence—walls slightly cracked in several places, chiefly in rooms having a S.W. aspect.—Ibid., Feb. 23.

RAJPOOTANA.—Miscellaneous Items.—The only items of intelligence we have from Rajpootana are to the effect that Brigadier Lloyd had reached Nusseerabad on the 16th, and that the bishop of Bombay had quitted that station on the 14th, after a week's stay. The trial of Doongur Singh had not commenced. "Weather cloudy, but only one slight shower of rain has fallen this season."—Dakhi Gazette, Feb. 23.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

ABSENTEE REGULATIONS.

Fort William, March 3, 1848.—The following resolutions published in the financial department are promulgated for the information of the army:—

Financial Department, No. 20, dated Nov. 12, 1847.—Resolution.—The President in Council resolves that, in accordance with the spirit of the intention of the Hon. the Court of Directors, the construction* of section xi. of the absentee regulations, which determines that leave of absence on private affairs without loss of allowances, shall be granted at the pleasure of government, and when it is attended with no inconvenience or expense to the state, in one period only, whether for a whole month or less, and not in detached portions, to complete one month within the year, shall be the general rule of guidance, and that the term "year" shall be held to mean the calendar year, commencing with the 1st of January and ending with the 31st December, but that, as an exception to this rule, it shall be discretionary with the several local governments, where good cause is shewn for the indulgence, and it is attended with no public inconvenience, to sanction leave of absence, under section xi., to such parties as may not have occasion to apply for the whole at once, in instalments, not to exceed in the aggregate one month within the calendar year, on the understanding, that no leave can be granted for any fresh calendar year until the completion of three months, from the expiration of the entire leave, or of the last instalment of leave taken in the past calendar year.

COURTS MARTIAL.

ENSIGN RICHARD PACK, 13TH N.I.

Head Quarters, Simla, Feb. 26, 1848.—At a General Court Martial, assembled at Cawnpore, on Tuesday, Jan. 25, 1848, Ensign R. Pack, 13th N.I., was arraigned on the following charge:—

For unbecoming conduct, in the following instances:—

1st. In having, at Meerut, on or about December 16, 1845, incurred pecuniary obligation to Mr. F. Peterson, of the firm of Enjalbert and Company, tailors, of Meerut, to the amount of Rs. 41, for house-rent, paid by Mr. Peterson, on his, Ensign Pack's, account, for which sum he gave a promissory note payable at one month after date, but which amount is still due to Mr. Peterson.

2nd. In having, at Meerut, on or about December 5, 1846, induced Messrs. Enjalbert and Company, tailors, of Meerut, to withhold complaint against him, by promising to pay them Rs. 50, of the debt of Rs. 103, then due to them, before he left the station; and in having quitted Meerut without fulfilling that promise.

3rd. In having, at Cawnpore, on or about February 10, 1847, in a letter to the address of the Adjutant of the regiment, promised to discharge the debt due to Messrs. Enjalbert and Company, from his pay for December 1846, and January 1847, when received; and having failed to appropriate any part of his pay and allowances for those months to the payment of that debt.

4th. In having, at Cawnpore, some time during the month of April, 1847, fraudulently obtained the signatures of Captain G. F. Whitelocke, and Lieutenant R. B. Francis, 13th N.I., as sureties to his bond for the repayment of Rs. 1,200 to the Agra Bank, by monthly instalments of Rs. 50 each, upon the false representation that he would be able to pay the said instalments regularly: whereas he, Ensign Pack, well knew at the time that the deductions to be made from his pay and allowances to satisfy the award passed by the court of requests at Meerut, and to repay an advance received from Government, and the amount of other debts due by him, which could not be eventually discharged out of the said loan, would prevent his paying the said instalments, and which instalments, excepting the two first, have not been paid by Ensign Pack.

5th. In having, at Cawnpore, on or about June 21, 1847, fraudulently induced Cornet F. G. Willock, doing duty with the 9th L.C., to endorse a promissory note for the payment to the Cawnpore Bank of Rs. 101 at one month after the date thereof, by the promise to take up the same from money to be received from another bank; and having failed to do so, although he had received a loan of Rs. 1,200 from the Agra Bank, in consequence of which failure Cornet Willock had to pay the amount of the promissory note, with interest to the amount of Rs. 4 and As. 12, and which sums are still due to Cornet Willock.

6th. In having, at Cawnpore, on or about July 24, 1847, in a note to the address of the secretary to the Cawnpore Bank, falsely stated that he was unable to pay the amount of the promissory note referred to in the preceding instance, in consequence of his, Ensign Pack's, having been disappointed in receiving a remittance from the Agra Bank; whereas he, Ensign Pack, had, on or about July 14, 1847, received a draft from the secretary to the Agra Bank, for Rs. 791, the balance of the loan from the Agra Bank, to him, Ensign Pack, which is referred to in the fourth instance.

7th. In having, at Cawnpore, on or about the 20th of November, 1847, gone to reside in the house of Mr. Johnson, a clerk in the Cawnpore Post Office, and having associated on terms of familiarity with Mr. Johnson, although he, Ensign Pack, was well aware of the impropriety of such conduct, and for having continued so to reside till January 6th, 1848, notwithstanding that the impropriety of his residence with Mr. Johnson had been the subject for investigation (made in his presence) by a court of inquiry, which sat at Cawnpore, on November 30, 1847.

Finding—The court, having maturely weighed and considered the evidence brought forward in support of the prosecution, together with that adduced on the defence, are of opinion that the prisoner, Ensign R. Pack, 13th N. I. is Guilty of the 1st instance of the charge.

Guilty of the 2nd instance of the charge, with the exception of the words "induced Messrs. Enjalbert and Company, tailors, of Meerut, to withhold complaint."

Guilty of the 3rd instance of the charge, with the extenuating circumstances of his not having received one month and twenty-two days' pay of the three months named in the instance.

Guilty of the 4th instance of the charge.

Guilty of the 5th instance of the charge.

Not guilty of the 6th instance of the charge.

Guilty of the 7th instance of the charge.

Guilty of unbecoming conduct, as set forth in the preamble of the charge.

Sentence.—The court, having found the prisoner guilty as above specified, do adjudge him, the said Ensign R. Pack, of the 13th N.I., to be dismissed the service.

Revised Finding.—The court, having taken into consideration the letter of the judge advocate general of the army, are of opinion that the prisoner, Ensign R. Pack, of the 13th N.I. is Guilty of the 1st instance of the charge.

Guilty of the 2nd instance of the charge, with the exception of the words "induced Messrs. Enjalbert and Company, tailors of Meerut, to withhold complaint."

Guilty of the 3rd instance of the charge, with the extenuating circumstance of his not having received one month and twenty-two days' pay of the three months named in the instance.

Not guilty of the 4th instance of the charge, of which he is acquitted.

Guilty of the 5th instance of the charge.

Not guilty of the 6th instance of the charge, of which he is acquitted.

Guilty of the 7th instance of the charge.

Guilty of unbecoming conduct in the first, second, third, fifth, and seventh instances, as set forth in the preamble of the charge.

Revised Sentence.—The court, having found the prisoner guilty as above specified, beg most respectfully to adhere to their former sentence. Not confirmed.

Head Quarters, Simla,
23rd February, 1848.

(Sd.) GOUGH, General,
Commander-in-Chief.

REMARKS BY THE RIGHT HON. THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.

The Commander-in-chief finds it impossible to confirm the sentence of the court, because he cannot concur in the finding on the three first instances of the charge, and because under the fifth and seventh instances very irregular evidence was received, which may have conducted the court's declaring ensign Pack guilty of these instances, and led to the sentence of dismissal. That sentence would have been appropriate, and would have been confirmed, had the court on revising their finding, properly distinguished between what had been proved at the trial, and those parts of the charge on which there was no evidence, but under present circumstances it is impossible to act upon the sentence.

As regards the first instance, there was no attempt to prove that the debt incurred was for house-rent, and there was no proof of non-payment. The only witness examined was the adjutant of the regiment, who proved the signature of Ensign Pack to the promissory note, and deposed that to the best of his belief the debt had not been paid, about which he could certify nothing to his own knowledge. The second instance is supported solely by statements made by Enjalbert & Co. in letters to the officer commanding the regiment, which were not evidence; should not have been received at all, and much less without any attempt to prove the hand-writing, or even the receipt of them. These letters were simply produced by the judge advocate, read, and recorded.

The entire absence of evidence as relates to these two instances was pointed out to the court, together with similar deficiencies and admissions of illegal or irrelevant evidence as regards other instances of the charge, affecting both the finding and the sentence, and which have rendered these proceedings the most irregular that have ever come under the commander-in-chief's notice; but the court have thought fit to adhere to their finding, except as regards the fourth instance, on which they have now correctly given a verdict of acquittal, and the consequence is the escape of Ensign Pack from all punishment.

LIEUT. HENRY LEITH BLACKBURN 41st BENGAL NATIVE INFANTRY.

Head Quarters, Simla, Feb. 21, 1848.—At a general court martial held at Nusseerabad, on Monday, the 7th day of February, 1848, Lieut. Henry Leith Blackburn, of the 41st regt. N.I., was arraigned on the following charge:—

For unbecoming conduct, in the following instances:—

1st. For having, at Nusseerabad, on or about the 21st of November, 1847, made use of highly insulting language to Assist.-Surg. J. Grant, attached to the same regiment.

2nd. In having, at Nusseerabad, on or about the 11th of December, 1847, spoken in a harsh and highly improper manner to Koosul Sing, Subedar, 41st N.I., and in the presence of a Jemadar and several non-commissioned officers and sepoy of the regiment, the Subedar being then and there in attendance to make his report as relieved native officer of the day.

Finding.—That the prisoner, Lieut. Henry Leith Blackburn, 41st regt. of N.I. is

On the first instance of the charge, guilty, with the exception of the word "highly,"

On the second instance of the charge, not guilty.

Sentence.—To be severely reprimanded.

(Approved and confirmed),

Head-Quarters, Simla,
19th Feb. 1848.

Commander-in-Chief.

REMARKS BY THE RIGHT HON. THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.

Having found Lieutenant Blackburn not guilty of the second charge, the Court should have acquitted him of it.

The officer commanding the Rajpootnah field force will publicly administer a reprimand to Lieutenant Blackburn, and seriously admonish him of the necessity of controlling his temper in his communications with his brother officers.

Lieutenant Blackburn is to be released from arrest, and will return to his duty.

By order of H. E. the Right Hon. the Commander-in-Chief.

EXCHANGE on England has undergone little alteration, quotations are ls. 10½d. to ls. 11d. for 6 months' sight, document bills.

FREIGHTS.

The arrivals of shipping have been limited, and freights have consequently experienced an advance, particularly to London, for which quarter there has not been much tonnage available. To London, 6l. to 6l. 10s.; to Liverpool, 5l. 10s. for dead weight.

MARKETS.

Business has been quiet, and in markets few changes of importance have occurred. There continues to be rather more disposition to employ money in the Bazar, but the caution exercised in its employment has in no degree relaxed. There is this improvement, that the usual operations of internal trade are carried on more freely, particularly in the import branch, the tempting prices of several British goods, with reference to stocks and expected supplies, inducing native dealers of all classes to invest their funds with more confidence.

In exports, excepting indigo, the sales are not large—prices remain stationary, and in some instances are a little lower. A large quantity of indigo has been sold at the public sales, but with less spirit than during the previous week. The better qualities of Sugar have been in fair request, but the supply of such is now much reduced. In Silk no sales of importance have been made, and Corals continue quite neglected. Saltpetre has been sold to a moderate extent without alteration in prices. Rice for England remains dull. Jade is lower. In other of the minor staples there is no change, and little doing.

In Opium little has been done, but the quotations from the Bazar are lower. The next accounts from China, now daily expected, and Bombay, are looked for with much interest, as being likely to decide the question of peace or war.

A steady business has been done in imports. Cotton Goods have been sold freely, and, with a reduction of stocks in importers' hands, a firmer tone gradually gains ground. Mule Twist remains in demand. For Metals, the inquiry is neither active nor general; but at this season there is seldom much demand.

MADRAS.

LOCAL.

DEPARTURE OF THE LATE GOVERNOR.—The Marquis of Tweeddale embarked yesterday for England; the ceremonial of leave taking being carried out in the precise manner laid down in the garrison orders, of which we publish an extract. The marchioness embarked at the same time, and a crowded assemblage of military, civil, and commercial gentlemen, lined the shore. There was also a considerable sprinkling of ladies. As soon as the boat had got clear of the surf, the troops retraced their steps to the fort, and a salute of nineteen guns shortly announced that the honourable Mr. Dickenson had assumed the vacant office.—Athenæum, Feb. 24.

PROMOTION.—By the retirement of Major F. C. Scott, of the 24th Regt. N. I. Captain, (Brevet-Major) J. Lewis, Lieut. M. C. Spottiswoode, and Ensign J. M. Cameron, attain their promotion to the superior grades.—Ibid., Feb. 29.

RETIREMENT OF MAJOR LEWIS.—We understand that Major J. Lewis of the 24th Regt. N. I. is about to retire immediately from the service. This casualty will promote the following officers to the superior grades—Captain (Brevet Major) John Hill, Lieut. Francis Young, and Ensign Henry Lock.—Ibid., March, 2.

FURTHER PROMOTION.—Consequent on the demise of General Alexander Cuppage in Dublin on the 7th of January, 1848, the following promotions and alterations of rank in the infantry will take place:—Senior Lieut.-Col. J. H. Wimbolt, of the 13th regt., N. I., to be lieut.-col.-commandant, from 7th January, 1848, vice Cuppage, deceased. Lieut.-Col. J. Dickson, Major A. R. Ross, Capt. F. J. Loughman, and Lieut. T. P. King, of the 50th regt., N. I., to take rank from 7th January, 1848, in succession to Wimbolt promoted. Senior Major R. Thorpe, of the 27th regt., N. I., to be lieut.-col., vice Dods deceased, from 22nd February, 1848. 27th regt., N. I., Capt.-Brev.-Major H. Morland to be major, Lieut. M. Cholmeley to be captain, and Ens. J. J. Wright to be lieut. from 22nd February, 1848, in succession to Thorpe promoted. By the decease of General (Colonel) Alexander Cuppage, the following officers will be entitled to a half share each from the off-reckoning fund from 8th January, 1848, viz. Lieut.-Colonels-Commandant P. Whannell and S. W. Steel, c.z. By the foregoing promotions &c. the staff appointments of deputy military auditor general, superintendent of family payments and pensions, and the assistant surveyor general Hyderabad survey will be at the disposal of the supreme and Madras Government.—Ibid., March 4.

MEETING OF THE MADRAS BANK.—The usual general meeting of the proprietors of the Madras Bank was held yesterday. There were about half a dozen of the shareholders present, and the board of directors. The only business done was purely of a formal nature, and the meeting was adjourned for a fortnight, pending the preparation of a statement of the bank's operations to the 31st of December.—Ibid., March 7.

CAPTAIN ARMSTRONG.—We understand that Captain R. D. Armstrong, of the 2nd European Light Infantry, is about to be invalided immediately, which will promote Brevet Captain G. Harvey to captain, and Ensign E. Presgrave to lieutenant.—Ibid., March 11.

ARRIVAL OF THE NEW GOVERNOR.—The ship London, with his Excellency Lieut. General Sir George Berkeley, K. C. B. Commander-in-Chief of Madras, on board, having arrived in the Madras Roads on the night of the 11th instant, three signal guns, followed by a salute of seventeen guns, were fired on the morning of the following day. His Excellency landed at 11 A.M. under a similar salute, and was received by a guard of honour at the landing place. The whole of the troops in garrison were paraded last evening, and formed a street from the Government Office to the Wallajah gate, for the purpose of receiving his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief on the occasion of his taking the seat in council, under the usual oaths. Salutes of seventeen guns were fired on his Excellency's arrival in Fort St. George, and also on his being sworn in.—Athenæum, March 14.

THE NABOB OF THE CARNATIC.—Yesterday forenoon his highness the Nabob of the Carnatic, returned the visit of ceremony of the honourable the Governor. The usual salutes were fired from St. Thomas' Mount on his highness's arrival at, and departure from Guindy.—Ibid.

GENERAL FRASER.—A salute of 13 guns was fired on the 11th instant, on the arrival of Major-General Fraser at the Presidency.—Ibid.

ARRIVAL OF TROOPS.—A detachment consisting of 160 men, 18 women, and 5 children, H. C. service, under the command of Captain Woods, 4th regiment N. I., arrived per ship, Thetis, on the 11th instant, and were disembarked on the afternoon of the same day, and marched to St. Thomas' Mount.—Ibid.

DEPARTURE OF TROOPS.—A small detachment of invalids of her Majesty's 4th K. O., under the command of Lieutenant McAndrew of that corps, embark this day for England on board the ship Vernon.—Ibid.

MOFUSSIL.

BANGALORE.—Feb. 24.—New Hospital.—Our worthy commissioner has just established a large hospital, which is to be conducted on the principle of European hospitals. It is situated in a healthy locality near the south gate of the Bangalore Pettah, and affords accommodation for about 100 patients; the wards are large and airy, and furnished with every necessary comfort and attendance. The former hospital, within the Pettah, is converted into a lazaretto, but we are sorry to observe many of the lepers begging about the cantonment, which should not be allowed, as they are provided with a lungurkanah to supply them with the necessaries of life.

Regimental Lodgings for Married Men.—When H.M.'s 51st regiment was in Van Diemen's Land, the married men of the regiment, it is said, sustained great loss in consequence of the houses which they had purchased from the 21st Fusiliers having been ordered to be knocked down, by which summary proceeding the men were reduced to great difficulties in providing accommodation for their families. Upon the arrival of the regiment at Madras, they were ordered to proceed to Bangalore, where, before they had got over the expenses of their march, they were obliged to purchase the huts of the 1st Madras Fusiliers; some of these places were in such a wretched condition that, during the late monsoon, it cost many married men 8 or 9 rupees for repairs, after every hard shower of rain. All these expenses must press heavily on the small pay of poor soldiers who are encumbered with large families. Government should take these circumstances into consideration, and either build huts for them, or allow an extra sum to every married man on his arrival at a new station, to lighten the burden of these ruinous incidental expenses.—Ibid., Feb. 29.

CANNANORE, Feb. 28.—Military Items.—The head quarters and detachment of H.M.'s 94th regiment, disembarked on the morning of the 11th instant, and took possession of the barracks partly vacated by the 25th regiment.—The Honble. Company's steamer Enterprise with a detachment of H.M.'s 94th regiment, from Madras, arrived about 2 o'clock on the morning of the 24th instant, and the troops disembarked that evening.—Orders were received here on the 18th of February, to have the detachment of H.M.'s 25th regiment remaining at this station, in readiness to embark for China on the arrival of the steamer Enterprise, and accordingly, the detachment of H.M.'s 25th regiment, under the command of Lieut. Col. Hollis of that corps, embarked on board the steamer on the morning of the 26th instant. The vessel got under weigh as soon as the troops had arrived on board, and was out of sight at 8 A.M. Nearly 50,000 rounds of ball ammunition, with the requisite proportion of caps, were sent on board the steamer for the use of the detachment.—The families have been left here, and are to proceed to Madras on board the H. C. steam frigate Semiramis, which is expected to arrive here from Bombay in a day or two; she is to wait at Madras till the arrival of the head quarters and right wing of H.M.'s 25th regiment, whom she will convey to Hong Kong.—Colonel Chambers, of H.M.'s 25th regiment, gave over the command of the provinces of Malabar and Canara, on the 16th instant, to Lieut. Col. Coffin, of the 12th regiment N. I., the next senior officer. Colonel Chambers proceeds to Madras by the Semiramis.

Arrivals.—Major Grant, 46th N. I., from Neilgherries; Capt. Budd, assistant commissary general, from Hoonsoor; Capt. Maunsell, Lieut. McCarthy, Ensign Bell, and Assist. surg. Purvis, of H.M.'s 94th regt., from Madras, on the 24th inst.

Departures.—Lieut. col. Young, Major Strange, Lieuts. Nicolls, Johnston, Bent, Pogson, Lane, Browne, Jones, Blomfield, and Potts; Lieut. and Adj. Walker, Quarter-mast. Potts, and Surgeon McGregor, of H.M.'s 25th regt., to Madras, 11th February; Lieut. Wallace, H.M.'s 25th regt., to Neilgherry Hills, on sick certificate; Lieut. Hollis, Capt. Wells and Holt Lieut. Patterson and Ensign Priestly, of H.M.'s 25th regt., to Hong Kong, 26th February.—Athenæum, March 4.

OOTACAMUND.—Superintendent of the Gardens.—We understand, that amongst the passengers who arrived in the Haddington on the 3rd instant, was Mr. McIver, an eminent horticulturist, who owes his appointment as superintendent of the Ootacamund Gardens to the warm interest taken by our late governor, the Marquis of Tweeddale, in agricultural improvements. Mr. McIver is, we believe, a man of scientific acquirements, and has published a work upon horticultural subjects. At the time of his nomination by the Court of Directors he was connected with the royal gardens at Kew. We shall look forward with much interest to the result of his experiments at the Neilgherries.—Ibid., March 7.

SOOTHAYNAREE.—Wreck of the Laborieux.—An authentic report has reached us, to the effect that on the night of the 3rd instant, the French ship Laborieux, Captain Fleury, ran aground on the coast near Soothaynaree, beyond Cheekrakodes, about twenty-three miles to the northward of Pulicat. The Laborieux is in all probability a wreck, but there is every reason to believe the most valuable part of her cargo, which consists of indigo, coffee, and rice, will be saved without damage. Uncertain what assistance can be rendered there, three boats well manned, and under charge of the Ghaut Syrang, have been despatched to the Laborieux. This vessel left Coringa on the 24th ultimo, and was bound to Pondicherry and France. Captain Fleury states, that this disaster is owing to a very strong and unexpected indraught, as the position by dead reckoning placed the Laborieux twelve leagues from the coast, just before she struck.—Ibid.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDER.

BRIGADE COMMANDS.

The hon. the Governor in Council is pleased to establish the following rules regarding temporary succession, in virtue of seniority, to brigade commands, which correspond with the Bengal regulations on the same subject.

1. On the death, removal, resignation, or absence on any account, of a permanent brigadier beyond the limits of his district, the senior officer succeeding to the command, if at a station of less than two corps of the line, will draw the allowance of Company's rupees 120 per month, mentioned in the preceding paragraph, retaining the charge of his own corps; but if stationed where two or more corps are located, he will deliver over the command of his regiment to the next senior officer, and himself draw the full allowances of a temporary brigadier—viz., Co.'s Rs. 520 per month. In either case he will not be entitled to the staff allowances of a permanent brigadier, until the same is specially sanctioned by Government, when those allowances will be passed to him less the entire amount—viz., Co.'s Rs. 520 per month—drawn by him.*

2. When the allowances of a permanent brigadier are sanctioned, the same are to be admitted as fixed for the second class, notwithstanding the predecessor of the temporary incumbent may have been in receipt of allowances as a first-class brigadier.

MISCELLANEOUS.

LOCAL.

THE "FEROSE."—This magnificent steamer, now building in the dock, is nearly ready to be floated out. Her engines are nearly in, and she is entirely coppered. She will be a pride to the Indian navy, and, as a specimen of Bombay handicraft, she certainly stands unrivalled. It is said that in the beginning of May she will be ready to make her first trip, and will, we believe, take the direct course to Aden, as did the Memnon when she was lost. The dimensions of the Feroze are—240 feet in length, extreme breadth of beam 64 feet, and depth of hold 23 feet. Her engines are of about 550 horse power. She has what is commonly called a "fiddle head."—Times, March 4.

THE "JUMNA."—This beautiful brig, built for H. M.'s service, will be launched from the slips on Tuesday next. She is one of the finest vessels in the navy, of her class. It is reported that she will, after she is launched, be hauled alongside the ship Vernon, and get her masts stepped, and will probably be brought into dock to be coppered and fitted-up the following day. She is pierced for 16 guns. The following are her dimensions:—

	Feet.	In.
Length between the perpendiculars	110	..
Do. of the keel for tonnage	86	9
Breadth—extreme	34	10
Do. for tonnage	34	..
Do. moulded	34	..
Depth of hold	14	10

—Ibid.

LAUNCH OF THE "JUMNA."—The launch of her Majesty's sixteen gun brig-of-war the Jumna took place yesterday morning, at half-past eleven o'clock. This beautiful vessel, it will be remembered, is the partner of the Nerbudda, launched here some time back. The ceremony, on the whole, was excellently well conducted, and every arrangement made for the convenience of the spectators; amongst whom we observed the honourable Governor, the Honourable Mr. Reid, Sir Robert Oliver, and most of the élite of our society, with a large concourse of natives. The distance the vessel had to travel on the slips was about 40 yards, and her first movement was hailed with a salute from the battery and the hearty cheers of the assembled crowd. Mrs. Reid performed the ceremony of naming her in the accustomed form. The governor's band was in attendance, and enlivened the scene by playing several appropriate airs. The Jumna was immediately taken into the dock for the purpose of being coppered and fitted up. Her fittings, unlike those of the Nerbudda, will be all new.

In a fortnight hence she will, it is expected, be ready for sea.—Ibid., March.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.—His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief leaves Bombay for the Mahabuleshwur Hills at the latter end of the present month. We believe Sir W. Cotton has engaged quarters at Poona for the monsoon, but we greatly mistake or the beginning of June will find him at Calcutta in the capacity of Commander-in-Chief of the Indian army.—Ibid., March 11.

BRIGADIER HUGHES.—Amongst our general orders will be found a well-deserved compliment from Government to Brigadier-General S. Hughes on his retirement. The gallant veteran, after struggling hard for nearly two years against severe indisposition, has at length wisely resolved on trying the air of Europe, which, to his naturally strong frame and vigorous constitution, will, we trust, bring relief. General Hughes entered the army in 1800, and became lieutenant-colonel in 1830, and colonel in 1841. He was commander of the garrison at Bombay in 1843, when a dispute with the town-major led to one of the most singular courts-martial on record. He was shortly after this appointed to the command of the northern division of the army, when his health suffered so severely, that he was in Nov., 1846, obliged to proceed on sick leave to the hills. He was on his way to resume command in May when he was appointed to the southern division. General Hughes, before these piping times of peace drew on, had seen much service, and the gallantry with which he conducted himself obtained for him the distinction of Companion of the Bath. He is succeeded on the divisional staff by Colonel Manson, of the Artillery.—Times, March 14.

THE LATE REGATTA.—We believe the Governor's Cup, run for at the last regatta, and won by Capt. Chamberlain, but reported to have been given up by that gentleman to be competed for again, is now retained by him as his prize. It is expected that another cup—one presented by the members of the club—will be run for in a few days. The day has not yet been named.—Ibid.

THE GOVERNOR.—The hon. the Governor and staff leave for Mahabuleshwur Hills on Saturday: his purpose of visiting Poona having been abandoned. Mr. Goldsmid and Col. Melville accompany him.—Ibid., March 15.

MOFUSSIL.

BELGAUM, 3rd March, 1848.—Fires.—Since last writing we have had two more fires—one in the "Mochee" lines and the other in the bazaar; both happily did not do much damage, yet the loss must fall very heavily on the poor creatures, and plainly shews the great necessity of having fire engines, which, when granted, should be located near the travellers' bungalow, which is convenient to a large sheet of water. I hope the authorities will act on the hint, which has for its object the security of the property of rich and poor.

Regimental Workshop.—I am happy to inform you that from suggestions chiefly emanating from your invaluable paper, a workshop on an extended scale is about to be erected for the use of the tradesmen of the 78th Highlanders. I will in due course inform you of the working of this useful and lucrative mode of the soldier's expending the very many idle hours he has on his hands.

Want of Barrack-room.—Another subject I would advert to en passant—the crowded state of the barrack-rooms occupied by this corps, and the want of accommodation for upwards of 1,100 men in quarters not contemplated to hold many more than 900. The consequence, as it stands at present, is, that there are about 90 men more quartered in each room than they should have. One barrack is taken up by the sergeants' mess and band. The erection, at least, of three additional rooms will be necessary to meet the present strength of this regiment.

Dr. Doig.—Staff-surgeon Doig returned from Vingoria during the past week.

The Superintending Surgeon.—It is rumoured that our superintending surgeon will very soon proceed to Bombay, to take up a vacancy in the medical board caused by Dr. Kane's retirement. Superintending Surgeon Patch, at present in Scinde, is coming to the division.

The Weather.—The weather is gradually becoming warmer, and the hot winds and dust are annoying. The residents in the forts are worse off than those in camp, it being crowded with houses and extensive gardens, the ramparts also keeping out the breezes.—Times, March 8.

COLABAH.—New Theatre.—Her Majesty's 8th regiment, we believe, are about to open a theatre in the barracks at Upper Colabah, and their performances, we understand, are to be patent to the public.—Times, March 15.

SURAT.—Awful Conflagration.—The steamer Phlox, from Surat, reports the occurrence of an awful conflagration in that city at midnight on the 8th instant, by which no fewer than 400 houses were totally destroyed.—Times, March 11.

MARKETS.

Tuesday Afternoon, 5 o'Clock, 14th March, 1848.—During the greater part of the past fortnight the tightness in the money market, mentioned in our last report, and the distrust consequent thereon, continued to prevail, and the transactions in most kinds of imports were on a most limited scale. Since the commencement of this week, however, we are happy to be able to state that a better tone has prevailed, and a pretty general feeling seems to exist that we have got over the worst, and may now confidently look forward to a revival in business so soon as the native holidays, which will commence in two or three days and continue for about a week, are brought to a close. The encouraging accounts from England by the last mail, shewing that panic had totally subsided there, and giving promise of a safe and gradual return to a sound and healthy state of commerce, had some effect in imparting the comparative buoyancy now felt in our market; but the feeling had its rise more immediately in the conviction that of most kinds of staple goods stocks were very bare, while the supplies that had gone forward to the interior were on a much smaller scale than had been the case in past seasons, and that, consequently, dealers must employ themselves before the setting in of the monsoon. On the other hand, the accounts of the cotton market in England being of a nature to encourage shippers, a slight improvement on the previously declining market for that article appears to have manifested itself, and further purchases have been made by natives for shipment under Government advances. In Calcutta, too, we are glad to perceive that a considerably better feeling prevailed at the date of our last advice in the market for imports.

SCINDE.

THE GOVERNOR AND HIS PARTY.—We have since our last had various communications from Scinde, chiefly relating to the movements of Mr. Clerk, who now appears as speedily amongst us as the tale of his own adventures. He arrived at Hyderabad on the 17th, and made the river steamer in which he had come up his headquarters. The lateness of the season and approach of the hot weather had compelled him to abandon the idea of proceeding to Sukkur or Shikarpoor. At Hyderabad he visited the hospitals, the barracks, the city, and fortifications; saw all that could be seen, and listened to every thing that could be heard. Having so far as possible completed his examinations and inquiries, he left on the 21st, and arrived at Kurrachee on the 25th, where he was for a considerable time delayed on the mud banks. The Ajdaha had arrived at Kurrachee on the 21st, and now waited for orders. Mr. Clerk used equal diligence at Kurrachee as at Hyderabad, in examining into the state of matters. On Monday, the 28th, there was a grand review of all the troops at the station, which went off with much éclat. The steamer Medusa, with the mails and baggage of the Governor, left on the evening of that day, the Ajdaha on the afternoon following; Capt. D'Arcy and Lieut. M'Mahon remained at Hyderabad, with a view of proceeding by Oomerooto across the desert, visiting Abou and Deesa on their way, and returning to Bombay through Goozerat. At Tarta, Captain Jocelyn joined, having some months since gone round from this to Calcutta, and proceeded up the Ganges and down the Sutlej and Indus. Dr. Gibson, superintendent of woods and forests, has been summoned to join the party, and arrived just in time to accompany them. Short as is the time that has been occupied in this expedition, much in the way of examination may have been effected with men so active and able. The writing and reporting must, of course, all remain to be performed. We may remind our readers that the party consisted of the following gentlemen:—the hon. the Governor; Mr. Goldsmid, secretary in attendance; Colonel Melville, military secretary to government; Captain French, private secretary; Captain Chamberlain, military secretary; Captain D'Arcy and Lieut. M'Mahon, aides-de-camp; Dr. M'Leannan, physician in attendance; and Dr. Gibson, superintendent of woods and forests.—Bombay Times, March 4.

FURTHER PARTICULARS OF THE GOVERNMENT PARTY.—

The following are the only particulars I can as yet supply you with, and I must make haste, as the post closes in another hour. From the mouth of the river (Hujamree), his Excellency having, as comfortably as possible, ensconced himself in a flat (the name given to an ameer's state barge) was towed up the Indus by one of the steamers, and on the 10th arrived safe at Hyderabad. Here, keeping his nautical and somewhat novel lodgings, he visited Kotree, the entrenched camp, fort, and town of Hyderabad; the ever memorable battle fields of "Meeanee" and "Dubba;" also the justly celebrated mosques of the Kolara and Talpoor Ameers' families; the European barracks; and, in short, a few other remarkable places, returning, after every visit, to his flat. His Excellency held a levee, the same as in Government-house, in the fort of Hyderabad. He also kindly received visits from the jageerdars of the Hyderabad districts. Having accomplished all this in a wonderfully short space of time, he took his departure for Kurrachee; and after encountering the disagreeable obstacle of grounding—several times—he reached "Gizree" on the forenoon of the 24th instant. No sooner was this known in camp, than carriages and horses were despatched to the bunder for the conveyance of the Honourable Mr. Clerk and suite,—and all was haste and confusion in cantonments:—undress soldiers, who were out on several purposes, were seen literally flying in all directions to their respective lines,—but they need not have done so, as it will be seen, they were not after all required!—About 3 p.m. Colonels Dundas and Bradshaw, accompanied by Major Green, Captain Phayre, and one or two others, left camp to receive his Excellency the Governor at "Gizree," which is some seven miles from this. The party had not proceeded more than half way, when they met Lieut. Lester, who brought the news that the governor was not going to land that evening;—the whole then returned together, and as they approached camp, Lieut. Lester being in Mr. Pringle's darouche, followed by a dozen sowars, the artillery, which were on the qui vive for the governor, laughable to say, thundered out a salute of nineteen guns—having mistaken the disappointed cavalcade for the honourable the governor and suite!—We all enjoyed the joke gloriously.

Lester also brought Mr. Clerk's instructions to the authorities to avoid receiving him with a demonstration of the troops—and, accordingly, the ruler of Duckland—depriving us of the iamasha we witnessed on the occasion of Sir Charles' departure, modestly and quietly entered the not very inviting cantonments of Kurrachee yesterday morning about half-past seven o'clock, under a second (though the first it cannot be said was for him!) salute of nineteen guns. Now, what do you think he did immediately on his arrival? Why, instead of making himself comfortable for the day, or, at least, first going into Government house and refreshing himself with a cup of coffee—or so—he galloped about, and actually, in less than an hour, reconnoitred and circumnavigated (!) the whole camp! Verily, he saw all he could possibly openly see!! He afterwards took up his residence—not in Government house, but, as I am told, in his tent—a camp having been standing pitched for him for some days, about 500 yards to the south-west of Government house. I regret to add that his Excellency met with an accident on his return trip—having dislocated two fingers of his left hand, by a fall on deck, occasioned by a shock of the flat he was in suddenly coming in collision with the steamer it was towed by. I hear he is almost well now.—Ibid.

MARRIAGE OF MISS BLENKINS.—The sister of our very popular Commissary-general, Major Blenkins, C.B., was united to Lieut. Langton of the 4th Native Rifles, on the 22nd February, at Kurrachee, by the Rev. Mr. Watson. The ceremony was respectably attended; at about twelve o'clock p.m. it was over, and I observed the "happy couple"—though no "marriage bells" announced the occasion—driving home in a barouche, followed by the several carriages of Major Green, Major Maclean, Captain Stanley, and one or two others, with numerous guests in garrises, one on horseback, &c. I am not aware if the "wedding was kept up," but the company present sat down at two p.m. to an excellent and sumptuous déjeuner, at the table of Major Blenkins, and no doubt did justice to the same.—Ibid.

CAPTAIN RATHBORNE.—On the evening of the 23rd Captain Rathborne arrived here: he is residing with Dr. Allender. He came by land, and is on his "annual visit to Clifton." I cannot say how long he will stay, but presume not many days after he has had an interview with the honourable the Governor. Several functionaries from Upper Scinde are expected here: I have heard Majors Goldney, the collector of Shikarkore, and Jacob, of the Scinde Horse, named as coming to Kurrachee.—Ibid.

THE GOVERNOR AT HYDRABAD.—From Hyderabad I am in possession of hardly any news; from Sukkur, none. The appearance of the country on either side of the river, from the Hujamree to Hyderabad, seems to have much disappointed Mr. Clerk in his expectations of seeing luxuriant Shikargahs and fertile fields in Young Egypt. It is said barrenness and sterility met his eye everywhere, with but very little exception, near Jurruck and Hyderabad. The only object evidently of the governor's admiration was the majestic "Indus;" and, unfortunately, this too offered some impediments to the progress of our illustrious visitor—its continually shifting sand banks having caused the frequent grounding, and consequent detention, of the steamers composing his Excellency's fleet.—Ibid.

CHINA.

SERVICES OF MAJOR-GENERAL D'AGUILAR.

We last week published the general order from Major-general D'Aguiar, laying down his command of the troops in China, in favour of Major-General Staveley, after having held the appointment upwards of four years.* We avail ourselves of the occasion to take a brief retrospect of his services.

The chief characteristics of Major-general D'Aguiar's command, it seems to us, have been—a quick sensibility as to every thing that concerned the health, comfort, and efficiency of the soldiers, a fearlessness of responsibility where these great objects were in view, and a determination to maintain discipline, which his naturally kind disposition never seems to have led him to overlook or compromise.

With these qualifications he was peculiarly fitted to take the command of the forces in China, at a crisis when he was called upon to act under circumstances which many in his situation would have shrunk from. On his arrival in Hong Kong he found the troops dying at a rate far exceeding that of any other colony,† while almost every man not in the hospital was little better than a living skeleton. Out of a garrison averaging 1400 men, 900 had died since they had been quartered on the island. This fearful mortality was generally attributed to the peculiar insalubrity of the climate; but General D'Aguiar formed a more correct opinion, and acted upon it. His first remedial measure was a bold one,—in taking the responsibility in sending home the 55th regiment without any authority for doing so, either from England or India; a step which saved the remnant of that shattered corps. He next proceeded to secure proper accommodation for the troops that remained; determined that they should be no longer sacrificed by exposure in mud huts and temporary hovels. Having fixed upon a proper site for an hospital, he requested a grant of it from Sir Henry Pottinger, who did not consider himself authorized to accede, until, as we have heard, the general intimated that if he could not obtain it in any other way, he would cause it to be purchased at the next land sale for the Board of Ordnance, at any price. Knowing that years might elapse, in submitting plans and obtaining the approbation of the home authorities, the general rested his justification on the urgency of the case, and proceeded at once with the buildings, trusting that the requisite funds would be voted by parliament. To this determination and foresight the soldiers are indebted for those military buildings which are the boast of the colony, and which in less than four years have redeemed Hong-Kong from a reputation for mortality which was becoming proverbial, and proved that under a proper system the place is really more salubrious than any station in India. These facts may be shortly established by a reference to a comparative table of deaths among the troops during the summer half-years from 1842 to 1846, in the spring of which year the new barracks were completed.

Year.	Deaths from 1st April to 31st October.	Proportion of Deaths to Strength.
1842	129	19 per cent.
1844	190	18 " "
1845	77	8 " "

Estimating the cost to the country of each soldier at 100*l.*, utilitarians will be able to appreciate the sound discretion exercised by General D'Aguiar in incurring an expenditure of 50,000*l.* upon the new barracks and hospital; for large as is the amount, it would have become the annual military tax of the colony at the rate of mortality which formerly prevailed.

Within the limits we have prescribed to ourselves it would be impossible to enumerate the various instances in which the General D'Aguiar's watchfulness and concern for the troops led him to exceed the financial powers usually vested in general officers; but we must not omit the outline of another and less known case, in which this trait of character was exercised.

On the evacuation of Chusan, the senior naval officer tendered two vessels for the conveyance of the 98th regiment to Calcutta, in terms of the Admiralty regulations, which allowed a very inadequate amount of tonnage. The general, taking into consideration the sickness which the regiment had suffered in China, felt convinced that more accommodation was necessary; and the army medical officers being of the same opinion, a further demand was made upon the senior naval officer, who signified his willingness to allow any amount of tonnage that might be named, upon the general's responsibility. Being bound by his instructions, he could do no more; but the transit of troops being purely a naval service, the cost of which is charged in the Admiralty estimates, the general might have thrown upon that department the blame of any bad effects resulting to the corps from want of proper accommodation. But his object would not thus have been attained; and accordingly he did not hesitate to incur the responsibility of sanctioning one thousand tons extra; by which means the 98th regiment, instead of being cooped up in the Admiralty fashion during a three month's voyage, against a strong monsoon, proceeded to their destination in comfort and safety.

To those who are unacquainted with the nature of the regulations, it is necessary to explain that the general instructions of the Admiralty are,—to hang as many hammocks as the vessel will admit of, and to put on board one-third more soldiers than there are hammocks; thus obliging the watch on deck to turn in to the heated beds of their comrades; the soldier's condition on board ship being worse than that of the sailor. A body of men whose frames had been previously shattered, exposed to a long voyage under such circumstances, must have suffered great

* Major General D'Aguiar succeeded Lord Saltoun in January, 1844.

† Mr. Montgomery Martin gives the mortality as then amounting to thirty per cent., but omits to state its immense decrease in every future year. It is remarkable that a writer so prone to exaggerate, should in this instance have underrated the mortality of the new settlement. The precise loss of European soldiers in Hong Kong during the year 1843, was thirty-nine per cent. of the whole garrison; the 98th regiment having lost twenty-five per cent., and the 55th no less than forty-four per cent.

* This increase over the previous year was occasioned by the expedition to Canton, which was followed by more than average sickness in the 13th R. I. regiment.

losses; and it was in order to obviate this that General D'Aguilar stipulated for six feet by two for each man of the 98th regiment put on board.

The natural jealousy of interference felt by one department towards another was sure to be excited by such a defiance of even these pernicious regulations; and, accordingly, we have understood that the Admiralty highly disapproved of what had been done, and enjoined their officers never again to make a similar concession; whilst the military authorities and the Indian Government expressed their unqualified approval of the measures Major General D'Aguilar had adopted on the occasion.

The circumstances are worth recording as exhibiting characteristic features in the parties concerned, while they afford an opportunity of illustrating the pennywise economy pursued by the Admiralty in the conveyance of troops; a system by which the health and efficiency of the soldiers within the tropics are greatly impaired.

We have thus adverted to certain leading points, which serve to mark the career of General D'Aguilar under circumstances of the greatest importance connected with a military command abroad. They are not invested with the interest and brilliancy of victories achieved in the battle-field, but their merit is not the less on that account: for we believe that for ten general officers who for glory would march to the cannon's mouth, scarcely one but would shrink from the hobgoblin—financial responsibility.

But the past year has afforded the opportunity not only of proving the importance of securing the health and efficiency of the troops, but of shewing what might have been expected from Major-general D'Aguilar in the event of a war with China; and amidst all the discussions in the newspapers and despatches from the various departments of Government regarding the Canton expedition, no one has ventured to call in question the skill, foresight, and complete success of the military operations. The last may, perhaps, be attributed to the slight opposition encountered, but such were the nature of the preliminary measures and the perfection of the whole arrangements, that we never heard a military man doubt that, even had the Bogue forts been fully garrisoned, they might have been captured and the city destroyed by our handful of well-disciplined troops. The subject, however, has been so frequently and fully discussed, that it would be superfluous to dwell upon it.

In his capacity as lieutenant-governor of the colony, General D'Aguilar has had fewer opportunities of action; but, during the occasional absence of the governor, he has manifested the same solicitude for the interests of the community as in promoting the welfare and efficiency of the troops, and of this General D'Aguilar leaves behind him proofs far more lasting than the fleeting record of a newspaper.—China Mail, March 27.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDER.

Major-General Staveley will draw his allowances from the 26th January last, the date of his arrival in this colony.

On laying down the command, Major-General D'Aguilar desires thus publicly to express to commanding officers and heads of departments his sense of the uniform support he has received from them in the discharge of his duties. He desires also to make known to the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men under their respective command, his entire approbation of their general regularity and good conduct.

The Major-General takes leave of the troops in China with his best wishes for their prosperity and honour.

EXCHANGES.

Prior to the arrival of the mail, some sales were made at 4s. 5d.; but the favourable accounts of the rates in India recently received have caused a good demand, and the rate has closed at 4s. 4d. to 4s. 4½d. Company's rupees have been sold at 217, accepted; and 219, unaccepted.

FREIGHTS.

Tonnage is abundant, and freights are scarce. The present rate to England is 4l. 4s. per ton; but 4l. would be taken for a large quantity; and 12 to 16 dollars for the United States.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

NEW LIGHT-HOUSE.—From Port Elizabeth we learn that Mr. Montagu has decided upon the rocky point of Cape Recife as the site for the projected light-house. It had been proposed to construct this edifice on the hill in the rear of this point; but from the faulty character of this elevation, it being chiefly sand, this idea has been given up, and the spot mentioned selected as by far the most preferable.—Graham's Town Journal, Feb. 12.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

MONDAY, April 24, 1848.

WE have extracted from the China Mail a panegyric notice of General D'AGUILAR, which, assuming the facts on which it is based to be correctly stated (and we have no reason to doubt it), are too creditable to that officer to be passed over without directing to them the attention of our readers. He appears to have exerted himself most laboriously, and frequently under circumstances of much difficulty, to promote by all practicable means the health and comfort of those under his command. Such conduct deserves to be known and remembered, and we are proud of the opportunity of adding to the more elaborate tribute of our cotemporary at Hong-Kong our own brief and humble contribution of respect.

IN our remarks on the bill for setting aside law at the presidency of Bombay, and substituting the caprice of the judge in its place, we did not omit to refer to the extraordinary and illegal speed with which it was proposed to carry this precious scheme into operation. We hope the disappointment will not occasion Sir THOMAS PERRY a fit of apoplexy, or any similar visitation; but we have great satisfaction in announcing that, on the representations against the proposed Act made to the Government of India from all classes of persons at Bombay (for never did any measure enjoy a higher or wider degree of unpopularity), it has been determined not to press the hated change forward at the rate of an express train, but to allow the usual time for its consideration. A respite has been granted, and we hope the people of Bombay will make the best use of it to avert the terrible infliction with which they are threatened.

We find the following in the Friend of India :—

"A Mr. Barber, an attorney in England, was some time back sentenced to transportation for participating in the forgery of a will. The case made a great noise in England at the time, and will, doubtless, come again under consideration. The judges of the Supreme Court at New South Wales, the Sydney Law Society, and the gentlemen of the bar, have carefully re-examined the evidence on which he was convicted, and they have pronounced him guiltless of the charge. This opinion having been transmitted to England, her Majesty's Ministers granted him a pardon on condition that he should not return to England. He has now arrived at Madras, where a subscription has been raised to enable him to return to Europe and prosecute his claim for an unconditional pardon. The judges of the Supreme Court have headed the subscription list, and we think there can be no doubt of the success of his suit; for if there be sufficient ground for granting him a pardon, he ought not to be doomed to a state of perpetual expatriation."

We believe the case is not stated in the above extract with very rigid precision, but the trial and conviction of the person referred to, as well as the somewhat unusual course thereupon taken by his learned counsel, will be generally recollected. It appears that, having been permitted to quit the scene of his punishment, Mr. Barber has succeeded in enlisting the sympathies of a large body of persons in his favour, especially in India, whither he has directed his steps; and several of the local papers have taken up his defence with much energy. We should be greatly unwilling to press heavily on a fallen man, but we must remind our cotemporaries in India, that in treating the object of their patronage as one whose innocence of the crime alleged against him is proved and universally acknowledged, they are assuming that which cannot be conceded. If in the judgment of the British Government he was innocent, he would undoubtedly have received an unconditional pardon, instead of a mere emancipation from the position of a convict. We are not disposed to quarrel with what has been done in his favour. We some time since saw a statement of his treatment while under punishment, which, if true, would well justify the belief that the convict had been subjected to undue harshness. He may have suffered enough; the remission of further punishment may be reasonable and right; but to treat him as a man unjustly convicted is quite another matter. We do not wish to revive the recollections of a very melancholy case; and it is the imprudence of Mr. BARBER and his friends that enforces it. But we ask, when a person came, as did FLETCHER, who was tried and convicted with BARBER, time after time, with cases of suddenly-discovered successors to unclaimed property in the public funds, was it possible that any man of business, and especially any lawyer, should fail to suspect that something was wrong? We think not. There is, moreover, another question to which it behoves those who argue for the entire innocence of Mr. BARBER to give an answer. In most of the cases in which, as they allege, Mr. BARBER was only a dupe, the aid of an ecclesiastical practitioner was necessary. How did it happen that he rarely, if ever, went twice to the same proctor?

THE long and anxiously looked for 10th of April (it should have been the 1st) has passed away, and the threats and vaunts of the reckless blackguards who promised themselves a rich harvest of mischief and plunder have subsided into a lamentable whine over their untoward fate. The monster petition with its legion of signatures was not borne in triumph to the House of Commons under an escort of two hundred and fifty thousand Chartists, scowling defiance from brows rarely visited by soap; nor were the said quarter of a million of patriots subjected to the trouble of parading between Westminster and the Tower till the charter should be granted. A conclusion more lame, impotent, and miserable, than that of the Kennington Common revulsion, has scarcely ever attended such a commencement. The defeat of the miserable treason-mongers was as complete as their chop-fallen countenances at the close of the day were pitiable. Such a dénouement was bad enough, but the exposures which have since followed are tenfold worse. The employés of the House of Commons, with a most reprehensible curiosity, set to work to count and examine the signatures attached to the mighty petition which was to upset a monarchy of eight hundred years' standing; and they found not only that many signatures were absolute forgeries, and that many more evidently indicated no living persons, but that the numbers of those affixed to the petition, such as they were, had been multiplied threefold by the inventive genius of the persons who got up the precious document. So complete was the smash of the whole affair, that Mr. FEARGUS O'CONNOR—no very fastidious person—threw it over, and consented to let the monster slumber till removed to the breeze yard. This must be its ultimate destination, for it is too filthy to be employed for tailors' measures. When the leader slunk to his hole, discomfited, it was natural that those (happily very few) members of the Honourable House who are not ashamed to act with him should follow his example. What their constituents, the unwashed in person and depraved in mind, whose work they have been sent to Parliament to do—what these persons, who, by the apathy or the infatuation of the quiet and well-disposed, have been permitted to convert great constituencies into rotten boroughs for their own nominees—what these enemies of their country and of peace will say to the defection of their champions, we know not, and in truth care not. They will have learnt that their demagogue orators, loud and mouthing as they are without doors, are not to be trusted after they pass the barrier which separates "honourable members" from their constituents. High Holborn and John Street, Whitechapel and Stepney Green, are the regions where democracy is rampant and plain-spoken. In Westminster it is like one of VAN AMBURGH's wild beasts. The character of the animal is not changed, but fear keeps the brute in a state approaching to decent order.

Looking back to the ever-memorable Monday, it cannot but seem wonderful that it passed over without even a single outbreak which can be considered as approaching to a serious breach of the peace. The ruffians, who expected on the evening of that day to be sitting at Whitehall as a Provisional Government, had mischief in their hearts; but another occupant of those foul tenements, cowardice, prevented their attempting to execute it. What thus paralyzed them? Not a soldier was to be seen. There was, indeed, an abundant and effective military force ready to act if the occasion had unhappily occurred; but it was not needed. A hundred and fifty thousand men, with staves in their hands and English hearts in their bosoms, were however arrayed on the side of order, and their appearance struck panic into the base crew who, emerging from the dregs of society, on that day floated on the surface. The sound and honest portion of the British community (and it is immeasurably the largest portion) came forward as one man to defend their hearths and homes, their country and their Queen. The high-born noble, the inheritor of gentle though not of noble blood, the wealthy merchant, the decent tradesman, and the honest, industrious mechanic, with no patrimony but his hard and well-exercised hands, alike came forward to enrol themselves among the defenders of the state. We believe that to this last-named class we owe more than to all the rest. We are satisfied that the movement ruffians confidently expected to be joined by great bodies of the working classes, and that the active exertions of some for the preservation of the peace and the disposition to maintain it manifested by all, operated as a complete extinguisher on the hopes of those who looked to aggrandize themselves by breaking up the old institutions of the country. All honour, say we, to the honest and peaceable labouring classes of this great metropolis.

We are apt to be frightened by a great noise without inquiring into its origin. We have now seen that the vagabonds who prefer speechifying and parading to work are both few and cowardly. This, indeed, is not a reason for relaxing one jot of our assiduity in preparing against mischief; a very few mischievous men, nay a very few mischievous boys may produce immense evil if left to indulge their evil propensities unchecked. But the experience which we have had of the paucity of numbers and deficiency of spirit of those who are arranged against order, is, or ought to be, a warning against conceding to such persons anything from fear. There was a time when Englishmen knew not this word, and the late honest display of British spirit may convince us that a return of such time is not to be despaired of. Give what is right because it is right; but give nothing to ruffian clamour, or the glory of England is at an end.

The ill-conditioned persons who have lately disturbed us are exceedingly angry at the prospect of an increase in the measure of restriction to be placed upon their licentious, and more than licentious, tongues. To claim the privilege of writing treason would be too much even for them as yet, in this country at least; in Ireland there is no such delicacy; but they think it very hard that they may not spout treason with impunity. The power of putting a man on his trial for speaking only will, they say, lead to charges unfounded and unjust, arising from the ignorance, the misapprehension, or the wilful perversion of those who hear and report. But the agitators have the remedy in their own hands. Why is all this speaking necessary? In these days, when the power of the press is so vast, and when its productions circulate in every corner of the empire, and penetrate all the ramifications of society, what need is there for so much oral communication? Formerly the necessity might exist. It cannot be pretended now. Let these men write what they have to say, and print it. Then it cannot be misrepresented, for it is always ready to speak for itself. This would not answer their purpose, indeed, so well—first, because they must be more careful; and, secondly, because what a man reads he can weigh and consider with greater attention than what he only hears. But for the cause of truth this is an advantage. The shutting up of sedition-shops may be felt as a great grievance by those who let out their tongues for hire, or who have loftier objects in view as the reward of their trashy eloquence; but while the press is open and unrestricted (and God forbid that in this country it should ever be otherwise), men of all parties, all ranks, and all opinions, have abundant opportunities of communication; and opportunities far better adapted to promote the interests of truth and reason than any that can be afforded by letting loose on the country a deluge of seditious nonsense from the polluted lips of the base and unprincipled men who live, and thrive, and fatten on the unrighteous wages of agitation.

THE persevering attempts made by the British Government to effect the suppression of the detestable practices of Suttee and Infanticide throughout India are, we believe, now generally regarded as among the acts to which that Government may appeal, as enabling it to claim the character of the benefactor of the country in which it has so wonderfully attained the paramount authority. We are now waging war against the abomination of human sacrifices among the Khonds. On the propriety of our interference we should have supposed two opinions could not exist—we will not say among Christians, but among humane men, whatever their creed; and we have been rather startled to find in an Anglo-Indian paper a laboured attempt to excuse the horrors which we are striving to put down, and even to claim for them a very elevated character as religious rites.

The Bombay Times is a paper conducted with so much ability, and for the most part in such an excellent spirit, that we are more than ordinarily surprised to find any portion of its columns devoted to such a purpose. Giving the writer of the article to which we are referring all credit for sincerity, and judging from the general tone of his remarks that he has a reverence for sacred things, we cannot help expressing not merely our dissent from his conclusions, but our astonishment at the course by which he has arrived at them. He speaks of human sacrifice among the Khonds as "a sacrament," and seems to regard it as an evidence of the soundness of their faith, inasmuch as it implies (in the writer's estimation) a recognition of the doctrine of original sin and expiation by the shedding of blood. This view is justified in a long note, the authorship of which is attributed to a popular divine, but which we sincerely hope was not written by any Christian minister. We do not propose to enter into any discussion as to the origin of animal sacrifices. We might well be excused from offering our judgment on a question in regard to which varying, and in some instances conflicting, opinions have been maintained by such divines as SPENCER, LIGHTFOOT, HAMMOND, TAYLOR, OUTRAM, WHITEY, WARBURTON, KENNICOT, MAGNE, DAVISON, BENSON, and FABER. Apart from this consideration, we may justify our forbearance on the ground that the discussion of such a question, involving as it must a continual reference to the most mysterious and awful doctrine of our faith, is altogether unsuited to the columns of a newspaper. But while abstaining from any such discussion, we may remind the defenders of the Khonds and their murderous rites, that we are not left to reason out for ourselves a conclusion as to the character and acceptableness of human sacrifices. The book which the author of the note above referred to must regard as authoritatively binding has decided for us. Among the abominations of those on whom the chosen people of Israel were destined to inflict the divine vengeance, it is recorded most emphatically, and as an aggravated degree of wickedness which could not be surpassed, that "even their sons and their daughters they" had "burnt in the fire to their gods." Nor need we wonder at this. It is not possible to conceive an act of more appalling atrocity than one which combines the highest crime that can be committed against God—idolatry, with the highest that can be committed against man—murder. It is lamentable to find a Christian divine (if such he be) affording any countenance to acts which, though graced by the name of "Sacraments," are in truth demoniacal orgies.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"QUI HY" will, we think, see that if we opened our columns in one instance to parties either attacking or defending candidates for the office of Director of the East-India Company, we must do so in all cases where the limits of fair discussion were not transgressed. This would be obviously impracticable, and therefore we are compelled to decline all such communications.

The same answer will apply to "A PROPRIETOR."

We never heard of the work to which "G. G." refers, nor do we believe that such a work exists.

JANUS's letter is too much in accordance with his signature to be admissible.

The usual healths having been drunk with more than customary enthusiasm,

The CHAIRMAN rose to propose the toast of the evening. On such an occasion, he said, the East-India Company had been anxious, by assembling the élite of all parties, to do honour to talent and public virtue, irrespective of party distinction. (Hear.) The campaign of the Sutlej was fresh in the memories of all present, and he believed they would all agree with him in saying that the Punjab war was not one of aggression. An audacious enemy, vain of his power, looked with an anxious eye on the cultivated plains of India, and boldly came forward to plunder and ravage; but he was met by the indomitable courage of the British army; sepoy and Europeans emulating each other in heroism; he was repulsed, struck down, driven back in terror and confusion to his territories through the bloodstained Sutlej. (Cheers.) Our army entered the enemy's territory with all the order and regularity of a military promenade. They reached Lahore, where they met with no resistance, and encamped in a city which, a short time before, was a continued scene of bloodshed; where prince after prince had fallen under the dagger of the assassin, and where riot and licentiousness usurped the place of order and propriety. (Cheers.) Lord Hardinge re-established peace and prosperity, order again reigned, the army of the native rulers was subdued, and plains which had been ridden over by horsemen soon afforded food for the wants of man. (Cheers.) What could he say more? The noble lord had, in consequence, been favoured with the highest mark of her Majesty's approbation and esteem, received the thanks of both Houses of Parliament, of two administrations, and of the East-India Company, and he now hoped that the plaudits of the present company would echo the sentiments of a grateful country towards the noble viscount. (Loud cheers.)

LORD HARDINGE, after expressing his deepest gratitude for the compliment, said it was impossible for him not to feel proud of it, evinced, as it was, by so many eminent men of state, and under whom it had been his good fortune to have acted in public life. The last time he had been in the room the Hon. Chairman of the Company, Capt. Shepherd, said that he would carry with him to India the support and confidence of the Court of Directors. That pledge had been strictly fulfilled, and he had constantly received from them a most honourable support. (Hear, hear.) That it was which gave weight and authority to all his acts and performances in the arduous duties of governing a distant empire. He also had the satisfaction of being in communication with the head of the then Government, Sir R. Peel, with whom he had been for the greater period of his life in habits of intimacy and friendship. (Hear, hear.) He had the further satisfaction of being in communication with his noble friend the Earl of Ripon, President of the Board of Control, and considering these circumstances, he might say that so Governor ever departed from this country under more favourable auspices. His services had been most amply acknowledged by our most gracious Sovereign, by two successive Governments under whom he had the honour to act, including the approbation of Lord J. Russell, of which he was highly proud—for whom he entertained the deepest respect. (Cheers.) But above all, it had been his good fortune to obtain the approbation of that great man under whom he had served, and whose commendation, whether in civil or military affairs, was most gratifying. He alluded, of course, to the Duke of Wellington. (Cheers.) Thus encouraged and supported, he could not have failed to have used his best endeavours for the public service. From that spot, nearly four years ago, he assured the Directors of the Company that, having already witnessed the horrors and misery of war, he would go to India without any warlike propensity. But when the last native power had remained untried—a power with which we had never come into collision, and which had been raised into efficiency by Runjeet Singh—had attacked the British army, that attack had been met by Lord Gough with the ability and intrepidity which had always marked his military conduct. He, animated by the presence, and knowing the indomitable courage of British troops, soon rolled back the tide of invasion, and, in sixty days, the British flag was flying in Lahore. (Cheers.) Since his return, he had heard apprehensions expressed for the tranquillity of the Punjab, but, under the government of Lieut. Colonel Lawrence, he had no fears whatever upon that subject; and, for this reason, that of 100,000 soldiers in a state of efficiency which the empire of Runjeet could formerly shew, 30,000 were incorporated in the British service, and of 350 pieces of cannon, 250 were now at Calcutta, destined to be erected into a triumphal column. (Cheers.) Whether by the justice of British rule, or the force of British arms, he considered we were equally sure of maintaining the peace of that country. He regretted that the health of Major Lawrence would require a leave of absence to England, but his place would be well supplied by Sir F. Currie, than whom the civil service could not boast of a better qualified officer. Upon their integrity and ability, and the strictly impartial manner in which justice was distributed in India, we must mainly rely for the success of the Company and the happiness of the Indian empire. He had often before expressed his attachment to the military service, and he should ever feel proud of their achievements; but its success in India had not only answered all the objects of war, and secured to us an honourable and lasting peace, but had enabled the Governor of India to put an end to the horrors of Sutteeism and infanticide. That great measure had been grappled with some time ago by Lord Wm.

Bentinck, and had since been successfully followed up; so that the East-India Company might henceforth rest its stability not only upon the strength of its army, but upon the hope that the triumphs of war would henceforth be made subservient to the cause of humanity. (Hear, hear.) To the last hour of his existence he should feel the deepest interest in that empire. Under the governorship of Lord Dalhousie he had no doubt that a just and benevolent rule would gain the blessing of liberty for an empire having 12,000 miles of frontier, and containing a population of 100,000,000. The noble lord concluded by repeating his grateful acknowledgments for the honour conferred upon him that day, and sat down amidst general applause.

The next toasts were, the "Archbishop of Canterbury and the Church," responded to by the Primate, and the "Navy," acknowledged by Earl Spencer.

The CHAIRMAN, in proposing the next toast, said, an ancient poet told them that his lyre would discourse only on one string, and though he changed the strings, he found the same results. If he possessed a lyre, he thought it would be very much like Anacreon's,—there would be one theme with him, as one name was dear to them all, and associated with the glory of our arms and the grandeur of our country. Without further preface he would propose the health of his Grace the Duke of Wellington, all honour to him and the glorious, gallant army. (Enthusiastic cheers.)

The Duke of WELLINGTON rose to respond to the toast of the army, with which his name was associated. The army, he said, was justly proud of the man who had performed such services as the noble viscount on whom such deserved panegyrics had been bestowed that evening. When the noble lord was nominated Governor-General of India, he (the Duke of Wellington) stated that, under the then circumstances, a more desirable choice could not be made than that of his noble friend, and the result had more than fulfilled his expectations. (Cheers.) Having been connected with his noble friend in France and this country for many years, he was sensible of his ability, zeal, and patience. He was aware, also, that the difficulties of war were impending over the country to which he was about to be sent as governor. Having had the honour of serving in the East-India Company's service himself also, and having, therefore, had some experience of the great difficulties of warlike operations in the Indian empire, he was fully sensible of those which his noble friend would have to encounter; but he was fully confident also that his noble friend would overcome them, and he had done so. (Cheers.) He had had aggravated difficulties to contend against, and owing to the well-understood and well-considered policy which he felt it his duty to adopt and persevere in, of standing upon the defensive, which he did up to the last moment, those difficulties were by no means lessened. His noble friend, however, got the better of them, and he marched into the field an army capable of bringing the great contest in which the country was engaged in its own defence to an honourable and successful termination. (Hear, hear.) But that was not all. His noble friend, carrying with him all the powers and authority of Governor-General, left the seat of Government to superintend the operations of the army. He found that the noble lord who was at the head of that army,—able, valiant, intrepid, and experienced though he was,—required the assistance of a second in command, to enable him to carry on those operations with all the advantages which an army ought to have; and although Governor-General, and holding in his hands the whole civil government of the country, he nobly volunteered his services as lieutenant-general of the army, to acquire those great victories for which the country now stood indebted to him and the noble lord at the head of the army. (Cheers.) He believed his noble friend to be a singular instance of such an event; and he hoped that there never would be wanting officers in her Majesty's service to follow so brilliant an example. (Loud cheers.)

"Her Majesty's Ministers" was drunk, and briefly responded to by the Marquis of LANSDOWNE.

"The health of Sir J. Hobhouse" was then drunk amid loud cheers.

Sir JOHN HOBHOUSE expressed the great gratification with which he attended on that occasion to welcome home that distinguished man who had so gloriously administered the affairs of our mighty Eastern empire. For himself, he would only say that, from first to last, there was the most cordial and entire confidence between himself and Lord Hardinge, though for years they had been politically opposed. (Cheers.) The right hon. baronet concluded by proposing the health of the Chairman, which was drunk amidst loud cheers.

The CHAIRMAN, having returned thanks, proposed the health of Sir R. PEEL, who said that, as a private individual, and standing in no official relation to the Crown or the East-India Company, the compliment was one which he had no right to expect. He did not, however, misapprehend the ground upon which it had been paid to him. He did not forget that, four years ago, with the full approbation of his colleagues and the East-India Company, he secured to India the inestimable advantages of his noble friend's services. (Cheers.) In foregoing the services at home of his noble friend, they gave a strong proof of the interest they felt in the affairs of India. But they were deeply convinced that the wider the field in which his noble friend was enabled to develop his high faculties, the more would it redound to his honour and to the advantage of the country. (Hear, hear.) He could say with truth, that it was not with any retrospective regard to his glorious military career, nor to the high estimation in which they held his military character, that they had consented to part with his services, but because they believed that he possessed those qualities which suited him more than any other man for the trust which he was called on to undertake.

The healths of Lord GOUGH, Mr. MACAULAY, Lord DALHOUSIE, and several other toasts, followed, and it was near midnight when the company separated.

ENTERTAINMENT BY THE SENIOR UNITED SERVICE CLUB.

On the 7th inst. a magnificent entertainment was given to Viscount Hardinge by the Senior United Service Club. The company was, perhaps, the most distinguished that ever assembled on a similar occasion. Our space forbids the repetition of the brilliant list of persons present, but we may observe that it comprised the very acmé and élite of naval and military officers.

ENTERTAINMENT BY THE CARLTON CLUB.

On the 12th, the noble Viscount was entertained by the members of the Carlton club, when a glittering array of rank, talent, and fashion, gave a hearty welcome to the illustrious visitor.

PRESENTATION OF THE FREEDOM OF THE CITY.

The freedom of the City of London was, on the 13th, presented to the noble Viscount at a Court of Common Council, after a suitable address from the Chamberlain, who concluded by addressing his Lordship as a merchant tailor and citizen.

Lord HARDINGE returned thanks. He was deeply sensible of the great honour conferred upon him when he undertook the duties of the Government of India; but he did so in the hope of earning the approbation of his Sovereign, by promoting, to the best of his ability, the peace and prosperity of India. War, however, broke out, but the success of the army laid the foundation for a permanent peace. The welfare of India depended on the continuance of peace, and for its maintenance he most heartily prayed. The noble Lord then left the Court amid loud cheers.

ENTERTAINMENT AT THE MANSION HOUSE.

On the evening of the same day, the noble and gallant Viscount was entertained in a most sumptuous manner by the Lord Mayor. The dinner was attended by a numerous and most fashionable company.

PARLIAMENTARY PROCEEDINGS.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

APRIL 6.—The late ex-Rajah of Sattara.—Mr. G. THOMPSON moved,—

"That a select committee be appointed to inquire into the conduct of the Court of Directors of the East-India Company, and of the Government of India, towards the late Rajah of Sattara, and to report thereon to the House."

Mr. J. WILLIAMS seconded the motion.

Mr. G. C. LEWIS opposed it, on the ground that the only good that could have arisen from such an inquiry must have taken place during the rajah's life; and now that the prince was dead, no possible advantage could result from the appointment of the committee.

Sir J. W. HOPE, in the most indignant terms and amid great cheering, entirely repudiated the atrocious charges which the hon. member for the Tower Hamlets, on his own word alone, and without offering one tittle of evidence, had brought against Col. Ovens. Having been Chairman of the East-India Company when those charges were investigated, he thought it right to state that they were by no means new, that the hon. member had been reiterating them for years past, and as often as he had reiterated them had they been repudiated and disproved.

After a few words from Mr. C. ANSTET, the debate was adjourned on the motion of Mr. HUMS.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

APRIL 12.—The Attorney-General v. Robson.—Moncton v. the Attorney-General.—These petitions arose out of the celebrated Troutbeck case, a full report of which appeared in our paper some time since. We reserve a report of the present petition until judgment is given.

VICE-CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

APRIL 10.—Stewart v. Forbes.—The plaintiff in this case was formerly partner in Sir Charles Forbes's house, and claimed to be entitled to a proportionable share of the profits of the "suspense shares," as those shares are termed which fall in by the retirement of partners, several such retirements having taken place while the plaintiff was a partner. The plaintiff argued that, as there was no deed of partnership, the profits must be divided equally; to which the defendant contended that he had always exercised absolute authority, that he had advanced all the capital, and had been in the habit of distributing the profits as he thought fit, and that the plaintiff had already received his full share. The evidence on both sides was immense.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ELECTION OF DIRECTORS OF THE EAST-INDIA COMPANY.—On the 12th instant a ballot was taken at the East-India House for the election of six directors, in the room of Sir Robert Campbell, Bart.; William Joseph Eastwick, Esq.; Sir James Weir Hogg, Bart., M.P.; Lieut.-col. William Henry Sykes; John Claremont Whiteman, Esq.; and Sir Hen. Willock, K.L.S., who went out by rotation. At six o'clock the glasses were closed and delivered to the scrutineers, who reported that the election had fallen on Henry Alexander, Esq.; the Hon. William Henry Leslie Melville, Major James Oliphant, John Shepherd, Esq.; Francis Warden, Esq.; and Major-general Jas. Caulfield, C.B. On the same day, at a Court of Directors, the thanks of the Court were unanimously voted to Henry St. George Tucker, Esq., chairman; and Lieutenant-general Sir James Law Lushington, G.C.B., deputy chairman, for their great application and attention to the affairs of the Company during the past year. On the following day, at a Court of Directors, the directors elected on the preceding day took their oaths and seats, and Lieutenant-general Sir James Law Lushington, G.C.B., was elected chairman, and Major-general Archibald Galloway, C.B. deputy chairman for the year ensuing.

THE EAST-INDIAN RAILWAY.—A special general meeting of the proprietary body of this company was held on the 18th, when it appeared that the company were not then in a situation to deposit the 100,000*l.* (required by the East-India Company to be paid into their treasury before the 1st of May) without making a call. The bill in Parliament might be considered as passed. The company had raised 100,000*l.*, expended 50,000*l.*, and consequently 50,000*l.* remained towards the government deposit; the directors therefore recommended a call of 2*l.* per share on the thirty-eight thousand shares on which 1*l.* had already been paid. This would raise 76,000*l.*, and would complete the deposit and leave a surplus. After some discussion this was agreed to, it being understood that the amount so raised would be invested in Government securities, and returned with interest in case the directors could not carry out a satisfactory modification of the terms proposed by the East-India Company. Either a guarantee of a large rate of interest, or an extension of the time of the existing guarantee, was to be asked from the East-India Company.

TOTAL LOSS OF THE "NABOB," EAST INDIAMAN.—The Nabob, East Indiaman, of Liverpool, while on her homeward voyage, was totally lost, by striking on the Erehon Rocks, which lie in the centre of the Dirouilles Sandbank, between the north-east end of Jersey and the coast of France. She was laden with sugar and rum; and had a crew of twenty-four, of whom eleven are lost. The captain, chief officer, and second mate are among the survivors. At the time of her striking, the wind was west, and the weather thick; and it is supposed that by an error of her log, she was thirty or forty miles south of her reckoning.

FAILURE OF AN INDIAN HOUSE.—We greatly regret to have to announce, that the East-India firm, Messrs. Birley, Corrie and Co., of Manchester, have been compelled to suspend payment. The house experienced a temporary difficulty in October last, which, it was hoped, it had surmounted.

HARWICH ELECTION.—Sir John Cam Hobhouse, President of the Board of Commissioners for the Affairs of India, has been returned for Harwich, at the vacancy occasioned by the unseating of J. Attwood, Esq.

CANDIDATES FOR THE DIRECTION.—General Caulfield having succeeded on the late ballot for the election of directors of the East-India Company, the contest on the next vacancy will probably be between Mr. H. T. Prinsep and Major Moore. Mr. Prinsep was fifteen years secretary to the Supreme Government of India, his term of office extending from the government of Lord Hastings to that of Lord Auckland. Subsequently, he was elevated to a seat in council. Major Moore was many years in the Nizam's service, and during part of the time held the office of military secretary to the resident at Hyderabad. Both the above candidates seem making vigorous preparations for the struggle. The Right Hon. Holt Mackenzie is chairman of Mr. Prinsep's committee, which sits at 71, Cornhill. M. De Vitre, Esq., holds the same post in that of Major Moore, which sits at the London Tavern.

ENGAGEMENT OF SHIPS.—The ship Asiatic has been engaged for the conveyance of troops to Madras, and the Wellesley for the conveyance of stores to Calcutta.

JAMES C. MELVILL, Secretary.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK.

Ladies and Gentlemen,—

WE beg to offer you our grateful acknowledgments for the honour you have conferred upon us by re-electing us into the Direction.

Trusting that the Proprietors will ever find us deserving of the confidence they have reposed in us,

We have the honour to be, with great respect,

Ladies and Gentlemen,

Your most obedient and very humble servants,

HENRY ALEXANDER,
W. H. LESLIE MELVILLE,
JAMES OLIPHANT,
JOHN SHEPHERD,
F. WARDEN.

East-India House, April 12, 1848.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK.

Ladies and Gentlemen,—

I THANK you heartily and sincerely for the honour you have conferred upon me in electing me a Director of the Hon. East-India Company, and beg to assure you that it shall be my earnest endeavour seasonally and faithfully to perform my duty to you and to the State.

I have the honour to remain, Ladies and Gentlemen,

Your obliged and faithful servant,

April 12th, 1848.

J. CAULFIELD, Major-General.

Major-General Caulfield	1,488
Major Moore	618

Majority 834

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK.

Ladies and Gentlemen,—

THE result of the ballot of this day has fully justified the expectations of those by whose advice I was induced to offer no opposition to the election of Major-General Caulfield. He has obtained the vacant seat in the Direction of the East-India Company by a very large majority over the only candidate who contested it with him. Permit me now again to call your attention to my position amongst the candidates for this honour, and to the claims of service on which my pretensions to your favour are based. I have received assurances of support and promises of votes from so many Proprietors, that I feel quite confident of success at the very next vacancy, and I am prepared at any time to go to the ballot agreeably to the intention declared in my published announcement of the 11th ult.

I have the honour to be, Ladies and Gentlemen,

Your very obliged and obedient servant,

H. T. PRINSEP.

37, Hyde Park Gardens, April 12th, 1848.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK.

My Lords, Ladies, and Gentlemen,—

BY your kind support I yesterday polled 618 votes, which a substantial mark of favour will, I trust, satisfy you that, in proceeding to the ballot, I adopted the course most consonant to the wishes of a great and influential body of the Proprietors, while at the same time I redeemed the pledge which I had previously given. In hastening to return my warm acknowledgments to those who have afforded me their valuable aid, and in most earnestly soliciting a continuance of it, I beg to assure them and the Proprietors at large, that, with the additional strength now secured to me, I entertain a confident hope of success on the occurrence of the next vacancy, when I shall again present myself to your notice, trusting that such of the Proprietors as may be now liberated from their engagements will be induced to honour me with their support.

I am, with great respect,

My Lords, Ladies, and Gentlemen,

Your faithful servant,

J. A. MOORE, Major,

(Late Military Secretary at Hyderabad, Deccan).

19, Portland Place, April 12th, 1848.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK.

Ladies and Gentlemen,—

HAVING been induced by the flattering assurances of support which I have received from many influential parties connected with the East-India Company to offer myself as a CANDIDATE for a seat in the Direction of their affairs, I beg to inform you that it is my intention, on a future occasion, to solicit the honour of your support.

For a number of years I have been resident in London as a merchant, and have taken considerable interest in the affairs of India.

My uncle, Sir John Gladstone, with whom my late father was then in partnership, sent the first licensed ship from Liverpool to India at the opening of trade in 1814, and the connection of my family with that country has ever since been maintained.

I have, therefore, no hesitation in assuring you of my anxious desire to promote to the best of my ability the interests and future welfare of our great Eastern empire; and trusting that my pretensions may meet with the favourable consideration of the Proprietors at large,

I have the honour to remain, Ladies and Gentlemen,

Your most obedient servant,

WILLIAM GLADSTONE.

7, Austin Friars, London, 12th April, 1848.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK.

Ladies and Gentlemen,—

GENERAL CAULFEILD'S Election on Wednesday last has removed one of the Candidates to whom many of my friends were pledged previously to their promise of supporting me.

It is not my intention to proceed to the ballot at the next election, but I fully expect that the result thereof will place me in a position to claim the suffrages, upon the vacancy which may next follow, of those Proprietors who have kindly promised me their votes, in consideration of my own claims and services, and in remembrance of those of my late respected father, who, for twenty-five years, held the office to which I have the honour to aspire.

I take this opportunity of returning my warmest thanks for the flattering encouragement which I have received in my canvass; and in the earnest hope that my many kind friends and supporters will continue their exertions in my behalf,

I have the honour to be, Ladies and Gentlemen,

Your most obedient servant,

JOHN CARNAC MORRIS.

10, Mansfield Street, 14th April, 1848.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK.

Ladies and Gentlemen,—

ENCOURAGED by many promises of support from my friends, I have the honour to inform you that it is my intention to offer myself as a CANDIDATE for a seat in the East-India Direction on the first favourable occasion. I shall only add, that should I, through your kindness, be so fortunate as to succeed in this my great object of ambition, my time and the best energies of my mind shall be devoted to your interests in promoting the welfare of our empire in India.

I have the honour to be, Ladies and Gentlemen,

Your most obedient humble servant,

DUDDY COURTTS MARJORIBANKS.

34, Wimpole Street, 17th Feb. 1848.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

GENERAL CAULFEILD having this day obtained a seat in the Direction by a very large majority, permit me to state that the result of my canvass exceeds my most sanguine expectation, and leads me to hope that upon the occasion of an early vacancy I shall feel myself justified in proceeding to the ballot with entire confidence of success.

I cannot sufficiently express the sense of gratitude which I entertain towards the general body of Proprietors, many of whom I am aware are actuated by motives independent of my own claims, and have so handsomely tendered me their support. I would only add, that this circumstance must be an additional incentive to a proper discharge of my duties whenever I may be placed in the proud position to which I aspire.

I have the honour to be, Ladies and Gentlemen,

Your most obedient and very humble servant,

JOHN HARVEY ASTELL.

H. & T. PEAT, SADDLERS, HARNESS-MAKERS, &c., No. 167, PICCADILLY, LONDON, avail themselves of the present opportunity gratefully to acknowledge the patronage which they have received for so many years from their numerous connections in India, and to solicit a continuance of that preference which it has ever been their endeavour to deserve. At the same time, they beg to state that, from their very severe losses, they are compelled to decline the execution of any orders unless accompanied by an order for payment (when shipped) upon some agent or mercantile house in London.

It is also necessary that the name of an agent at the presidency should be given, to whom the goods are to be consigned, as the utmost despatch will be in the shipments from London.

H. and T. Peat feel bound, in justice to themselves, to make it known that large quantities of saddlery, &c., bearing their name and address, which are not of their make, are sent out to India, and elsewhere, by other parties, and are of very inferior qualities. Gentlemen should, therefore, send their orders direct to H. and T. P. to ensure articles of their manufacture.

All military orders, whether Cavalry, Infantry, Staff, Artillery, or Engineer, will be executed according to the latest regulation, and a discount of 5 per cent. allowed for cash payments.

N.B.—H. and T. P. beg to recommend for durability their 10, 11, and 12 lb. saddles, in preference to the lighter ones of 7, 8, and 9 lbs., at present so much in demand for India; and likewise to observe that, in all cases where the goods are not insured, H. and T. P. cannot be accountable for any damage the same may receive after shipment.

I.

A DICTIONARY, HINDUSTANI-ENGLISH, AND ENGLISH-HINDUSTANI. By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D. Royal 8vo. £2 12s. 6d. cloth.

* * This work has been undertaken in order to meet the exigency of our day—viz. a copious and portable Hindustani Dictionary at a moderate cost. It has been the compiler's aim to accomplish this object, not by the omission or abridgment of any words and phrases, but by the adoption of a small, distinct, and economical type, whereby he is enabled to lay before the public, in one volume royal octavo, of about 1,000 pages, the most complete Hindustani Dictionary yet offered for sale. The first part—Hindustani and English—may now be procured. It contains more words (by some thousands) than have ever been previously collected in one work by former compilers. The second part—English and Hindustani—is also by far the most copious of the kind that has yet appeared. The author having devoted the greater portion of his life to the study of the Oriental languages, and upwards of twenty years to instructing others therein, has had every advantage in the compilation of this laborious book, which he trusts will not be deemed unworthy of extensive patronage.

ECONOMY! ECONOMY!

STEPHENS' DYES FOR STAINING WOOD, as a SUBSTITUTE for PAINT. For Decorating Churches, Large Public Rooms, and Theatres, as well as Private Dwellings.

When economy in expenditure of material and time is of importance, these Dyes will be found of the greatest advantage, as they give a rich colour to plain woods, while they reflect all the beauty of the natural graining, which is so superior to imitations by art, and, at the same time, avoid the disagreeable smell and deleterious consequences of paint.

The Dyes or stains, are in bottles of 6d. and 1s. each, and at 10s. per gallon. The Oak Colour may be obtained in powder at 8s. per lb., which dissolves in water to form the liquid, and 1lb. will make one gallon of stain.—N.B. The trade supplied. Also,

STEPHENS' CONCENTRATED AND SOLUBLE INK POWDERS, which contain the chief elementary parts, in a dry state, of his various well-known inks or writing fluids, yet so readily soluble in the water, that by putting the contents of a paper packet into a bottle, and adding to it the quantity of water indicated on the directions, it is ready for immediate use. The economy of this article in carriage, from its reduced bulk, may be estimated when it is considered that one part of the powders will make twenty times its weight and bulk of liquid ink.

Samples of the smaller packets can be sent by post to those who may wish to make a trial of them.

All the above prepared and sold by HENRY STEPHENS, Inventor and Proprietor of the Writing Fluids, 54, Stamford-street, Blackfriars-road, London, and by Booksellers and Stationers throughout the Kingdom.

ROWLAND and SON, 90, Hatton Garden, London, beg to caution the Nobility and Gentry against being misled by the attempts of some Shopkeepers, who, to compounds of their own manufacture, give the titles of "Macassar Oil," "Kalydor," and "Odonto," some under the implied sanction of Royalty and the Government Departments, with similar attempts at deception, while they copy the Labels, Bills, Advertisements, and Testimonials (substituting fictitious names and addresses for the real of the original preparations. S. W. SILVER and CO. CLOTHIERS, NAVAL, MILITARY, and GENERAL OUTFITTERS and CONTRACTORS, respectfully acquaint the public, that they have completed the alterations at their warehouses, 66 and 67, CORNHILL, which enables them to concentrate and exhibit all the requirements of an OUTFIT. Being the manufacturers (with experienced managers) of the chief and most expensive portions of OUTFITS, they are enabled to produce and render them at WHOLESALE PRICES; thus preventing MILITARY and NAVAL OFFICERS, CADETS, and PASSENGERS generally sacrificing the usual intermediate profit. LADIES' OUTFITS (which are under the management of Females) on similar terms.

SILVER and Co. having a correspondent in nearly every ENGLISH COLONY, their customers may at all times avail themselves of their assistance. SILVER and Co. pack and ship their customers' outfits, clear and warehouse their baggage homewards, procure and give SHIP-SAILING Information, outwards or homewards, without receiving a commission for such business. Moreover, they do not allow the too usual commission to persons who introduce customers to them, that purchasers may derive every advantage. For example, individuals who are about to leave for India are generally inundated with applications and lists from Outfitters, who obtain the name and address of the party going abroad from persons to whom they pay (if they supply the Outfit) so large a commission for the information, as to materially increase the amount of the Outfit. Now, SILVER and Co. never forward a list of necessities to any one, unless directed to do so by the party (or friend) going abroad. Thus SILVER and Co.'s prices are not burthened with commission, because all recommendations to apply to them are pure and disinterested.

THE OUTFITTING WHOLESALE and RETAIL CLOTHING DEPARTMENTS, &c., are at 66 and 67, CORNHILL, and at LIVERPOOL. THE SHIRT DEPARTMENT for home use is at No. 10, CORNHILL. THE WORKSHOPS for Clothing, at 4, Bishopsgate-street Within; for SHIRTS and CABIN FURNITURE, at 33 and 34, Nassau-place, Commercial-road; and for SHIRTS, STAYS, BRACES, &c., at LANDPORT, near PORTSMOUTH.

THE HAND-BEDSTEAD FOR CADETS, weight 17 lbs.

BESEMERES and SONS, CLOTHIERS, OUTFITTERS, and Ready-made Linen Warehousemen, invite overland travellers to India to inspect this PORTABLE BEDSTEAD, price 12s. 6d., invented and made only by them. Although so light, it is strong, compact, of full size, and may be used without a mattress; it passes readily into a bag 6 inches in diameter, 24 long. Bedstead, bedding, blankets, sheets, quilt, &c., packed in one of their Waterproof Regulation Overland Trunks, weight under 50 lbs. Overland Trunks, One Guinea each. Lists of Outfit for Cadets and Assistant-Surgeons, estimates and information of every expense of the passage and journey, forwarded by post. Lists of Linen, priced, may also be had.—Outfitting Warehouses, Nos. 61 to 64, Houndsditch, London.

MOURNING,—COURT, FAMILY, AND COMPLIMENTARY.

THE PROPRIETOR of the LONDON GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE begs respectfully to remind families whose bereavements compel them to adopt Mourning attire, that every article (of the very best description) requisite for a complete outfit of Mourning may be had at his establishment at a moment's notice. Widow's and Family Mourning is always kept made up, and a note, descriptive of the Mourning required, will ensure every thing necessary for the occasion being sent immediately, either in town or into the country, and on the most reasonable terms. It is also to be observed that, as both milliners and dressmakers are constantly employed in making up articles in crape (at all times difficult), superiority in mode and unusual neatness may be relied on.

THRESHER'S INDIA GAUZE WAISTCOATS.

THESE really important articles of under clothing, although manufactured expressly for India, are equally valuable in all tropical climates, and are strongly recommended by all medical men as the most effectual preventative of the many diseases arising from check of perspiration to which the residents in warm climates are so particularly liable. This manufacture possesses all the advantages, without the inconvenience, of flannel waistcoats: the texture is light, soft, and delicate, perfectly free from all irritating or disagreeable qualities, and a very superior absorbent, consequently the very best description of under-waistcoat that can be worn in India, or in any warm climate. The valuable qualities of THRESHER'S INDIA GAUZE WAISTCOATS have been long and have been long tested in India, and the very general approval and consequent demand for them has given rise to many inferior imitations, which, with a view to deceive, have been variously marked India Gauze, Oriental Gauze, Gauze Vignola, &c. Messrs. THRESHER and GLENNY, therefore, beg most particularly to impress upon all parties the necessity of applying direct to their establishment, 152, STRAND, LONDON, for any they may require, and also most especially to caution the public against purchasing any article of the kind except those which are marked THRESHER'S INDIA GAUZE, as none others can be depended upon.

These waistcoats are made both for Ladies and gentlemen, and Messrs. Thresher and Glennly undertake to forward them in dozens or half-dozen to every part of England and the principal towns of Ireland and Scotland, carriage free, at the following prices:—Gentlemen's, 78s. per dozen, and Ladies', 66s. per dozen; and also to pack and forward them, free of expense, to any agent in India, by the overland route, at the following additional rates, viz. 12s. per dozen to Calcutta, Madras, and Ceylon, and 18s. per dozen to Bombay.

OUTFITS TO INDIA, BY SHIP AND OVERLAND. Every particular connected with outfits to India, both for ladies and gentlemen, including detailed lists of requisite clothing, uniforms, &c. &c. for every appointment, with the necessary variations for the outfits of CIVILIANS, CADETS, ASSISTANT-SURGEONS, &c. together with every information respecting passage by ship and by the overland route, baggage, packing, &c., will be forwarded on application to Messrs. Thresher and Glennly, as above.

SUMMARY & REVIEW OF EASTERN NEWS.

THE very short interval which has been allowed us for ruminating on the contents of the last Mail before we received another, has offered little space for the occurrence of great events, if, indeed, great events were to be looked for. None such, however, have occurred. The news brought by the present arrival is not calculated to excite very deep feelings of any kind. Things in general remain much as they were, and the few incidents that call for report will scarcely afford the slightest ground for comment.

The affairs of the Union Bank do not appear to have made any great advance towards a settlement. Various legal proceedings were in progress, some with the view, it is said, of coercing refractory shareholders, others having for their object the settlement of the Post Bill question. The latter object has not yet been effected, the proceedings on the subject having been postponed.

The stoppage of the house of HAWORTH, HARDMAN, and Co. of Calcutta, has taken place, and some Armenian firms are said to be tottering.

The ruling powers appear to have been seized with a sudden fit of legislation, and in compliance with the prevailing doctrines, the distinction, in regard to customs duties, between goods imported or exported in British or foreign bottoms has been abolished. The papers are so full of gratulation on this event, that we might suppose every man in India had a personal interest in the matter. Time will shew how the change works.

Sir JOHN PETER GRANT, late one of the judges of the Supreme Court of Fort William (of wild elephant fame), has resigned his seat on the bench for the purpose of retiring to England, and has thereupon received the usual amount of honours from the resident community.

At BOMBAY the approaching departure of Mr. CLERK had furnished occasion for a public meeting, the proceedings of which will be found fully reported in another part of our journal. No man ever left behind a fairer fame, nor a greater measure of regret, than the departing Governor.

From SCINDE and the PUNJAB nothing is to be added to the items of information presented in our selections.

From GWALIOR the death of the Minister, RAM RAO PHALKEN, is reported. Our last information respecting him was that he had been so ill that his life was despaired of, but had so far recovered as to be pronounced out of danger. Medical prognostications, however, sometimes fail in India not less than in England, and the Minister of the Scindian State has, despite the doctors, paid the debt of nature. He has been succeeded by MAMA SAHEB, the Maharajah's uncle. The BARZA BHABEE, who was present in Gwalior, bent on effecting a matrimonial connection between her daughter and the Maharajah, not being regarded at the time as a very desirable visitor, received a civil hint that she might retire, and she took it.

Relating to AFFGHANISTAN, we find the following in the Delhi Gazette of the 15th of March, and 18th of the same month :—

"Intelligence from Kabul to the 21st of February has been received since our last notice of Central-Asian affairs. Our correspondent gives news respecting the progress of Yar Mahomed of Herat, who, though still encamped at Shibberghan, had inspired sufficient terror into the rulers of Bulk, Khooloom, Koondeoz, and other minor places, to induce them to send deputies to him deprecating further aggression. The King of Bokhara had, on the other hand, warned him to return to Herat under pain of his displeasure. Yar Mahomed, feeling himself strengthened, probably since his last missive, replied that the Dooranee rule extended to the left bank of the Amoo (Oxus), and that he was ready to enforce his claims against all comers, including the King of Bokhara, whom he declared himself willing to meet in battle on either side of the river.—At Kabul the Ameer was again giving himself up to the pleasures of the table, having appointed Sirdars Afzul Khan and Akram Khan to the charge of the government for the time. A number of the heads of the Ghilzales who fell in the late engagement in the valley of Lughan, were taken to Kabul by mule-loads, and having been exhibited for some days in heaps, were buried near the shrine of Khizr. The roads had been rendered almost impassable by the quantity of snow.—The several chiefs of the Khaiber, &c. having applied to Sirdar Haider Khan for their ordinary stipends, were told they had performed their duties so negligently that they should receive nothing unless they agreed to certain conditions; one of them that they should visit Cabool once a year. They replied they would think about it, but must in the meantime have their allowances, and they will doubtless receive them, as Haider Khan, with the Ghilzale insurrection still on his hands, can be in no condition to oppose their demands.

"In our latest advices from Cabool, which were, it seems, delayed in the passes on account of the snow; the quantity that had fallen in and about the town is represented to have been so great that people were almost prisoners in their houses. The chiefs of the durbar had been prevented from waiting on the Ameer, and his Highness was himself unable to leave the Bala Hissar, except on the occasion of the death of Moula Mahomed Ghos Hafiz, Peshawuree, a judge held in great estimation, and who had been for twenty years a resident in Cabool. It has been determined to put the fort of Ghuznee into a state of complete repair. It was also proposed to send a small party as far as Saighan and Kamro to watch the movements of Yar Mahomed Khan, and report on his proceedings; and it transpired that the Herat chief had, on his march into Toorkestan, been at one time close to the camp of Sirdar Akram Khan, when the latter was in the Hazarah country, and that he knew of it, but never represented the fact to the Ameer. Yar Mahomed, having induced the chiefs of Toorkestan to acknowledge him as their head, had commenced his retrograde march towards Herat. Sirdar Haider Khan had passed over from Jellalabad into the district of Koner, and, having encamped at Killa Shabee, commenced collecting the revenues of the country. This duty accomplished, he struck his camp, and proceeded to Dara Noor."

Of the melancholy circumstances connected with the loss of the General Wood, and the murder of the officers by the convicts, very full accounts will be found in another place.

We have the following under the head BORNEO :—

"The Amelia, Captain Barclay, arrived here (Singapore) on the 24th inst. (March), having left Bruni on the 18th ult. There were rumours prevailing of the Salu pirates being engaged in fitting out an expedition against Bruni to revenge the death of the pirates put to death by the Sultan after the defeat of the pirate squadron near Bruni, by the H. C. steamer Nemesis last year. The Spanish expedition will probably cause such designs to be laid aside for the present, as the pirates will have enough of fighting nearer at home. Captain Barclay reports that the Sultan of Bruni is extremely anxious to encourage the emigration of the Chinese to his territories, for agricultural purposes, as he is desirous to see the extensive cultivation of pepper and other articles which formerly prevailed at Bruni again revived. The traces of the plantations formed in former times by the Chinese settlers are still to be seen, but obscured by the jungle, which has usurped the place of the pepper-vines and other plants which flourished in other days under the care of the industrious sons of Han."

BENGAL.

THE GREAT FAILURES FIFTEEN YEARS AGO.

THE papers announce the payment of an additional, though almost infinitesimal, dividend on some of the estates of the great houses which failed from fourteen to eighteen years ago. It is not improbable that, but for the declaration of want of confidence in the management of the Insolvent Court, recently proclaimed at several meetings of creditors, the payment of these dividends might have been still postponed for an indefinite period. Nothing can more aptly illustrate the snail-like progress of business in this country,—except in the career of insolvency,—than the extreme tardiness which has been exhibited in winding up the affairs of these estates, which, for greater security and expedition, have been made over to an official assignee, and which have afforded the means of a fortune to three successive assignees. A friend, who has access to the most accurate information regarding the estates of the great firms, the fall of which involved the European community in India in ruin, has sent us a memorandum of the sums for which they failed, and the amount of successive dividends; and as the remembrance of those great disasters is gradually fading away from the public mind, and the majority of those who are now in India have only a kind of indistinct traditional knowledge of them, we have given the statement below. It affords a curious index of the mode in which the commerce of India was formerly managed, and of the extent to which the capital of the country was concentrated in the hands of a small number of establishments under the old system. It will scarcely appear credible to those who have remarked the insignificant amount for which houses now fail, that there were at one time existing in the City of Palaces six firms holding in deposit nearly fifteen crores of rupees belonging to the public!

LOANS TO THE MILITARY BRANCH OF THE SERVICE.

THE General Orders contain the report of a Court Martial held on an officer at this presidency—which will be found in another column—who had borrowed the sum of 5,000 rupees from the Delhi Bank, and granted an order for the payment of it on a gentleman in Calcutta, which was dishonoured for want of assets. He has escaped the penalty which he would have incurred if there had been proof of his having drawn the order with the full knowledge that it was not likely to be honoured, and has been visited only with a severe reprimand from the Commander-in-Chief. It is to be regretted that his Excellency had not embraced this opportunity of officially discountenancing a practice which so deeply affects the comfort, independence, and respectability of the Bengal army. The facilities which the provincial banks afford for borrowing money are without example in India; and there is every reason to believe that at no former period was debt the rule, and independence the exception, so extensively as at the present time. Possibly there may not exist the same fearful amount of embarrassment in any individual case, which was formerly exhibited; the debts may be on a smaller scale, but the inconvenience of debt is more generally diffused through the junior ranks of the army. The six great commercial firms in Calcutta, which failed sixteen years ago for twelve millions sterling, were for many years the great loan establishments of this presidency; but the great bulk of their accommodation was granted to gentlemen in the civil service, sometimes to a stupendous amount; and the loans to officers in the army were to a comparatively small extent. When they were swallowed up in the gulf of bankruptcy, the provincial banks arose to occupy their place. The Agra bank led the way, and four others have been successively established upon the same basis. These establishments are neither banks of issue, nor of commercial accommodation; they may be considered as the agency for transferring money from those who possess it to those who need it. The shareholders consist of those who are economical, the debtors of those who are careless or extravagant; and it may be remarked generally that it is through the machinery of these banks that one-half the service has become indebted to the other half. Through them a sum little short of a million and a half sterling has been distributed in loans among the officers of the public service; and a reference to their books will at once disclose the relative positions of the public officers, more especially as it regards the extent to which their independence has been impaired.

It is the facility with which loans may be obtained, that has worked so deplorable a change in the prospects of the service. Young men who may have come out to India, with a strong love of independence, finding how readily assistance is granted by the banks, and seeing that the circumstance of being in their books, so far from being regarded as a disadvantage, is rather viewed in the light of a fashionable distinction, find little difficulty in parting with their old fashioned habits of economy. A little inconsiderateness throws them three or four thousand rupees in debt; creditors dun, and a letter is written to one of the great friends of the army, secretary to some bank, for a loan; two or three brother officers stand security; a life insurance is given, and the yoke is at once rivetted, which is destined for ten, twelve, or fifteen years to drink up the spirits, and to destroy the comfort and independence of the victim. An assignment is given on his allowances which leaves him in a state of deplorable destitution during the whole of that dreary period in which he is called to pay the penalty of a short-lived indiscretion, which he had mistaken for enjoyment. The allowances of a subaltern in India, though larger than those in any other service in the world, are still scanty in reference to his position in society and the general scale of living, and it is only by dint of the most unremitting economy that he can "make both ends meet," and maintain the efficiency of his military equipment and his station as a gentleman. The result of a resort to the Agra Bank is to impose on the officer the necessity of accomplishing that upon half his income which it was so extremely difficult for him to effect upon his full pay and allowances. Considering that the rate of interest, including the insurance, rarely falls short of thirteen per cent., an officer who has incurred a debt of 5,000 Rs. to the bank cannot expect to regain his freedom under six or seven years, by the assignment of 150 Rs. a month; but in how few instances is any officer able to continue so large an appropriation of his income uninterruptedly through this long period, amid the new and unexpected demands which military movements, or a failure of health, or family claims, may entail upon him? In how many instances does it happen that his embarrassments are protracted through double that period?

If Government was enabled, without any indelicate inquisition, to ascertain the extent to which the independence of the officers of the Bengal army has been affected by the facility of obtaining loans from the Mofussil banks, the imperative necessity of establishing some check on the practice would become immediately apparent. It would be found that the loss of independence is not confined to the unfortunate individual who has been constrained to take up a loan. He is obliged to find two sureties, generally from among his brother officers, and hence every such loan interferes with the freedom of no fewer than three individuals. This has occasioned the remark, who's is, we fear, too true, that under this system of accommodation, there are few officers to be found who are not bound to the banks either for their own debts or for those of others. What may be the effect of this arrangement on the eventual stability of those establishments it is not easy to foresee, as there are no means of knowing how far the loans are in every instance protected by the validity of the security against any chance of disappointment. We are bound to suppose that the banks have hitherto sustained no losses whatever by bad loans, because none have been announced, and there is a general impression that the funds which have been given out on accommodation are very sharply watched. But that is the business of the shareholders, and we have to do with the debtors; and there can be no hesitation in saying that they can never be justified in incurring debts so disproportionate to their means of liquidation, and that if any individual in this predicament in London was constrained to seek the protection of the Insolvent Court, it would not be granted to him. Neither are the banks justified in advancing money to such an extent to any individual, who has no prospect of discharging them under six or seven years, and it is therefore highly desirable that there should be some salutary limitation fixed on the amount of accommodation.—Friend of India.

MILITARY MASSES.

THE Delhi Gazette intimates that military messes in India will shortly be placed on the same footing as messes in her Majesty's army; in other words, that they will be made compulsory, and that every regiment will be required to keep up a mess establishment. A mess may become, according to circumstances, either a source of advantage, or the occasion of great inconvenience. By bringing the officers together daily, it is calculated to promote good fellowship in the regiment, and to soften down any of the asperities which arise in the intercourse of life. It strengthens the esprit de corps, and wherever that spirit be good, the offspring of high principle, and sound wisdom, the diffusion of it is a blessing. It may also be the means of increasing comfort by promoting economy. On the other hand, there is a natural tendency to extravagance in mess arrangements, unless they are under the control of firm and judicious management. We could point to instances in which the influence of the individual to whom they have been entrusted has produced the most beneficial effect on the happiness of the regiment, for independence in this country is an essential ingredient of happiness. We know of other instances in which a general indifference to expense has involved the mess itself in difficulties, and subjected the officers to the necessity of apologizing for a want of punctuality, by which the honour of the corps has been diminished; and in such cases, the individual position of the officers is too frequently found to be little better than that of their mess establishment. It is against the growth of this feeling of indifference to extravagance and its embarrassments that the most careful precautions must be employed. We had occasion recently to allude to one corps in her Majesty's service, which had advertized the sale of superfluous wines to the extent of more than 16,000 Rs. This vast stock can scarcely have been accumulated without much individual self-denial, or much individual embarrassment, and such an expenditure is most especially to be avoided. If the military authorities make the joining a mess compulsory, they are bound to afford efficient protection to the prudent and economical against the consequences of extravagance in their brother officers. And as the object of enforcing the order is simply to promote the comfort and well-being of regiments, by an arrangement which, however, may produce a contrary result, we are almost inclined to recommend a monthly return to head-quarters of the general accounts of the mess, that is, if such a degree of inquisition be not considered an indelicate interference with private freedom. It is not impossible that the obligation of such a statement might produce a silent but salutary influence.—Friend of India, March 18.

CAPTAIN HANNYNGTON'S PENSION FUND.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE BENGAL HURKARU.

Dear Sir,—The subscribers to Captain (Hannyngton's) proposed pension (or as I would rather term it saving) fund will be happy to learn that three of the eminent actuaries in England to whom he submitted his tables, &c., have reported most favourably on them.

I have pleasure in sending you a copy of their report.

I remain, dear Sir, yours truly,

A SUBSCRIBER.

Report on Queries submitted by Capt. J. C. Hannington.

Query 1.—Whether Major Henderson's and Mr. Christie's mortality tables, combined as they have been in Captain Hannington's computations, form a safe basis for a Military Pension Fund?

Opinion.—We are of opinion that the above tables, combined in the judicious manner they have been by Capt. Hannington, do form a safe basis for a Military Pension Fund.

Query 2.—Whether the accompanying tables of pensions, deferred pensions, and premia are theoretically and arithmetically correct?

Opinion.—We are of opinion that the theory on which they are based is correct. As regards their arithmetical correctness, we did not think it necessary that the expense should be incurred of testing each individual operation, but a sufficient number have been tried to justify us in expressing our general confidence in the accuracy of the results.

Query 3.—What proportion of the present values of pensions may with safety be given to such officers as may wish to take an equivalent in lieu of a pension?

Opinion.—We are of opinion that four-fifths of the present value might be given as a general rule; but we would suggest, that as a society, no more than a private individual, would be justified in giving the tabular value for an annuity on an impaired life, it should form a rule, that satisfactory proof be required of the health of the party desirous of commuting.

Query 4.—What is the least number of members with which such a fund as the one proposed might be safely established? (N.B. upwards of 300 officers have already signified their intention of joining).

Opinion.—We are of opinion that 300 form a sufficient number to justify the formation of a fund.

Query 5.—Such a fund being formed, in what manner should its assets and liabilities be from time to time estimated?

Opinion.—We are of opinion that the annual premiums to be received, and pensions to be paid, should be valued on the same principles as already adopted. The present value of the annuities, added to the value of capital in hand, will shew the assets; the present value of the pensions, the liabilities; the difference between the two will shew whether there be a surplus or deficiency, and how much.

LEGAL PROCEEDINGS.

INSOLVENT COURT.

March 11.—In re John Palmer and Co.—The question as to the liability of Baboo Aushootosh Dey in respect of the interest due upon the assets of this estate, collected during the assigneeship of Mr. Larpent, but lost in his commercial firm of Cockerell and Co., came on for argument to-day, before the Chief Justice.

After hearing both sides, his Lordship delivered judgment to the following effect:—It is important, in the consideration of this case, to refer, as the foundation of a judgment, to the 56th section of 9 Geo. IV., c. 73. Upon the principles on which I have already decided that Baboo Aushootosh Dey is liable to make good the principal, he must also be held liable for such interest as I think the creditors have suffered the loss of—since that loss is the result of what, in the eye of the law, is a neglect of the duties that he had taken upon himself. There is no moral culpability whatever attaching to that gentleman; and the case may, in some respects, be regarded as a hard one, so far as he himself is concerned, both in reference to the principal and the interest; but it is my duty in this place to administer the law according to my interpretation of it; and I cannot be influenced by other considerations, and withhold what appears to me a strictly legal decision. Upon the last occasion, when the question as to the principal was before me, I ruled that, if one of several assignees allows any one party to officiate in his behalf in the administration of the trust, and then comes before a court with a case of a total repudiation of the acts of such agent, upon the ground that he has held aloof from them all, treating himself as only a formal assignee—which, it must be remembered, is a plea that the Court cannot admit—then such agent shall be deemed the representative of the nominal assignees, and the latter be consequently responsible for his acts. In the present instance, the affairs of a large bankrupt estate had previously been managed by a sort of an agent, upon whose death Mr. Pillans was nominated in his place. It is not for me to consider whether or not the appointment took place with the consent or the knowledge of Baboo Aushootosh. It is sufficient that the authority upon which the nomination was made in the first instance flowed from a body to which he belonged; and that the more recent one of Mr. Pillans proceeded upon the same authority delegated to a new member of the same body, with which the Baboo still remains associated. Mr. Pillans then, in his capacity of agent, withdrew the funds from the Union Bank, where they were earning interest, and the whole amount was transferred to the commercial firm of Mr. Larpent, where it was lost. Now, according to my view of the question, this was a transfer for the consequences of which Baboo Aushootosh is equally responsible with Mr. Larpent; for, as I understand it, the law considers that, inasmuch as, from a neglect of duty, he suffered one assignee to act for the whole body, and the funds were removed from the bank at the instance of the acting member, he was a party sanctioning the transfer. This point being disposed of, it remains to fix the amount of the loss suffered by the creditors, that I may limit the rate of interest. If the funds were permitted to remain in the Union Bank, the interest yielded by the deposit would be four per cent.; and this, therefore, is the rate which I must decide should be charged to the solvent assignee. There is no evidence before me of the inability of the Union Bank to meet its engagements; but at the time of the deposit, the bank was perfectly safe. It does not appear to me that any thing culpable can be imputed upon the mere ground that the funds were allowed to be for a long period in the bank without a dividend being declared. The general practice here, until very recently, appears to have been, not to declare a dividend until the funds collected would admit of a distribution at the rate of one rupee per cent.; and the assets, in this instance, were allowed to continue in the bank simply that they might accumulate to such an amount as would enable such a rate of distribution. That this may not have been an universal practice, is probable; but it was followed in the administration of the great majority of estates, in nearly all of which the Court sanctioned it, and in this one particularly. The origin of the practice I take to be, the inconvenience and great waste of assets consequent upon frequent declarations of dividends; and, in this view, the course adopted was exceedingly proper. But, on the other hand, it is liable to great abuse; and therefore, where the amount accumulated is large, and the estate capable of bearing the expense of frequent declarations of dividends, it is the duty of the assignee to make payments without delay, though each creditor may receive but a very small fractional portion of his demand. In this particular case, the objection to the practice may probably not have been perceived, and the funds allowed to remain in the bank for the period that they appear to have done, without any improper object whatever. But upon the ground that a neglect of duty is chargeable to Baboo Aushootosh Dey, in law, and that the transfer of the funds to the house of Cockerell and Co., which led to the loss of the whole, was owing to it, I must decide that Baboo Aushootosh is liable for the interest, as well as for the principal, at the rate of 4 per cent., which, as a money-making fund at the time they were removed, the assets would have realized in the ordinary course, were they permitted to remain in the Union Bank. The broad maxim upon which I proceed, is, that where a trustee is negligent, and forbears to exercise a proper supervision over his co-trustee, he must suffer the consequences, and make good the loss that may result from the acts of his associate. It must always be remembered that the very object in the appointment of several assignees in an estate, is that all should be vigilant over each other; and if any one of the number means to make a sinecure of his office, it is his business to inform the Court of his intention, and that tribunal will not, without the grossest violation of its duty, include him among the body of trustees. All these obligations, however, may not have been understood by Baboo Aushootosh Dey. I am sorry for the result, as it affects him; but it is my duty to act upon the law, and to expound it according to my own construction of its terms. The interest upon the funds removed from the Union Bank must date from the time of the transfer; that for the money drawn from the treasury, from the time of the withdrawal.

LOCAL.

THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL.—The order recently proposed by the Governor-General for furnishing the barracks and the libraries with punkhas, and the sanction given by him to the monthly expenditure of Rs. 25 per regiment, for the purpose of keeping them a-going, although matters comparatively of little public importance are characteristic of his lordship's benevolent disposition, and lead us to think that his administration will materially promote the happiness of the people of this country. We have, moreover, already had instances of the interest his lordship takes in the cause of education, and have heard him express himself before hundreds, and in unequivocal language, as favourably disposed towards it.—Bhaskur (Native paper), March 3.

LIABILITY OF AN ASSIGNEE.—On Saturday the question of the liability of Baboo Aushoots Deb, for interest on the two lacs which he is ordered to pay to the estate of Palmer and Co. as assignee, was brought forward, but referred to the chief justice.—Hurkaru. March 6.

ARRIVAL FROM ENGLAND OF NATIVE DOCTORS.—The Hardington arrived yesterday with Drs. Bose and Seal on board; the Bengal medical students who went home under charge of Dr. Goodeve.—Ibid., March 7.

THE HON. MR. C. H. CAMERON.—An address from the professors and masters of the Hindoo college, and an address and a handsome silver vase from the students, were presented to the honourable the president of the council of education yesterday, on the occasion of his departure from India. We understand that the professors and masters would also have presented a vase, or some similar mark of their esteem, but it has been thought more advisable that their subscriptions, of about Rs. 300, should go to the fund for obtaining a portrait from England of this eminent friend of education.—Ibid.

ADVANCES ON THE HYPOTHECATION OF GOODS.—Government has rescinded the order of the 10th of January which restricted the advances of money on the hypothecation of goods to three-fifths of the value of the goods. Henceforth the higher rate of three-fourths will be resumed in all three presidencies.—Ibid., March 9.

RETIREMENT OF SIR JOHN GRANT.—Owing to illness, Sir John Grant, senior puisne justice of Her Majesty's Supreme Court at this presidency, has been forced to leave India. Sir John proceeds on the Earl of Hardwick.—Ibid.

THE NAVIGATION LAWS.—An act has passed the Legislative Council for the equalization of duties on goods imported and exported in British and Foreign vessels, and for abolishing the duties on goods carried from port to port in India.—Ibid.

FATAL ACCIDENT TO MR. GEORGE HIGGINS.—We regret to hear of a sad accident which occurred on Wednesday evening, proving fatal to a young and promising member of the legal profession, Mr. George Higgins, junior, Attorney of the Supreme Court, and son of the taxing officer of the same name. Mr. Higgins was thrown from his buggy on Wednesday evening, receiving injuries, from which he died early the next morning. Mrs. H., to whom he had been married a few weeks, was also severely injured.—Ibid., March 10.

AFFRAY WITH MEDICAL STUDENTS.—Medical students are medical students all over the world, and the unfledged doctors of Young Bengal seem disposed to emulate their prototypes here. A wedding procession was entering the house of Baboo Mutty Loll Seal the other day, when it was favoured with a shower of bricks from the Medical College compound, by which several persons were hurt. Some of the assailants have been apprehended and brought before the police, but they have defended themselves by making a counter-charge against their accusers. The case came on for inquiry before the chief magistrate yesterday, but it has had an unexpected termination. The men that formed the procession appeared as the complainants this day, and only two of the offending students were produced as the defendants. As has been mentioned before, the procession was assailed by a heavy shower of brickbats from the Medical College, which led certain European police officers to enter the premises to prevent further assault. As soon as they had placed themselves within the gate, they were likewise saluted by an overwhelming shower of missiles, and, what was worse, found retreat cut off by the gate behind them being bolted. Fortunately, there was a little room near the gate to which they flew for shelter, while a sepoy on duty at the college, very gallantly placed himself between the assailants and the assailed, and protected the latter at all personal hazard to himself. While this was going on, some other policeman effected an entrance into the premises, followed by some of the people that had formed the procession. The students now fled, with the exception of the two parties made defendants, who were not as agile as their companions, and were taken prisoners, together with a durwan, who was suspected of having bolted the door after the police officers had come within the college. When the case was called on to-day, however, there was no evidence forthcoming of such a nature as to warrant a conviction. The explanation offered for this was, that very considerable confusion prevailed during the whole affair, and that no particular individual could be pointed out as being an offending party. The case has therefore been dismissed, and with it the countercharge falls to the ground.—Ibid.

MEMORIAL TO SIR JOHN GRANT.—A meeting was held at the Town-Hall yesterday to allow the inhabitants of Calcutta an opportunity of addressing Sir John Grant, on the occasion of his departure. An address and portrait were unanimously voted to the retiring judge.—Ibid., March 11.

RETURN OF TROOPS TO ENGLAND.—The last detachment of troops returning home this season will be embarked this morning on the Earl of Balcarras. The vessel is at Kedgerree whither she was obliged to drop down owing to her size to complete her loading. The men going in her will be conveyed down in one of the Government steamers.—Ibid.

THE LATE GALE.—We have not heard that the heavy gale on Tuesday and Wednesday was attended with any evil effects on shore: but it appears to have worked some mischief on the river. On Wednesday, a half-sized country cargo boat, lying off the Custom-house ghaut, laden with goods, was thrown against the chain cables of the Bounty Hall, a Liverpool ship, moored in the same part, by the violence of the wind and tide, and, breaking in two, she sunk to the bottom, with all her cargo. The only people on board of her were her dandees; and as these are always clever swimmers they escaped. About midnight again, when it blew and thundered so severely, the fore-mast of the French ship Sumatra, also off Custom-house ghaut, was struck by lightning. The vessel, fortunately, was not materially injured.—Ibid.

THE RECENT DISCOVERIES.—This is indeed an unfortunate year for the European population in Calcutta; discoveries are every day being made which are by no means calculated to reflect much credit on them. The Supreme Court, the Bengal Secretariat, and the Tax office are in a downright ferment. We hear of defalcations to the amount of two, three, four, and even twelve lacs of rupees in different offices; and yet, strange to say, the sahebs in charge of those establishments suffer nothing from the circumstance. Had a Bengali been implicated in the matter, we should have had packs of police sergeants pursuing the supposed culprit and dragging him from his zenana to a criminal jail by way of a prologue to something still more fearful: we would have also had wholesale libels against natives in general from all Christian quarters, the real saheb and the would be ones exultingly joining in the same chorus: "Bangali log bura chor, fauci ho ne se acha hota." The juries, too, would have with one voice pronounced the wretch guilty of wilful embezzlement, and the worshipful judges passed a sentence of fourteen years' imprisonment or transportation. But now that the defalcations have taken place under brethren of the same soil, not a word is heard about the matter. The amount missing from Mr. T—'s office is uncommonly large; we would, therefore, like to know what steps have been taken by the Chief Justice to bring him and his fellow defaulters to account.—Gyandurpan (Native paper), March 11.

HINDU FEMALE EDUCATION.—We learn that a wealthy Baboo of Ootterparah is about to establish a school for the education of respectable Hindu girls in Bengali and needle-works, and to place that school under the superintendence of a native and an European instructress. We shall be happy, indeed, if the report turns out to be true. This scheme was, it is said, projected simultaneously with that of the male school in that locality, which is at present in so flourishing a condition, and was submitted to the then collector of —, who immediately held himself in communication with the secretary to the Council of Education, and procured from them a promise of hearty co-operation.—Probbakar (Native Paper), March 11.

PRESENTATION OF THE ADDRESS TO SIR JOHN GRANT.—Charles Hogg, Esq., sheriff, presented the address to Sir John Peter Grant, voted the other day at the Town-Hall. We are glad to hear that Sir John is reported to have rallied a good deal, and that his improved state, during the last few days, gives great hope of the sea voyage setting him up again.—Calcutta Star, March 13.

THE HARDINGE TESTIMONIAL.—Thirty-four thousand rupees have been subscribed to the Hardinge testimonial, of which sum ten thousand remain unpaid. The total number of subscribers is two hundred and twenty-six; of whom thirty-seven are natives.—Ibid., March 13.

MEETING OF CREDITORS OF MESSRS. HAWORTH, HARDMAN, AND CO.—A meeting of the creditors of the firm of Haworth, Hardman, and Co., was held on Saturday. This firm has been obliged to suspend payments from the failure of its corresponding houses in Liverpool and Newcastle. The entire liabilities amount to about fifteen lakhs, and the assets to two-thirds of that sum. The affairs of the house are to be wound up under inspection, and the creditors passed a resolution expressing their most sincere regret and sympathy at the misfortunes brought upon the partners, "by the late crisis in trade, and not by want of attention, close application, and economy on their part, nor caused by reckless speculation and over-trading."—Ibid.

VERDICT AGAINST THE UNION BANK.—The first verdict against the Union Bank was obtained in a case which came on at the supreme court yesterday. The claim was not contested by the bank, merely pro forma proof being given.—Ibid., March 15.

PROGRESS OF COMMERCIAL DISTRESS.—We regret to hear that commercial difficulties are spreading in the bazar and among the Armenian community. The Englishman says that the stoppage of a highly respectable individual of long standing, belonging to the latter class, is announced.—Hurkaru, March 16.

THE ARCHDEACON.—The friends of the archdeacon will doubtless be glad to learn of his return to the Presidency, from the visitation on which he had been deputed by the bishop. The Venerable Dr. Dealtry reached town yesterday on one of the boats towed by the steamer Lord William Bentinck.—Ibid.

A STRANGE APPLICATION.—A Hindoo brought up a country-born woman before Major Birch yesterday, to force her to restore to his protection a Christian girl, about seven years old. He received the child, he says, from her mother, some four years ago, for a pecuniary consideration, and reared her up from that time to a twelvemonth hence, when, being called away upon business to the Upper Provinces, he left her in charge of the defendant, furnishing her with means for her support. Having recently returned, he demanded back his ward; but the woman refused to part with her. The magistrate did not think it necessary to call upon the defendant to offer an answer, nor, indeed, would he listen to any evidence; but dismissed the case immediately upon hearing the story of the complainant.—Friend of India, March, 16.

AN ALLIGATOR IN TANK-SQUARE.—The Hurkaru announces the capture of the alligator which has for some time been amusing himself by frightening those who came for water to Tank-square. All attempts to shoot it proved vain; but at length, a large number of natives were sent in on one side to create an agitation with their sticks and voices, and the frightened animal took shelter on the opposite bank, when a native slipped a noose on his tail which was moved up the body, and he is now transferred to the museum of the Asiatic Society.—Ibid.

CALCUTTA DOCKING COMPANY.—A meeting of the Calcutta Docking Company was held on the 13th, which was attended by five European and five native gentlemen. The business was conducted after the most approved Ditch fashion; a list of accounts, as per statement, was read, and all of them were laid on the table; a dividend of five per cent. was ordered, the accounts were voted satisfactory, and the chair duly thanked.—Ibid.

RUMOURED RETIREMENT OF MR. O'DOWDA.—The Englishman states that Mr. O'Dowda has applied to Government for a pension, in contemplation of retiring from the office of sworn clerk to the Supreme Court, which he at present holds.—Hurkaru, March 17.

MESSRS. CANTOR AND CO.—The same paper states that the assignees of the late firm of Cantor and Co. have filed their accounts from the date of the failure in 1841 to the end of January, 1848. There have been paid three dividends amounting to seventeen per cent., the total amount collected being equal to two lacs.—Ibid.

THE UNION BANK POST BILL CASE.—The Union Bank Post Bill case came on yesterday, at the Supreme Court, but was adjourned in consequence of the absence of Mr. W. P. Grant, one of the principal witnesses, who has accompanied his father, Sir John Grant, down the river.—Ibid., March 18.

MR. O'DOWDA.—The Englishman states that Mr. O'Dowda's application to Government for a pension has been rejected.—Ibid.

THE UNION BANK.—We hear that the Executive Committee of the Union Bank applied to Government last Friday, to permit Mr. Elliot to act on the committee in winding up the affairs, but that they met with a refusal, it being pointed out to them that their request was contrary to the orders of the home authorities, which prohibited the interference of public servants in the management of trading concerns. It would be as well, we think, if the rule were generally enforced or totally set aside. The exhibition lately made by the military bankers in the north-west is by no means creditable to the service to which they are attached.—Englishman, March 21.

CENSUS v. NO CENSUS.—The inhabitants have been led to believe a census is being taken of the population within the jurisdiction of Calcutta, in consequence of some police officers taking an account of the principal people residing in the divisions over which they have charge. This, we understand, however, is only for their own convenience, and will not include the whole of the inhabitants. It is many years since the last census of Calcutta was taken, which was regarded as but a doubtful approximation, native police officers having been employed to gather the materials. The present establishment of police offers an opportunity of obtaining a tolerably accurate list of the inhabitants.—Hurkaru, March 23.

MOFUSSIL.

BENARES.—Weather.—We are evidently on the eve of another change. Large masses of clouds were borne over from west to east yesterday by an upper current of air; below, it was calm, causing a sultry heat. The thermometer this morning stood at 80.

Shipping.—The Sulledge arrived on the evening of the 13th, and after delivering her cargo for Benares, proceeded the following morning on her passage to Allahabad. The following are the passengers:—Captain and Mrs. Townshend, for Benares; Ensign J. A. Hunter, ditto; Ensign C. H. Brownlow, ditto; Miss K. Bell, for Mirzapore; Miss Mackinnon, for Allahabad; Miss Byres, ditto; Captain W. Turner, ditto; Mr. Thompson, ditto; Mrs. Hibbert and infant, ditto; Captain Cooke, ditto; Lieut. E. W. Day, ditto; Ensigns Matheson and Jervois, for Dinanore; Cornet D. H. Hill, for Allahabad, and Lieut. J. T. Lyng, ditto. The Zoorma arrived on the morning of the 14th, and proceeded on her voyage after remaining three hours at the ghaut. The following passengers disembarked at this station:—Ensign Comyns, Ensign Clarke, Ensign Anstruther, and Dr. and Mrs. Thompson.—Recorder, March 17.

FEROZPORE.—The Monumental Church.—It affords us much satisfaction to be able to report that the Ferozpoor Monumental Church is progressing famously, and already looks imposing. It will be a very fine building. The committee are about to lose the services of Lieut. Goodwyn, who has done so much for the church, but it is to be hoped they will find an able coadjutor in his successor, Lieut. Nicholls.—Delhi Guz., March 8.

GWALIOR.—Death of the Prime Minister.—The Mofussile of the 14th instant, received yesterday morning, announces the death of Ram Rao Phalkea, the prime minister at Gwalior. Recent accounts of his dangerous illness, together with his great age, led us to expect tidings of this event. It occurred on the morning of the 9th instant, according to our contemporary's advice. The Mama Sahib, the uncle of the Maharajah, has been appointed Ram Rao's successor, of course under instructions from the Supreme Government. All was quiet at Gwalior, and we see no reason to believe that the change of ministry thus produced would be attended with any important results, political or otherwise. Ram Rao Phalkea, the defunct minister, was formerly residency wakeel at Gwalior, and first came into prominent notice as engaged, on the part of the durbar, in the negotiations preceding and following the war of 1843. On the reorganisation of the government under the auspices of Lord Ellenborough, Ram Rao became prime minister, and held the office from that period to the day of his death. The Mama Sahib, his successor, has also been a member of the Government from its establishment on the present footing.—Hurkaru, March 21.

INDORE.—Abolition of Suttee, Infanticide, and Slavery.—Last night's Gazette contained a notification by the Governor-General embodying a list of thirteen chiefs in the circle of the Indore residency who have prohibited suttee, infanticide, and slavery in their respective states.—Ibid., March 23.

LAHORE, MARCH 10.—Farewell Dinner to Mr. Lawrence.—A farewell dinner was given to our late resident, Mr. John Lawrence, on Saturday evening last, by the brigadier and officers of the civil and military staff. The General, Brigadier Wheeler, and commanding officers, were invited also as guests; the feast, which did great justice to the caterers, came off in a large tent at our worthy brigade major's. The healths of Mr. Lawrence, his brother, Brigadiers Campbell and Wheeler, General Wish, Sir John Littler, &c. &c. were successively proposed and drank enthusiastically, giving rise to some good speechifying and returning of thanks.

Arrival of Sir F. Currie.—Sir Frederick and Lady Currie arrived on Monday the 6th instant, and were met on the road leading to Shaleemar by all the chieftains of the durbar, headed by Mr. Lawrence and the different officers, civil, military, and medical, attached to the Lahore residency. The gay cavalcade reached Anarkullee at 8 A.M., under the usual salute from our battery, and again met at the durbar in the afternoon, where there was a very full assemblage of councillors and chiefs, the Maharajah wearing the great kohipoor diamond, and other state jewels on the occasion.—Delhi Gaz. March 15.

— March 15.—Military Inspection.—Yesterday morning, the 14th of March, Major-General Whish, C. B., commanding the Punjab Division, inspected the whole of the troops off duty at Lahore, viz.—The artillery, H. M.'s 10th and 53rd regiments of foot, the 8th, 18th, 36th, 46th, 50th, 53rd, and 73rd regiments of native infantry and irregular cavalry, drawn up at Anarkullie in line of contiguous quarter distance columns, under Brigadier Campbell, C. B.; the whole afterwards deployed into line, and marched past in open column in quick time. This morning, at sun rise, the whole of the troops in garrison were ready at their alarm posts, and were visited there by the Major-General and Brigadier. And to-morrow morning the Major-General inspects Nos. 10 and 11 light field batteries, first manoeuvred separately, and afterwards both together, under the senior artillery officer. The defence (Capt. Waring's, 6th light cavalry, Court martial, of which Brigadier Wheeler, C. B., from Jullunder, is president), closed at 3 p. m. on Monday the 13th instant.—Mofussilite, March 21.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES.—Thuggee.—It would appear from information we have lately received from the banks of the Sutlej, that suspicions long since entertained of the existence of a certain description of thuggee have been fully confirmed. They arose in the first instance out of numerous cases of murder reported to the authorities, and a clue having been fortunately obtained led to the apprehension of one man who has disclosed the existence of a vast number of Thugs, though of a new class. Some fifty have been already enrolled on the list for apprehension, and of these again about twelve are in custody, with every chance of more being speedily captured, as parties are out in all directions after them from Loodiana. Every capture will probably add to the list of disclosures, and it is to be hoped that the active measures in progress may lead to the extirpation of this gang. It has been ascertained that the bodies of their victims are, after strangulation, invariably mutilated, or cut about the head and neck, to make it appear as if death had been caused by some other means. The bodies are seldom, if ever, buried, as is generally the case with Thugs. We strongly suspect that the case of murder at Loodiana, recorded in our pages a few issues back, must have been connected with this new system of crime.—Delhi Gazette, March 11.

COURTS MARTIAL.

ENSIGN HUGH TREVOR POLLOCK, 35TH N. L. I.

At a general court martial assembled in Fort William, on Wednesday, January 19, 1848, Ensign Hugh Trevor Pollock, 35th N. L. I., was arraigned on the following charge:—

For conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, in the following instance:—

1st. In having, at Sheergotty, on or about April 14, 1847, drawn a bill of exchange, and at Allahabad, on or about April 22, 1847, drawn a duplicate of the same bill of exchange in favour of the secretary to the Delhi bank, upon John Hamilton, Esq., of Calcutta, for the sum of 5,000 rupees, in repayment of a loan received from the Delhi bank in the month of October, 1845, he Ensign Pollock, having had no authority to draw the bill of exchange, and well knowing that the amount would not be paid on presentation thereof.

2nd. In having, at Allahabad, in a letter addressed to the late assist.-surg. W. M. Howden, of the medical department, dated April 18, 1847, falsely represented that "John Hamilton, Esq." (meaning the above-named John Hamilton, Esq., of the firm of Messrs. McKenzie, Lyall, and company, of the Calcutta Exchange), held in his possession money of his, Ensign Pollock's.

3rd. In having, in a letter dated Allahabad, July 1, 1847, and addressed to the adjutant of the regiment, falsely stated that the sum of rupees 900 in cash, and security for rupees 600, obtained by him, Ensign Pollock, from John Hamilton, Esq., of Calcutta, about the month of March or April, 1847, was advanced and given on the security of an order on England, whereas that sum and security had been obtained on the security of a promissory note for rupees 1,500, drawn by himself in favour of the late Lieutenant R. M. Franklin, of 40th N. I., and endorsed by that officer, and by Lieutenant S. B. Cookson, of the 73rd N. I., to enable him, Ensign Pollock, to obtain cash by discounting the said promissory note.

Finding.—The court are of opinion, that the prisoner, Ensign Hugh Trevor Pollock, 35th N. L. I., is, on the first instance of the charge, guilty, except of the words, and "well knowing that the amount would not be paid on presentation thereof," of which the court do acquit him.

On the second instance of the charge, that he is not guilty, and do acquit him thereof.

On the third instance of the charge, that he is not guilty, and do acquit him thereof.

The court find that the prisoner is not guilty of conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, as averred in the preamble, and do acquit him thereof.

Sentence.—The court sentence the prisoner Ensign Hugh Trevor Pollock, of the 35th regiment of native light infantry, to be severely reprimanded.

Confirmed.

Head Quarters Simla, Feb. 5, 1848.

Remarks by the Right Honourable the Commander-in-Chief.—The officer commanding the presidency division will publicly administer a reprimand to Ensign Pollock, and seriously admonish him against the highly improper practice of drawing bills without authority, and making loose statements respecting his pecuniary affairs; with a warning, that, although on the present trial the decesses of necessary witnesses prevented any investigation into the second instance of the charge, and on conflicting considerations have led the court to acquit him of the third instance, a verdict which the Commander-in-Chief will not disturb, the strictest circumspection henceforward will alone preserve Ensign Pollock from the imputations of conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman.

Ensign Pollock will continue in arrest pending the investigation of certain other matters in which he is concerned.

By order of his Excellency the Right Hon. the Commander-in-Chief, PAT. GRANT, Lieut.-col. Adj. Gen. of the Army.

LIEUT. HENRY LEITH BLACKBURN, 41ST N. I.

At a general court-martial held at Nusseerabad, on Monday, February 7th, 1848, Lieut. H. Leith Blackburn, 41st N. I., was arraigned on the following charge:—

For unbecoming conduct, in the following instances:—

1st. For having, at Nusseerabad, on or about Nov. 21, 1847, made use of highly insulting language to Assist. Surg. J. Grant, attached to the same regiment.

2nd. In having, at Nusseerabad, on or about Dec. 11, 1847, spoken in a harsh and highly improper manner to Koosseel Sing, subadar, 41st N. I., and in the presence of a jemadar and several non-commissioned officers and sepoys of the regt., the subadar being then and there in attendance to make his report as relieved native officer of the day.

Finding.—The Court, from the evidence before them, is of opinion that the prisoner, Lieut. H. Blackburn, 41st N. I., is

On the first instance of the charge, guilty, with the exception of the word "highly."

On the second instance of the charge, not guilty.

Sentences.—The court Having found the prisoner, Lieut. H. L. Blackburn, 41st N. I., guilty of so much of the charge as is above exhibited, do sentence him to be severely reprimanded.

Approved and confirmed,

(Signed) GOUGH, General Com.-in-Chief.

Head-quarters, Simla, February 9, 1848.

Remarks by the Right Hon. the Commander-in-Chief.—Having found Lieut. Blackburn not guilty of the second charge, the Court should have acquitted him of it.

The officer commanding the Rajpootanah field force will publicly administer a reprimand to Lieut. Blackburn, and seriously admonish him of the necessity of controlling his temper in his communications with his brother officers.

Lieut. Blackburn is to be released from arrest, and will return to his duty.

LIEUT. EDMUND WALTER CHICHELEY PLOWDEN, 5TH L. C.

Head-quarters, Simla, March 11, 1848.—At a general court-martial assembled at Meerut, on Monday, February 21, 1848, Lieut. E. W. C. Plowden, 5th L. C., was tried on the following charge:—

For conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, in the following instances:—

1st. In having, at Meerut, on or about Jan. 11, 1848—he having on a previous date been privately offered, by a person then at the station, a bribe to lose a match at billiards, at which he, Lieut. Plowden, was to play, and on which large bets were depending—falsely stated to Cornet R. Hoghton, H. M.'s 9th lancers, whom he informed of the circumstances, that the bribe offered him was fifty gold mohurs.

2nd. In having, at Meerut, on or about Jan. 11, 1848, been asked by the said Cornet Hoghton, in presence of the Commander-in-Chief, whether he had not informed him, Cornet Hoghton, that he had been offered a bribe of fifty gold mohurs to lose a match at billiards, or words to that effect, falsely replied that he had not so informed him.

3rd. In having, at the same time and place, falsely and evasively taken advantage of the words "fifty gold mohurs," used in the said question put to him by the said Cornet Hoghton, to reply with a direct negative, and without further explanation, thereby intentionally and disingenuously leaving it to be understood by those who heard him, that no bribe had been offered to him.

4th. In having, at the same time and place, positively and falsely affirmed and declared, that he had not told the said Cornet Hoghton that he had been offered a bribe to lose the said match, and that such a thing had never happened, or words to the same effect, thereby intentionally and falsely denying that any bribe at all had been offered to him.

Finding.—The Court on the evidence before them, are of opinion that the prisoner, Lieut. E. W. C. Plowden, 5th L. C., is not guilty of the first instance of the charge preferred against him; but that he is guilty of the second, third, and fourth instances of the charge. And the Court find, that the conduct of which they have found the prisoner guilty is unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman.

Sentence.—The Court sentence the prisoner, Lieut. E. W. C. Plowden, 5th L. C., to be dismissed the service.

Recommendation by the Court.—The Court, having performed a painful duty in sentencing the prisoner to a punishment very severe, but, in their estimation, commensurate with the unbecoming conduct of which they have found him guilty, beg most earnestly to recommend him to the favourable consideration of the right hon. the Commander-in-Chief.

The prisoner is well known to have done good and honourable service on many occasions.

And on the occasion which has given rise to the present trial, the Court are willing to believe that Lieut. Plowden was tempted to depart from the truth by mistaken motives.

Revised Finding.—The Court, having maturely weighed and considered the observations contained in the letter from the judge advocate-general of the army, do now find,

On the first instance of the charge, that a bribe was privately offered to the prisoner as alleged, and that he told Cornet Hoghton of it; but that he, Lieut. E. W. C. Plowden, 5th L. C., is not guilty of falsehood in the statement he then made to Cornet Hoghton, and the Court do acquit him thereof.

On the second instance, that he is guilty.

On the third instance, guilty.

On the fourth instance, guilty.

And the Court are further of opinion, that the conduct of which they have found the prisoner guilty is unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, as alleged in the preamble.

Revised Sentence.—The Court adhere to their former sentence, namely, that the prisoner, Lieut. E. W. C. Plowden, 5th L. C., be dismissed the service.

Approved and confirmed.

Head Quarters, Simla, March 8, 1848.

Recommendation.—The Court beg leave most respectfully to adhere to their former recommendation of the prisoner to mercy.

Remarks by the Court.—The Court most respectfully beg to submit to the right honourable the Commander-in-Chief, that in finding the prisoner not guilty of the first instance of the charge, they meant to express their opinion, not that Lieut. Plowden did not tell Cornet Hoghton that he had been offered a bribe of fifty gold mohurs, but that he may possibly not have told a falsehood in so saying, because there is no sufficient proof of what was the real amount of the bribe offered to Lieut. Plowden.

The Court believe that the prisoner did tell Cornet Hoghton that he had been offered a bribe of fifty gold mohurs: consequently he told a falsehood when he denied having so informed Cornet Hoghton; and the Court have accordingly found the prisoner guilty of the second instance of the charge.

In deference to his lordship's opinion, the Court have now recorded a special verdict on the first instance.

And they trust that, under the explanation above offered, their finding and acquittal upon that instance will be considered by his lordship to be consistent with their belief in the entire credibility of Cornet Hoghton.

Remarks by the Right Hon. the Commander-in-Chief.—Regarding the Court's explanation of their finding on the first instance of the charge, the Commander-in-Chief would observe that the actual amount of the bribe offered to Lieut. Plowden was of no consequence, and was not put in issue; the question being, whether he told Cornet Hoghton that the amount was 50 gold mohurs, and in so doing told an untruth. It appears in evidence that Lieut. Plowden told another officer of the 9th Lancers, that "he had been offered from 10 to 30 gold mohurs." In his defence, Lieut. Plowden denies having told Cornet Hoghton that the amount offered was 50 gold mohurs, and observes that had Cornet Hoghton followed up his first question by further asking whether any bribe had been offered him at all, he should certainly have replied in the affirmative. The Commander-in-Chief considers that these statements, though they do not prove the amount of the bribe, sufficiently establish that it was not 50 gold mohurs. Then the evidence of Cornet Hoghton, which the Court declare that they accept (and in which they have the entire concurrence of the Commander-in-Chief) establishes that Lieut. Plowden, in telling him of the bribe, stated it to have been 50 gold mohurs. His lordship is of opinion, that the Court need not have hesitated to convict Lieut. Plowden of falsehood in making that statement.

Anxious as the Commander-in-Chief is to give the fullest weight to the recommendation of a court-martial, especially when founded on military services such as the testimonials of Lieut. Plowden record, his lordship greatly regrets that, in this instance, it is not in his power to attend to the Court's recommendation, feeling that he would not be justified in restoring an officer to his corps with the recorded finding of the Court, "that the conduct of the prisoner is unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman," and considering the nature of the charges of which he is convicted.

The name of Lieut. Plowden will cease to be borne on the rolls of the 5th regiment light cavalry from the date on which this order may be published at Meerut, a report of which is to be made to the Adjutant-general of the army, and to the Assistant Adjutant-general at the presidency.

EXCHANGES.

Our quotations are 1s. 10½d. to 1s. 10½d. for 6 months' first class document bills.

FREIGHTS.

Tonnage grows scarce, and though any advance is very unwillingly paid, dead weight is generally higher. Quotations are, to London, 6l. to 6l. 6s.; to Liverpool, 5l. 17s. 6d. to 6l. per ton.

MARKETS.

The changes in markets since the last mail have not been important.

With the exception of Indigo, the export market shews little movement, and the amount of business done has been very moderate. The difficulty of procuring freight tends to limit transactions in the heavy staples. The Indigo sales have been to a fair extent. The demand for Sugar has been limited. Silk remains in better inquiry, and Corahs, though without actual sales, have been rather more asked for. The inquiry for Saltpetre is checked by the high freights. In Rice, for England, there is nothing doing.

* Rs. 500 paid up.

In Opium there is no business; quoted value, nominal.

The import trade maintains its improved position, although latterly the approach of the Hoolce holidays has caused some temporary slackening of demand. Cotton Goods have been parted with to a fair extent. Mule Twist, No. 30 and 40, continue much wanted. Metals still shew few transactions, and stationary prices.

The Money Market shews little change. The Bank is full of money, and in the Bazar there is no lack of it, but the means of safe employment continue limited. The depreciation in the value of the new Government five per cents. is not yet stopped. Sales have been made at 2½ discount.

Exchange for bills of the first class has declined ¼d. There is a great scarcity of good document bills, and much demand for this description of paper.

MADRAS. MISCELLANEOUS.

LOCAL.

FRIGHTFUL TRAGEDY ON BOARD THE GENERAL WOOD.—We have received an extra of the Straits' Times of the 20th Feb., with the melancholy intelligence of the capture by convicts of the ship General Wood, and the subsequent wreck of the vessel. No less than twenty-five persons have been destroyed in the massacre, and subsequent attempts of the pirates to escape. The unhappy crew do not seem to have offered any resistance, but the guilt of the transaction actually lies at the door of the authorities, who in spite of so many examples of previous atrocities, offered a positive bounty to the desperate ruffians on board, to rise and struggle for freedom. The wretches are hardly more to be blamed, than if they had merely sought to save their lives from shipwreck. We trust that an enquiry into the cause of this monstrous neglect of ordinary precaution will be set on foot, and rigidly followed out, to its consequences of punishment and official degradation.—Athenæum, March 16.

DEPARTURE OF THE 94TH H. M. S.—The remainder of H. M.'s 94th regiment will embark at five o'clock this afternoon, on board the H.C. steamer Semiramis, for Cannanore. After landing the troops, she will proceed to Bombay.—Ibid., March 18.

THE 4TH K. O.—We congratulate the gallant 4th King's Own, upon the probability of their early departure from India. Their further detention is rendered unnecessary by the return of H.M.'s 25th Borderers, and we believe that the London has already tendered for the conveyance of a portion of the former corps to England.—Ibid.

PROMOTION.—The retirement in Europe of 1st Lieut. Brev. capt. W. C. Gordon, of the artillery, and Capt. C. W. Gordon, of the 7th light cavalry, will make the following alteration of rank and promotions.

THE NABOB OF THE CARNATIC.—Yesterday forenoon his Highness the Nawaub of the Carnatic returned the visit of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief. The usual salutes were fired on the occasion.—Ibid.

CEREMONIAL VISIT.—On Saturday forenoon, the Honourable D. Elliott, Esq., paid a visit of ceremony to his Highness the Nawaub of the Carnatic. The customary salutes were fired on the occasion.—Ibid.

MILITARY ITEMS.—The remainder of H. M.'s 94th regiment, under the orders of Major Patterson, embarked on board the H. C.'s steamer Semiramis, for Cannanore, last Saturday evening. A detachment of the 19th regiment, N. I., under the command of Lieut. Firth, arrived at the Presidency yesterday morning, escorting treasure.—Ibid.

CATTLE SHOW.—Contrary to expectation, the cattle show at the Horticultural Gardens, did come off on Tuesday last. An hour after the time advertised for the award of prizes, the public mustered to the extent of three gentlemen, who consented to stay for the good of agricultural science, and decide the beefy questions submitted for solution. The show was very inferior, and not a single prize was gained by natives.—Ibid., March 23.

ENTERTAINMENT.—The Hon. the Governor gave an entertainment to His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, and a select party, on Tuesday evening last. A guard of honour from H. M.'s 4th K. O. regiment, and the garrison band, were paraded for the purpose of receiving His Excellency.—Ibid.

RETURN VISIT.—Yesterday forenoon, His Highness the Nabob of the Carnatic, returned the visit of ceremony to the Hon. D. Elliott, Esq., under the usual royal salutes.—Ibid.

RETURN HOME OF THE 4TH.—H. M.'s 4th, or The King's Own, regiment have received orders to hold themselves in readiness for embarkation for Europe at the shortest notice.—Ibid.

MOFUSSIL.

BANGALORE, MARCH 16.—Military.—The 31st N. L. I. under the command of Lieut.-Col. Davidson, arrived from Palamcottah yesterday morning, after a tedious march of about six weeks. No sickness occurred during their march; even the camp followers, of whom there were upwards of 4,000, were in excellent health the whole march.—Athenæum, March 21.

HURRYHUR.—Military.—By a private letter received from Hurryhur we learn the gratifying intelligence that the 4th regt. N. I. has only lost one man by death since the arrival of the corps at that station on the 22nd of last January. Coupled with the fact that this regiment had not a single casualty during its late march from Vellore to its present station, we think that considerable credit is due to the regimental authorities whose arrangements have doubtless been conducive to so gratifying a result.

—Clerical.—The Rev. E. Kilvert, B. A., chaplain of Bellary, arrived at Hurryhur on a pastoral visit, on the 8th instant, and quitted the station on the 18th.—Ibid.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDER.

THE SHERIFF took the chair and said—I hold in my hand a requisition most respectably signed, with which I have complied with the greatest pleasure, although I have seldom attended a meeting with more regret than the present. (Cheers.) You will now be good enough to appoint a chairman.

Lieut-colonel JEANVIS proposed that Sir Erskine Perry should be appointed chairman, which was carried by acclamation.

SIR ERSKINE PERRY having taken the chair, thanked the meeting for the honour it had done him in calling upon him to preside. He was labouring under indisposition at that moment, and had but just concluded a very heavy session; yet he felt so much sympathy with the objects of the meeting, that he could not refuse the duty which they had called upon him to perform. He would, therefore, throw himself upon their kindness, considering the circumstances, and endeavour to perform that duty as concisely as he could. It was an ancient custom in Bombay, that on any individual who had long lived in the community, or who had held high office, leaving the country, the friends who were left behind should assemble to pay some mark of respect. To the credit of human nature it might be said that there were few men called to occupy a high station who were not able to convince their immediate circle that they were animated by good and worthy motives, or who failed in attaching to them some warm and earnest friends; and when on their departure from India their enthusiastic associates come forward with harmless exaggerations, and develop much zeal to get up a testimonial for plate or some such trumpery, although occasionally the sober-minded may smile, still they ordinarily subscribe their rupees when asked, in order to put an end to the importunity. But he apprehended, judging by his own feelings, that a very different class of motives influenced them in paying a mark of respect to their present Governor. (Loud cheers.) He had only come to the meeting as an individual, to express his own opinion; it was but seldom, in Bombay, that one had the opportunity of doing that on public occasions, but if the opportunity was afforded for publicly expressing one's regard for private worth, and the worthy discharge of public duties (cheers), he looked upon it as a solemn duty, and hailed the occasion for performing it. He said that he had come there to express his opinion as an individual. (Cheers.) He spoke as one accustomed to weigh his words, who knew well the value of praise and blame, and did not think them to be dealt forth with levity, and he would proceed to express what his opinion was; and he expected the warmest sympathy when he came to state the grounds on which that opinion was founded. (Loud cheers.) There being no popular elements in that country, a great difference subsisted between India and England, as to the general knowledge of the acts of public men; in India the facts of the life of a public man were not known at large, nor was it necessary they should be; they were only known by a few individuals, although the general outline of most men's public career was known. Looking at the public service in this country, he did not allude to the civil, or military, or naval service, but to the service of the government of the British in the country (he need not expatiate to many of those present upon the character of that service, but in a mixed audience like that before him it might be necessary); he would hold up to the world what the service was, what it was doing, and he would say that it was the noblest service in the world. (Loud cheers.) In other countries, their own for example, the reward of eminent service was immediate—he who did good service to the state reaped his reward in the applause and good opinion of the people at large. But in that country it was very different; the acts of public men were known only to their own government, and a few friends. Men there devoted their whole lives and energies to the good of the people, the fruits of which were, perhaps, not seen for years! and they acted from the best of all motives, the approbation of their own conscience. (Loud cheers.) He had not come there to enter into speculations, or to make a speech; but he was glad of an opportunity of expressing, from what had come under his own observation in India, his sense of the worth of public men, which he had personal experience of. (Cheers.) Although the specific acts of public men were not well known, yet there was so quick a diffusion of information, that it was easy to pronounce, without mistake, the value of each individual engaged. Mr. Clerk was one of the men whose career was well known. For more than thirty years past he had been engaged in upholding the honour of the British name. Actuated by a strong feeling of his deserts, he (Sir E. Perry) had come there to state them. (Loud cheers.) It was difficult to avoid comparison with other men; but he was glad to say that since he had been in India, his experience of men in high places, devoting their lives, and faculties, and energies for the good of their country, was very great. (Cheers.) In England no virtue was allowed to exist apart from party faction; in India it was very different. The requisition expressed deep regret for the resignation of the Governor, and admiration of his distinguished Indian career. Mr. Clerk had only been fourteen months amongst them, having arrived in February or the end of January last year. In that short time, it was not to be expected that any great objects could have been achieved to completion. Sir E. Perry then alluded to the condition of Bombay at the present moment, having got all the elements of good government, quite as much as any part of our Indian possessions—a strong and impartial government—administration of law, police, roads, &c. Of course (he continued), many improvements might be made, but these did not depend so much on the authorities as on the people themselves. As regarded Mr. Clerk, they must not so much look for his public acts, as for things which, if performed, would be difficult to ascertain. One great claim he had was, that he influenced every man under his control to exert himself to the utmost, which was acknowledged by every man of noble sentiments. He was imbued with an earnest desire to further the interests of his country (cheers); and this was combined with the fullest capacity for carrying his wishes into effect with a matchless mastery—an inspiration by which he influenced every one to exert his utmost zeal, by which he animated every one to activity. He (Sir E. Perry) spoke to a few who had had an opportunity of knowing the truth of what he said. These, when they heard of his intended resignation, at once combined to give expression to their sentiments. From considerations of delicacy, it being uncertain how long Mr. Clerk would remain amongst them, they delayed the manifestation of their feelings. He rejoiced that this had been the case; for without any repressal of personal enthusiasm, the duty then about to be performed required and demanded calm deliberation, which was allowed by a few week's delay. He (Sir E. Perry) had himself been inspired by Mr. Clerk, and could bear personal testimony to his peculiar influence; and it was with indignation that he alluded to the petty carping spirit which had been heard since the announcement of his intended resignation. It was not calumny—it was not censure; more of a depreciating, carping spirit than anything else. But he rejoiced that it had taken place; for it brought out men to tell what the former life of Mr. Clerk had been. His had been a brilliant career; he was afraid of wearying them, but must be permitted to enlarge a little on his history. Mr. Clerk was a contemporary of his valued friend Mr. Reid (who he regretted was not present on that occasion), and commenced his public life in 1817. He was first assistant magistrate, then assistant judge; next he was transferred to the secret and political department, and he acquired much experience in all those three situations. In 1822 he was under that eminent man, great warrior, and distinguished diplomatist, Sir D. Ochterlony, and so continued for several years, his services giving promise of future excellency. In 1823 we find him political agent at Bhurtpore, Delhi, and Nagpore; and from that time to 1832 performing public duties at Nagpore, the Mahratta country, and other places. In 1832 he was agent at Umballa for the Sikh provinces. Umballa was peculiarly situated; surrounded by the territories of hostile chieftains, and in the vicinity of the battlefield and the high road of armies. (Cheers.) Mr. Clerk had to deal with people who were voluptuous, grasping, and quarrelsome; but who were yet sensible to morality and honour. Their lands bordered those of a nation at that time at war with the British; and just when their hostility might have proved fatal to our rule, Mr. Clerk's exertions warded off the danger. Mr. Clerk was here most eminently successful, and the adventures which he encountered amongst the people might form subject for a romance. He was everywhere at the same time—the natives thought him ubiquitous; if a fray took place he appeared on the scene of action. He would ride in with only one attendant, and on a sorry pony, and the moment "Clerk Sahib" was heard, his influence would be felt. He reconciled angry passions, and in a short hour or two succeeded in settling their differences. While the country was the scene of battle, he rendered every assistance to the advancing army, obtaining all necessary supplies for their use; and himself riding in all directions, conveying despatches, giving information, or settling disputes. (Loud cheers.) He dwelt upon this subject, not that such things had been achieved by Mr. Clerk alone, for they were what might be accomplished by every man of energy, but to show what he had done. Sir E. Perry next referred to 1838, where no less than four distinct camps had to make their way through the country governed by Mr. Clerk, and, including the contingent of Shah Soojah, seven distinct camps. He mentioned the admirable mode in which Mr. Clerk provided for so large a number of men as they were passing through his dominions, for which one of the highest compliments was paid him by Sir Harry Fane, who said that he had "mistaken his profession—he ought to have been a soldier" (cheers); a noble compliment from a noble man. (Cheers.) Historians would probably differ from Sir H. Fane, and think that to his sedulous cultivation of the arts of peace for the six preceding years was owing the liberality which supplied so vast an army, and which astonished an old soldier like Sir H. Fane. He must hurry on: they would all recollect that our arms were victorious, and that their ally was placed upon the throne. In 1839 Runjeet Singh died; he was a man endowed with very high qualities, and at his death Mr. Clerk had to deal with a most difficult durbar. By his skilful management of the minds of men, his noble feelings, and especially his love for truth (all which might be even seen on his countenance), he obtained for the army the assistance of which it stood in need. From 1839 to 1841 Mr. Clerk's faculties were stretched to their utmost, and were eminently successful; nothing occurring to alarm the government amongst the Sikh durbar and the native chiefs under his control. In that disastrous period, in 1842,—Mr. Clerk shines forth brilliantly. There was one man, a contemporary of Mr. Clerk, and he a Bengal civilian too—a man who would adorn the military councils of any kingdom, he meant Sir William Macnaghten, who, when a discreditable treaty was proposed to him, exclaimed, "No! take that back, and tell them that death is preferable to dishonour; I defy Mahomed Ukhbar, let him come on; I stand in the name of the Lord of Hosts!" These were the memorable words of that illustrious man; and how prominently do they stand forth in contradistinction to the incapacity, he would not say cowardice, for he did not believe that cowardice could be found in the British army, displayed by others at that time. In that year, in which the finest army that ever crossed the Sutledge was destroyed, when men were growing pale, and the ablest men in British India were counselling pusillanimous measures, George Russell Clerk was there a tower of strength. (Immense cheers.) Ghuznee, and the besieged fortress of Kandahar, looked up to Mr. Clerk as to a guardian angel. But he would dismiss the subject, for he saw one man in the room, Col. Havelock, who had played a prominent part in those sieges, whom, he was certain, gratitude would induce to come forward in order to add his testimony to the truth of what he (the Chairman) had advanced. The Sikh army was the finest in the service of any Indian power; with a park of artillery of 250 guns, and 80,000 cavalry. Nothing but the admirable conduct of one civilian, George Russell Clerk, prevented that army from aiding Mahomed Achar. Such services as these could not be passed over in silence by a government anxious to reward merit; and the envoyship of Lahore, and government of the North Western Provinces, evinced the gratitude and confidence of government towards Mr. Clerk. In the latter government, his activity was the same as ever; but man is mortal, and ten years of extraordinary excitement had their effect on the frame of Mr. Clerk, who was obliged to give way. His failure of health was completed by a fall from his horse at Simla. In 1844 he was forced to quit the scene of his labours, and he retired to England a confirmed invalid. In 1845, an anxious period in India, what did the government in England? The Court of Directors sent at once to Mr. Clerk, who was then at Leamington, and begged and implored him to return to the scene of his labours. He was at that time very ill; his doctor told him that to return to India was to meet certain death; but he said that if his life was necessary for the public service, that life should be given. (Loud cheers.) He was driven back to England before he could reach India, and when he did arrive, the urgent necessity for his services in the Punjab had ceased. A grateful government rewarded the man who, of all others, had rendered the most signal services, with a seat in the supreme council at Calcutta, and very shortly afterwards with the governorship of Bombay. Thus in a few years the highest offices were conferred upon him within the power of the Court of Directors to bestow—the governorship of the north-western provinces, a seat in the supreme council, and the governorship of Bombay. The question that day was, whether the men of Bombay, having heard the facts of Mr. Clerk's career, were prepared to express loudly their regret at his departure, and their admiration of his history. Having thus stated the question to be determined, he would proceed to the cause of Mr. Clerk's departure. It was rarely permitted to narrate in public, details obtained in private intercourse, which were sacred, but as so doing would place a great man in a still more honourable light, he would state what he knew, in reply to the idle rumours which had been bruited about, and which were incidental to a large gossiping community. Mr. Clerk never thought of personal inconvenience, or personal health. There were some who supposed that dissensions with his council caused his departure; a more able council, consisting of such men as Mr. Reid and Mr. Willoughby, and the gallant officer on his right, Sir Willoughby Cotton (cheers) was not to be found. Differences of opinion occurred, and were to be expected; but they were the differences of ingenuous and able men, who had but one and the same object in view—the public weal. Mr. Clerk was afraid of himself, others said. He (Mr. Clerk) had so chivalrous a notion of the duties of a governor, to go about and see everything with his own eyes, that of the twenty-four hours of the day there were very few which were not devoted to the public service. Duty is paramount with him. Many men, he was afraid he himself would have been of the number, would have pursued a different course, and, suffering from illness, would have eased themselves of a portion of their duties. Mr. Clerk had carte blanche from the Court of Directors to do what he liked for the care of his health; he might have taken a year's absence, and proceeded to the Neigherries or elsewhere, but directly he felt that he could not do what he thought a Governor ought to do, he sent in an unqualified request to be allowed to resign. No one could doubt the loss they were sustaining in Mr. Clerk's departure. They were met there to do him honour by a spontaneous expression of their sentiments. Men of independence—some who, like himself, had attained the summit of their profession, and arrived at the conclusion of their career—had come there to say that Mr. Clerk had done his duty, and to thank him for it. He had unfortunately alluded too much to his own opinions, but he rejoiced to find that his opinions were those of the community. In conclusion, he would venture to observe that the inhabitants of Bombay, in seeking to do honour this day to such a man as George Clerk, were doing honour to themselves, by shewing that they could sympathise with and appreciate those noble aspirations for the public service which shone forth through the whole of his career. (The hon. gentleman was loudly and repeatedly cheered during the whole of his address.)

Lieut. colonel JERVIS moved—

1. That the resignation, by the honourable George Russell Clerk, of the government of this presidency, is viewed with deep regret by the inhabitants of Bombay.

Mr. LE MESSURIE (the advocate-general) rose and said he had the honour of seconding this resolution, and in selecting a military man to be the mover of it, he thought the selection an appropriate one, as the career of Mr. Clerk had been as much of a military as a political character. From what they had just heard of that career, from the splendid address of the chairman, he was confident that there was no one present who belonged to the civil service but must be proud that such a man as Mr. Clerk was a member of their body. (Hear, hear.) Commencing his political career in the school, and under the tutelage, as it were, of that celebrated man Sir David Ochterlony, whose skill in Indian diplomacy was unequalled; after filling various political offices in different parts of India, as Ajmeer, Nagpore, Delhi, Bhurtpore, &c., he was ultimately appointed successively to the high posts of political agent at Umballah, with the supervision of the protected Sikh states, Governor-general's agent N. W. frontier, envoy to Lahore, governor of Agra, member of the Supreme Council of India, and governor of Bombay. These honours and high places could not have been bestowed upon any man from the mere love and exercise of patronage, from interest or friendship with men in power; but on Mr. Clerk these were conferred as the acknowledgments paid to his great and eminent services, and of which the address of the chairman had given the meeting so full an account. They would probably hear from one present, and whom the chairman had alluded to (Col. Havelock), many particulars of interest relating to Mr. Clerk, in the military scenes to which he, Col. H., had been an eye witness, and in which he bore a part; but, from what they had heard, many (Mr. Le Messurier) thought could not fail to recognise in Mr. Clerk, a striking resemblance to a man who had been formerly a governor of Bombay—not for the short period we were to be allowed to have Mr. Clerk with us, but for many years—a resemblance which, since Mr. Clerk had been among us, had not only been felt, but made the subject of remark in private; the resemblance was to that idol of governors, Mountstuart Elphinstone (this name called forth loud cheers). Both had been distinguished alike for possessing the qualities and energies of a soldier as much as of a statesman. If Mr. Clerk had performed deeds which more properly belonged to a military man, who did not recollect the military exploits of Mr. Elphinstone in the Deccan war and at the battle of Kirkee, at which he was present and took so prominent a part—which led to the defeat and final dethronement of the Peishwa. And in their political capacities, if Mr. Elphinstone was distinguished at the courts of native princes for his skill and talent, and especially did they appear in the darbar of the Peishwa, they saw the like diplomatic talents exhibited by Mr. Clerk in after years at the different durbars where he had been employed, and which he had to manage and direct; but the resemblance between these two great men did not cease here; and Mr. Le Messurier went on to pursue the parallel at some length, remarking on even the figure and appearance of the two as being not altogether unlike—their urbanity and courtesy of manners—their frank and easy demeanour, and readiness of access to all, and abstinence in each from every thing like shrouding himself in mystery and a cold reserve, which made all inferiors who approached him feel that they were addressed not so much by a governor as a man of feelings, of flesh and blood like themselves. Who had not felt this in his intercourse with Mr. Clerk? And if in his private character and in private society he had exhibited such traits, was it not a pledge that he would carry the like gentle, as well as high, feeling and spirit in his public and official intercourse with those under him. He (Mr. Le Messurier) was not about to remark on anything affecting the government. This was somewhat delicate ground, and the occasion did not require it; he did not mean to advert to the acts of Mr. Clerk's government, but only to the manner of his government—not to what he had done, but how he had done it; and he would ask every one of those who heard him, he would ask any functionary of government, from the highest subordinate to the lowest, whether during the short reign of Mr. Clerk, short as it had been, whether one and all had not felt the high tone of Mr. Clerk's administration of the government, and whether it had not inspired a confidence and infused a spirit and energy into the minds of every man to do his duty, feeling confident that there would be no wanton and unnecessary interference, and that allowance would be made for errors and the difficulties of new situations, and that duty, if performed, would be appreciated? Allusion had been made as to the real cause of Mr. Clerk's resignation of the government, which the chairman had referred to and explained. He (Mr. Le Messurier) knew nothing of the secret reasons, if any there were, which had led to the step; but this he knew, and all knew, that Mr. Clerk's health was failing, and had been for some time, as was visible to all; and his retirement from the Agra government, under similar circumstances, was a ground for presuming that the like, and no other, cause, induced him to give up the government of Bombay. Both governments had been of about the same short duration—and ill health, increased by the severe accident that befel him in the falling off his horse, made him quit his Agra government—being too high-minded to retain office, feebly and languidly to carry on its duties, with weakened powers, merely for the sake of its emoluments and advantages. After a few short months Mr. Clerk, they saw, was obliged to resign another government, that of Bombay; and notwithstanding the pressing desire of his superiors (the Court of Directors) for him to continue, which the chairman had alluded to, he is found too conscientious and high-minded to retain his brilliant post with its emoluments and patronage, while in return he finds he can give but debilitated health to carry on the government with the efficiency and vigour it requires. There was one hope left, that, though about so soon to leave India, Mr. Clerk perhaps might not be lost to it for ever. In both his governments he had not enjoyed, nor had the countries or people under them enjoyed, the benefit of the usual tour of service allowed to governors of five years—indeed, not more than a fourth in either; and if, after a few years' residence in Europe, his health should be reinstated, not only would he have a claim to complete his unexpired tours, but his superiors would be too desirous of availing themselves of his service for employ again in one of their governments. (Hear, hear, hear.) He would now conclude; and he was sure the meeting would be unanimous in joining in the resolution he held in his hand, which was the expression of their regret at the approaching departure of Mr. Clerk. His distinguished career, that had been so fully enlarged upon by the Chairman, had excited all their admiration, but for his part it was not so much acts of a brilliant nature, which call forth loud hurras and noisy plaudits, which were most worthy of admiration and of value in Mr. Clerk's character, but it was those qualities which had found their way to their hearts, and by which Mr. Clerk had bound himself to them by the magic tie of sympathy; and he (Mr. Le Messurier) was sure that there was not one at the meeting who did not feel, in the words of the resolution, deep regret at Mr. Clerk's resignation of the government, and that they would express that regret in the address that would shortly be proposed, and shew they could not allow such a man to leave them "unwept, unhonoured, and unsung."—The speaker sat down amidst loud cheering.

A. BELL, Esq., moved—

2. That this meeting entertains a lively conviction that the continuance of Mr. Clerk's government for the full usual period would have been attended with great benefit to the community.

FRAMJEE COWASJEE, Esq., seconded the resolution, which was carried unanimously.

P. W. LE GEY, Esq., moved—

3. That the following address, embodying the above resolutions, be adopted by the meeting, and be left at the Town Hall for signature.

"TO THE HONOURABLE GEORGE RUSSELL CLERK, ESQ.,
GOVERNOR OF BOMBAY, &c. &c. &c.

"HONOURABLE SIR,—We, the inhabitants of Bombay, in public meeting assembled, have unanimously resolved to express to you the deep regret which we entertain at your having felt yourself compelled to resign the government of this presidency.

"Our regret becomes more poignant from having learned that the state of your health no longer enables you to devote that unceasing attention to the high duties of your office which you have hitherto exacted from yourself; and though we have sometimes conceived that a lofty sense of the obligations incumbent upon you has impelled you to make sacrifices for the public service greater than are demanded from any individual, we cannot fail to recognise in the resolution of your excellency to abandon the brilliant position and wide sphere of action which the government of this presidency affords, the same disregard of personal motives and self devotion to the public cause which have hitherto secured you the admiration and regard of all who have witnessed your career in India.

"Many considerations restrain us in our present relation to your excellency from attempting to signalize those high qualities for government which have induced the Court of Directors to place under your rule successively the north-western provinces and the presidency of Bombay,—a mark of high trust hitherto unexampled; but at this moment, when your excellency is on the eve of retiring into private life, amidst the sorrow which the occurrence excites, we feel that we may, without indelicacy, permit ourselves the privilege of recording thus publicly our feelings towards you, and our gratitude for the selection that was made with regard to this presidency.

"The few brief months which your excellency has passed amongst us have possibly not enabled you to give any considerable impetus to the slow march of improvement in the wide, and in many parts wild countries committed to your charge, but the period has been all-sufficient to implant deeply in our bosoms the conviction that had your government extended over the usual term, your beneficent rule would have made itself sensible in the remotest quarter of the presidency, encouraging in each branch of the service that zeal which is requisite for the performance of noble deeds, and thus producing such a healthful action of the government upon the whole mass of the community, as would have made your name, like that of Mountstuart Elphinstone, a familiar topic in the mouths of a grateful people, not slow to recognise, nor reluctant to applaud, the qualities distinguishing a wise statesman and a high-souled English gentleman.

"In conclusion, we would only give utterance to our earnest hopes that a short residence in Europe may restore you to the full possession of your health, and that those faculties which have called forth our spontaneous homage this day, may again be exerted at no distant period in some suitable public sphere."

Mr. LE GEYT said that the address embraced the subjects of the two resolutions which they had just passed, viz., admiration of Mr. Clerk's character, and regret at his departure. The former had been so ably expressed to them by the chairman, that few words were wanted from him to support the opinion that Mr. Clerk's excellence in Bombay, while practising the arts of peace, was not less than elsewhere in a time of anarchy and war. No measure of philanthropy or benevolence was ever represented to him that did not meet with his approbation. He instilled energy and zeal into every department of the service, and acknowledged the display of talents in a manner that was grateful to those who experienced it. The feeling of enthusiastic zeal and pride in the service of Government which existed in Elphinstone's time, had been revived under the government of Mr. Clerk; nor was it extraordinary: what greater encouragement to exertion than to know that it would be appreciated by a man like Mr. Clerk! (Applause.) Alas, that he was so soon to leave them! He rejoiced to believe that his mantle rested upon able men. (Loud cheers.) Mr. Le Geyt then read the address, which was handed to the chairman, who immediately signed it; followed by Sir Willoughby Cotton, Mr. Le Messurier, and others.*

Lieut.-colonel H. HAVELOCK seconded the resolution, and, after reading it, said that, in placing it on the table, he should have considered that his duty was done, had he not been forcibly reminded of the many years which he had served on and near that frontier with which Mr. Clerk's name—whose expected departure from amongst them they were met this evening to lament—was so proudly and indisputably connected. (Hear, hear, from the chairman.) He did not, indeed, feel that it was necessary for him to make a speech in that hall, for the object of a speech is to bring over to the opinion of the speaker those who entertain sentiments adverse to his own; but he felt that all whom he was addressing were of one heart and mind, and of his own way of thinking, on this occasion. But after having been so long employed in and beyond the north-western provinces of India, with which Mr. Clerk's fame was associated, he should appear to himself to be guilty of an act of desertion of a cause in which he had been many years embarked, if he lent his hand to placing simply the resolution on record without a word of comment. Reverting to the affairs of the north-west, in connection with which Mr. Clerk had distinguished himself, he was reminded of the very strong expression which one of the ablest and most energetic Governor-general India ever had, advisedly used to the Governor of Jellalabad at the period of his recrossing the Sutledge—"I have pronounced it," said his lordship, "and I have written it, and I now say it again, that the defence of Jellalabad was the salvation of India." Now it might appear egotistical in him to bring this saying to mind, since he happened himself to be engaged in the enterprise, were it not for the object with which he adverted to this memorable defence. Indeed, for his own part, he was free to confess that he took a somewhat soberer view of the achievements than his lordship had done. That could hardly, after all, merit the name of a vigorous siege, in the sequel of which the garrison shewed themselves able to sally forth and defeat in open field the army which for six months had boasted of blockading it. But there were considerations connected with the recent past and the hopes of the future, which gave a value to this defence far beyond its character as a mere military operation. Even regarded as such, however, it was not without its hazards and difficulties. The garrison was deficient in one of the main sinews of war—it had no treasure. It was in want of provisions. Its ammunition would not have sufficed for three such engagements as effected its liberation. It could obtain no further supply. Under its very walls 6,000 of as fine troops as ever marched out of India had been destroyed. Their general and his principal officers were prisoners of war. The families of some of its leaders, and others, were captives in the hands of the enemy. One solitary officer escaping from the slaughter, had brought the tidings of this great disaster to its gates. At one period its defences were smitten down in a moment by a tremendous convulsion of nature—an earthquake. In the midst of such events, and the forebodings to which they were calculated to give birth, it may be supposed that the governor cast many an anxious look towards India for succour and reinforcements. Between it and the Sutlej was a chain of mountains, every defile of which was strongly guarded by a race of warriors, by nature and habit eminently hardy and predatory, and at this moment wrought up to a pitch of phrenzied resistance by the fanatic exhortations of their mollans, who had preached up a religious war and a struggle of extermination against the unbelievers. "Now, of the defenders of Jellalabad," said the Lieut.-col., "Sir Robert Sale, Col. Dennie, and greater than either—greater than any and all that fought for the defence of that old wall—Major G. Broadfoot, are in their graves! But if it were possible to recal them (for the sake of India would it were!), or if I could summon round this table my surviving comrades of Jellalabad, by acclamation they would corroborate that which I now tell you—that in moments such as I have endeavoured to describe, the hopes and expectations of this garrison of succour from beyond the Sutlej were mainly built on the energy, perseverance, and address, of him who is known by you, gentlemen, and admired by you, as the governor of Bombay, but who was best known to that garrison, as he will probably, too, be best known in history, by the title of George Clerk of Umballah." The Lieutenant-Colonel added, that he would only trespass on their time by adducing one other instance out of very many, in which the talents of Mr. Clerk had been conspicuous on the north western frontier. He alluded to his management with reference to the retrieving, or avenging army, as it had been called, of Sir George Pollock, at the end of the Afghan drama. He would not detain them by relating how greatly this force owed its very existence to the firm counsel of Mr. Clerk; he should be led too much into detail if he described the extent to which he aided its advance to Cabool; he would not attempt to point out at length the way in which his efforts kept open the communications between Ferozepore and Jellalabad, whilst the armies of Nott and Pollock were engaged in the operations which terminated in the re-capture of Ghuznee and Cabool. He would advert to the period when our forces were retracing their steps towards India through the Punjaub. The numbers, the discipline, the formidable material, and the singular intrepidity of the Khalsa troops were now no longer matters of opinion and conjecture, but of history, and dearly bought experience. Now, he would put the question, surrounded by men eminently qualified to give a discriminating answer to it—What might have been the probable consequences if the sixty thousand men, and two hundred and fifty pieces of cannon, which afterwards, in 1845, poured across the Sutlej into the British dominions, had been suddenly thrust between the separated brigades of the forces of Nott and Pollock whilst engaged in crossing the five rivers? Might not a blow have been struck before the 12,000 men of the army of reserve could have come to the rescue, which would have shaken our Indian Empire to its centre? Now that the Lahore Durbar was at this period faithful to its engagements, and resisted all temptations to engage in the criminal enterprise into which it was afterwards led, is to be mainly attributed, under Providence, to the influence and dexterous management of Mr. George Clerk. He thanked the meeting for its patient and kind attention, and trusted that the remarks which he had made had sufficed to establish the claim to a recognition of important public services put forth in the address read to the meeting by Mr. Le Geyt.

The CHAIRMAN, in putting the resolution, remarked that it had been moved most ably by Mr. Le Geyt, and seconded in a manner which brought it home to the feelings of the meeting.

A. FORBES, Esq., moved—

4. That the chairman, the movers and seconders of the resolutions, and any other gentleman who may desire to attend, be appointed to wait on the governor with the address on any day that his Excellency shall please to name.

JUGGONATH SUNKERSETT, Esq., in seconding the resolution, moved that the address should be translated into two vernacular languages, the Mahratti and Guzeratti, in order that the natives might fully comprehend what they were to sign. He expressed great pleasure in taking a part in the proceedings.

Sir E. PERRY said that it was an admirable amendment, or rather aid to the resolution, and thanks were due to Juggonath for suggesting it.

The resolution was then carried unanimously, with the addition proposed by Juggonath Sunkersett, Esq.

Sir WILLOUGHBY COTTON moved—

5. That the thanks of this meeting be given to the Hon. Sir Erskine Perry, for his able conduct in the chair.

Major LE GRAND JACOB, in seconding the resolution, said that he agreed with the advocate-general as to the high tone of Mr.

* 138 signatures,—the majority of which were those of natives,—were affixed, after the meeting, in the Town-hall.

Clerk's government, and the spirit he had infused into all employed under him, and that he hoped the "Mofussilites" would have an opportunity of signing the address. He was himself a Mofussilite, and could speak to Mr. Clerk's noble character and the advantages of his administration.

Sir E. PERRY having returned thanks, the meeting separated.—Times, April 1.

LOCAL.

DEATH OF SIR ROGER DE FARIA.—It is with unfeigned regret we have to announce the demise, on the evening of Wednesday last, of almost the only Portuguese gentlemen in Bombay who mingled in general society, or was generally known to the community. Sir Roger de Faria was in his earlier days actively engaged in commerce. He was distinguished for his blandness of manners, benevolence of disposition, and uprightness of character. In 1843 he lost his only son, John de Faria, of the customs department, who, having met with a severe fall, was seized with lockjaw and cut off in the prime of life. Sir Roger de Faria had early in life contracted an intimacy with Sir James Jejeebhoy, and as fortune continued to smile more blandly on the affairs of the Parsee than the Christian knight, the latter found he had cause of more than sympathy with the prosperity of the former. The dispositions of Sir Roger were not less generous than those of his friend, to whose goodness he was often indebted for the means of indulging them as he desired. As the funeral party collected on Thursday evening to bear the body of their friend to its last resting-place, there were probably few who sorrowed more deeply or sincerely than the large band of mendicants—the poor and aged, the halt, blind, and lame—who now sat by the door of the house from which for many a year they had been accustomed to receive their weekly dole. Sir Roger had enjoyed good health and excellent spirits to the close; he was present at a large evening party at the Honourable Mr. Reid's little more than a week before his demise. He seems to have been carried off by cramp in the stomach: his loss is generally and deeply regretted. He had attained the almost patriarchal age of fourscore years.—Times, March 18.

CHANGES AND PROMOTIONS.—We have already noticed several of the arrangements in contemplation on the retirement of the Hon. the Governor—and of the staff officers who proceed to Europe by the next steamer. We have several blanks to fill up, and may now lay the whole before the reader. The names in italics are those of gentlemen spoken of for the appointments we have assigned them, in reference to which we speak on rumour only.—On the staff of the Hon. the Governor: Colonel Ashburnham, vice Captain Chamberlain, who returns to Bengal. Captain D'Arcy and Lieutenant McMahon are understood to continue on the staff. Captain French, private secretary, town major, vice Colonel Bruce Seton, who returns to Europe on the 1st of April. Dr. Straker, garrison surgeon, Surat, medical storekeeper, vice Dr. Don, who returns to Europe on the 1st of April. Major Willoughby, fort adjutant, and secretary to the clothing board, agent for the manufacture of gunpowder, retaining the secretaryship of the Clothing Board, vice Major Coghlan, returning to Europe on the 1st of April. (Major Willoughby held this appointment in 1840, during the absence of Major Jacob at the Cape.) Captain Parr, barrack-master, fort adjutant, vice Major Willoughby. Lieutenant Walker, quartermaster Marine Battalion, barrackmaster, vice Parr. Captain Glass, brigade major artillery, secretary to the Select Artillery Committee, vice Major Coghlan. The return of Lieutenant Marriott to Europe creates a vacancy in the secretaryship of the Military Board, under the works department.—Ibid.

PROFESSORSHIP OF ENGINEERING.—The Board of Education has, we understand, determined to recommend that no professor of engineering shall be appointed for the present in room of Lieutenant Marriott, proceeding home, the pupils already instructed not having been provided for by government. In the education report, referred to in another article, it was stated that education was mainly prized by native youths as the means of securing small government appointments; that the Elphinstone College, in fact, was the porch to the Secretariat, and that unless for the hope of reaching a place in the latter, the former would be very little cared about. So here we have another illustration of the thoroughly fallacious principles on which we are advancing in the hope of promoting intellectual elevation and culture; our youths having no notion of engineering or any other branch of knowledge, save that which will improve their incomes.—Ibid.

ILLNESS OF THE GOVERNOR.—His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief has, we are sorry to learn, been suffering severely from fever: he is now somewhat recovered.—Ibid. March 22.

DEPARTURE OF THE GOVERNOR FOR THE HILLS.—The Hon. the Governor and staff left Bombay for the Hills at three o'clock on the afternoon of Saturday, under the customary salute. They reached Nagotana about ten o'clock at night, and arrived at Mahar about ten next morning, all well. They were to proceed up the Ghaut without delay, and would reach most likely early in the afternoon.—Ibid.

GENERAL BARR.—Major-General D. Barr, lately appointed to the command of the southern division of the army in room of General Hughes, arrived at the Presidency from Deesa on the 23rd instant, en route to Belgium.—Ibid, March 25.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.—His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief proceeds about the 1st proximo by steamer to Mhar, for the Mahabuleshwar Hills. We regret to learn that he has been of late suffering severely from erysipelas in the face.—Ibid.

RETIREMENT OF DR. KANE.—Dr. Kane, we understand, retires from the Medical Board and returns to Europe on the 15th proximo, in consequence of declining health. In the regular course of gradation this ought to have advanced our worthy assayer-master to the rank of superintending-surgeon. The peculiarities attendant on this gentleman's position, in not being removable from his appointment, or required to proceed on regimental duty, we have reason to believe interfere with his promotion, independent of the G. O. of 15th June, 1835, and so Dr. Montgomery gets the step: and in the same category stand Drs. Gibson and Doig, who, if promotion continues to go on as it has recently done, ought to begin to think of getting themselves into regimental training without delay.—Ibid.

SIR JOSEPH THACKWELL.—We have received from a correspondent in the far north west, the following letter in reference to Major-General Sir Joseph Thackwell, who certainly has not been amongst the spoiled children of fortune in the rewards he has received.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE BOMBAY TIMES.

SIR,—Would not much greater credit be reflected on Mr. Hume, if instead of reviving the discussion of useless and stale subjects, such as the claims of the defunct Rajah of Sattara, he directed the attention of ministers to public servants of the state who have suffered from injustice or neglect? He would not only by such conduct confer a favour on the individuals themselves, but also on the public at large. The army affords pitiable instances of the ingratitude with which public benefactors are treated. Witness the case of Major-General Sir Joseph Thackwell. This officer, as is well known, earned the greatest distinction in the Peninsular campaign and at Waterloo. He lost a limb, and shed much blood at different periods of this war. He repaired to India in 1837, as if not content with the laurels he had already acquired. In the first Afghan war he commanded the cavalry division of the army of the Indus, and was present at Ghuznee. For his services in this war he received the express thanks of the House of Commons. In the Gwalior Campaign he again participated, occupying the post of general of cavalry. At Marahajpore he was struck by a ball, which had luckily spent its strength. During the last Sikh campaign, he was again at the head of the cavalry, and acquired everlasting renown at Sohraon, where he particularly distinguished himself. He discovered an opening in the intrenchment by which the cavalry entered, and was himself the first man to cross the ditch in face of the enemy. Whilst leading the dragoons among the enemy's guns, he had several narrow escapes. How happens it that this one-armed hero has received no other reward for his services than the thanks of Parliament? The latter is by no means substantial. Here is a proof how little merit avails against interest! O mores! This English Murat is left to pine in India, without honour, without a regiment, even without thanks! He has been upwards of forty-six years in the service. There was a report that the Governorship of Gibraltar was to be conferred on him. Why should it not be the case? Alas! he has no friend or relative in the ministry! Lord John Russell is a patriotic minister; why does he not increase his popularity by doing justice to a neglected though celebrated veteran?

March 15th, 1848.

—Ibid, March 29.

ILLNESS OF MR. J. WRIGHT.—Mr. J. Wright, of the house of W. Nicol and Co., who has for some days been suffering from a very severe attack of fever, is, we rejoice to learn, now considered out of danger. This is scarcely a public event, but Mr. Wright is so generally well-known, and so highly esteemed, that we shall, we trust, be excused alluding to his indisposition when the intimation that it has abated will be so generally gratifying.—Ibid.

THE HOT WEATHER.—The hot weather has, we fear, now fairly set in—the thermometer ranging from 78 to 81°, sometimes reaching 80° so early as 8 A. M. The wind has once more become damp and southerly, so as to threaten us with showers of rain: the feeling of the air is steamy, sickly, and uncomfortable. The same singular meteorological phenomena appear to have presented themselves at Nassick which we experienced here a week since.—Ibid.

THE SAME SUBJECT.—The weather continues intensely hot for March: yesterday the thermometer was 83° at sunrise, and 87° at twilight. The wind was southerly most of the day, and excessively damp. Parties connected with the household or staff of the Governor and Commander-in-Chief have more than ordinary reason to congratulate themselves on the opportunity afforded them of visiting the hills.—Ibid., April 1.

MOFUSSIL.

CANDRISH.—Coal.—We have been favoured with the following account of varieties of coal found in different parts of Candrish, &c., which at present will be of interest to our readers:—

“Borda coal has a foliated character; masses, in form approaching to trapezoidal; readily frangible; lamellæ easily separated; cross fracture more brittle than ductile. Colour, dull iron black: fresh fracture darker, and with semi-metallic lustre. Soils much, and has, here and there, iridescence. Burns slowly with flame, a dark yellow smoke and bituminous smell; crackles slightly, and cakes if powdered and wetted before ignition.

Spec. gravity of coal	1.297
Ditto do. of its coke	1.363

Residue after combustion equal to 36 per cent. This, however, would be much diminished when used in large furnaces, as the combustion would then be more completed. Carburetted hydrogen is abundantly yielded, and has considerable illuminating power without the aid of purification.

“Gurrawarra coal resembles in many points Glance coal, passing into slaty glance coal. Plates have a ligneous texture, are sonorous somewhat when struck, tougher than the foregoing species, and indeterminate angular. Principal fracture imperfectly conchoidal; cross fracture uneven and slaty; colour, uniform dark dead black, with but little partial and resinous lustre. Soils less than the Borda coal; burns with diminished smoke, smell, flame, and energy than the above.

Spec. gravity of the coal	1.499
Ditto do. of its coke	1.102

Residue after combustion 38 per cent. The same remark will apply regarding its more perfect combustion in large furnaces. Its gas is yielded less abundantly, and is less pure than that from the Borda (or Lonadeh) coal.”—Times, March 22.

KULLADGHEE.—Death of Ensign F. W. Crookshank, 6th M.N.I., from the Sting of a Scorpion.—A young officer of the name of Crookshank, on his way from Bellary to Bombay, was, when between Badamee and Kulladghee, stung by a scorpion, which being killed was found full of young ones. A tight ligature was bound round the arm to prevent the venom rising, which bandage the young officer cut off from inability to bear the pain of its pressure. This occurred after dark on the evening of the 7th or 8th, and during the night Mr. Crookshank became so ill as to resolve to ride into Kulladghee for medical aid. His strength failed him at a village within but four miles of the station, to which he sent for a dooley and a doctor, but by some delay the former did not bring him in to Kulladghee until late in the afternoon of the day, and the latter did not consider the case of sufficient importance to warrant his attendance—an apothecary being sent. When the young man arrived, he was delirious: he continued so at intervals for twelve hours, and at four in the morning he breathed his last. The medical officer reporting favourably on his previous health, and that the venom in this reptile, big with young, being in a high state of activity, caused his death. On a post-mortem examination the lungs appeared mottled on the surface, and were filled with serous infiltration. His breathing had been difficult previous to his death, but of his danger he had not the remotest apprehension. It strikes me as a curious case, more especially in one strong, healthy, young, and of fine proportions—nearly six feet in height; but it is a popular belief in the deadly activity of poison in the female, which prevails, which has occasioned me to forward the above melancholy details.—Ibid., March 18.

NEILGHERRIES.—Death of Col. Conyngham.—It is with sincere regret we announce the death of Lieut. Col. Charles John Conyngham, 2nd Bombay Light Cavalry, which took place at the Neilgherries on the 19th instant. The deceased had for some time been suffering from severe illness, and on the 20th November last proceeded on sick leave to Ootacamund. Colonel Conyngham entered the army as a cornet in 1817, and obtained his lieutenant-colonelcy in March, 1841. He accompanied the 1st regiment of cavalry as major throughout the first Afghan campaign under Lord Keane, and was, as a matter of course, present at the assault and capture of Ghuznee on the 23rd July, and at the occupation of Cabool on the 7th August, 1839—for which he received a medal in common with the whole army.—Ibid., March 29.

NERBUDDA.—Coal.—We shall, we trust, by and bye be able to lay in order before our readers the particulars, which we receive bit by bit, and publish as they reach, in reference to the coal on the Nerbudda, and the operations and investigations connected therewith, undertaken at the suggestion of the Indore resident, to whom in this and many other kindred matters Government is under the deepest obligations. By our latest letters from this quarter we learn that coal at the pit's mouth may be sold to advantage at nine annas a ton,—a price which sufficiently indicates the extraordinary facility with which it may be worked. It is hoped that it may be brought to Bombay so as successfully to compete with English coal, and when we keep in view that our cheapest coal here hardly ever falls under Rs. 12,—Rs. 10, Rs. 5, leaves a large margin for conveyance charges. Four hundred maunds having been turned out have reached the Nerbudda banks in safety, and will be put on board boats without delay by Messrs. Johnston and Fenwick, who will take charge of it to Bombay. The boats will have water enough even at this season until they reach Hirun Phall, where they will require to be unloaded; the coal must be carried from this in carts to a place near Tulluckwara, there being an excellent carriage road all the way. Here it will be shipped for Bombay, and may, as already stated, be in all probability disposed of to good advantage at prices under those charged for English coal.—Ibid., April 1.

COURT-MARTIAL.

LIEUT. W. H. WALTON, 29TH N.I.

Head-Quarters, Bombay, March 20, 1848.—At an European general court-martial assembled at Bombay, on Thursday, March 23, 1848, and of which Lieut. Col. A. S. H. Aplin, H.M. 86th regt., is president, Lieut. W. H. Walton, 29th N.I., was tried on the following charge, viz:—

Lieut. W. H. Walton, of the 29th Regt. N. I., arraigned by order of the brigadier commanding the garrison of Bombay, on the following charge, viz:—

1st Charge.—For having at Bombay, on Feb. 23, 1848, committed wilful and corrupt perjury, in having then and there wilfully and knowingly given false testimony on oath, before the venerable Henry Jeffreys, Archdeacon of Bombay, and diocesan of Bombay, in one of the documents required to be deposed to, in obtaining a license of marriage between him, the said Lieut. W. H. Walton, and a person therein named as Ellen Julia Veronica Anglahm, by then and there jointly swearing with the said person that he verily believed that there was no let or impediment of precontract, kindred, alliance, or any other lawful cause whatever, or any suit pending in any ecclesiastical court, to bar or hinder the preceding of the said marriage, whereas he, the said Lieut. W. H. Walton, well knew that the person named Ellen Julia Veronica Anglahm, in the aforesaid document, was the lawful wife of Manoel Edward De Souza, then alive, and residing in Bombay.

2nd Charge.—For most disgraceful conduct, unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, in having at Bombay, on the morning of Feb. 23, 1848, when informed by Major Gidley, his immediate commanding officer, at the regimental orderly room, of the reports which had reached him (Major Gidley) in respect to his (Lieut. Walton's) intended marriage, knowingly falsely asserted that there was no truth in the same, thereby intending to deceive Major Gidley.

MARKETS.

Friday Afternoon, 5 o'Clock, March 31, 1848.—In our report by the last mail we expressed an opinion that at the conclusion of the native holidays, then about to commence, a revival in business might be looked for; and we are now happy to be able to state that our anticipations in this respect have been fully realised. During the last ten days there has been considerable activity in our market, and large transactions have been entered into. Nor do we consider the revival we have experienced as merely temporary; but look forward to a continuance of business to a fair extent till the season be closed by the setting in of the S. W. monsoon.

MONEY MARKET.

There is still a scarcity of the circulating medium, but an easier feeling prevails, and confidence is again somewhat restored. It will be observed that the Bank has reduced its rates of discount one per cent. Bank Stocks, too, as will be seen from our quotations, have improved a little in value.

CEYLON.

ACCIDENT TO THE "SIR HOWARD DOUGLAS."—The Sir Thomas Gresham, now on her way to Bombay, with recruits for the 76th Highlanders, reports the following, which may be interesting to those connected with the welfare of the ship referred to. On the 14th of February, the Sir Thomas Gresham fell in with the Sir Howard Douglas, of Liverpool, bound for Bombay, in a very disabled state, owing to her having encountered a very severe hurricane on the 16th of January, in latitude 11 deg. south, and longitude 18 deg. 30 sec. east. During its continuance the Sir Howard Douglas lost her fore mizen mast, main yard, bowsprit and jib boom, every sail blown away, and two of her boats washed overboard—booms, binnacle, hen coops, part of the poop carried away, and the skylight stove in—the rudder gone, together with the whole of the larboard, and part of the starboard bulwarks. The severity of the hurricane, by shifting the cargo, threw the vessel on her beam ends, in which position she was fallen in with by the Sir Thomas Gresham, in latitude 36 min. south, and longitude 84 deg. 32 min. east. After the hurricane had ceased, the disabled ship met with light winds and calms, and was making her way to Galle or Colombo, by the aid of a temporary rudder, in the hopes of getting assistance to get to Bombay, by steam or other means. The Sir Howard Douglas is a ship of 700 tons and laden principally with coals.—Times, March 3.

DEATH OF MR. ARTHUR LAMBE.—It is with great regret we feel ourselves called on to record the melancholy death of Mr. A. Lambe, brother of Mr. F. Lambe, of the firm of Lambe, Rainalls, and Co., of Colombo. We learn that he shot himself through the upper part of the left arm whilst incautiously handling a gun in the verandah of his bungalow, on the evening of the 5th instant; his wound was progressing most favourably up to the 12th under the care of Mr. Daniels and Dr. Davy; on the latter date tetanus came on, which ended in his death.—Observer, March 16.

PEARL OYSTERS.—We understand that the Seaforth has been successful in finding some new pearl oyster banks. Some specimens of the fish have been sent to Colombo, but all hitherto found have proved to be too young for any hope of the banks affording any pearls for some time to come. This is provoking enough in these times of financial difficulties, but we yet hope Captain Higgs may be successful in discovering other and mature beds of oysters. The Seaforth returns, we believe, about the end of the month to Colombo, bringing Sir J. E. Tennent from his northern tour.—Times, March 17.

SCINDE.

ALI MOORAD.—By the B. S. N. Co.'s steamer Victoria, which came into harbour yesterday afternoon, we have received letters and papers from Kurrachee to the 27th and 24th ult. respectively. By the former we learn that H. H. Meer Ali Moorad had arrived at Sukkur on the 9th ult. on his way to the north on a shikar expedition, and that he had been accompanied by Captain Hicks and Lieutenant Walker from that station. They had quickly succeeded in killing three tigers, one of which was the largest ever seen in young Egypt,—the same brute which had last year killed four natives when hunted by two officers of the 11th N. I.

RETURN OF THE "CONQUEROR."—Lieutenant W. Christopher, in command of the steamer Conqueror, returned to Sukkur on the evening of the 17th ult., that vessel having proceeded up the Cabool river to within thirty miles of Peshawur. He had brought down some apple-trees, water-cresses, &c., with him.

THE WEATHER AND HEALTH.—From the Scinde Gazette we glean the following. The hot weather had begun to set in all over Scinde, but nowhere was any great amount of sickness prevalent.

THE SAPPERS AND MINERS.—The sappers and miners were about to quit Kurrachee for Bombay.

RETURN OF MR. PRINGLE.—Mr. Pringle had returned to Kurrachee on the 21st ult.

DEATH OF LIEUT. LEARY.—Lieut. J. H. Leary, of the veterans, ranger of woods and forests, died at Meanee, of apoplexy on the 19th. The deceased had only received his commission a few months since.

ARREST OF MR. VON GEYER.—Mr. Von Geyer, late clerk in the Commissariat, now proprietor of the Scinde Gazette, had been arrested on the plea of plundering government. His case seems a hard one; and indeed in all these trials there is affirmed to be a large amount of misrepresentation and corruption.—Bombay Times, April 1.

SINGAPORE.

THE "GENERAL WOOD" TRAGEDY.

For some time past various ugly rumours have obtained currency relative to the fate of the ship General Wood, which vessel left Singapore January 2nd, for Penang, having on board ninety-one Chinese convicts and one Macao Portuguese, transported from Hong Kong. We have carefully abstained from aiding in the circulation of the rumours alluded to, notwithstanding that we entertained fears for the safety of all on board.

It is now our melancholy duty to add that, like the Harriet Scott and the Freak, the General Wood has unquestionably been sacrificed to that cruel policy which sends convicts on board merchant-vessels without an efficient guard.

It is moreover our pleasant duty to announce the arrival of the boat this day (Feb. 20th) at 8 o'clock, bringing on Lieutenant

Seymour (Bombay Cavalry), Mrs. Seymour, and Mr. Farquhar, the passengers referred to above, but whose names we have till now deemed it prudent to refrain from publishing. Seventeen of the Chinese convicts also arrived in the prow of the Orang Kya, and are now safely lodged in the police office.

The following particulars we have gleaned from one of the passengers:—

On Sunday morning, January 2nd, at six A.M., the General Wood got under weigh, and proceeded as far as the Carimons, where she anchored for the night. Passengers went to sleep at about nine P.M., at which time all was quiet. At about one A.M. on the 3rd of January, a great noise was heard on deck, in consequence of the convicts having got loose; the convicts then put out the cuddy lights. It was then the second mate's (Mr. Tummonny's) watch; the latter then roused the chief mate (Mr. T. Quintom) and the third mate (Mr. Gill). On the chief mate's reaching the main-deck some of the Chinese struck him on the head with pieces of firewood with which they had armed themselves; Mr. Quintom fell down the hatchway from the effect of the blows, and went to the lower deck quarter gallery, from whence he managed to get into the sea, and was no more seen. The second mate, finding he could do nothing against so many convicts as assailed him, ran forward and jumped overboard—he was no more seen. Mr. Gill, the third mate, on being roused and looking out of his cabin door, received a severe blow on the head; he then withdrew, got his pistols, went out and fired amongst the convicts. Mr. Gill proceeded to Lieut. Seymour's cabin, and fell down groaning, from whence he made for the quarter gallery and endeavoured to thrust his assailants with a bayonet, but after receiving many wounds, he got up through the gallery window to the deck, and from thence to the mizen top, from whence he was dragged to the deck, where his hands were tied; in this exhausting state he remained until morning, and then expired. The captain (Stokoe) hearing the alarm, forced the cabin door, with the assistance of the gunner, but shortly after retreated to Mr. Seymour's cabin, where he seems to have lost all presence of mind; at one time he seized his pistols, loaded them, and fired at random.

Shortly after, Captain Stokoe endeavoured to cut away one of the quarter boats, but was unsuccessful; he then got through the quarter gallery into the sea, and clung to a rope for some time, until exhausted, his hold failed, and he sank to rise no more.

When the convicts rose en masse, the lascars crew alarmed, made for the rigging; others jumped overboard, and some were killed by the mutineers.

At the time of the alarm, the passengers were asleep; on waking up and finding the vessel in possession of the Chinese, they kept for some time in one cabin. Mr. Farquhar endeavoured to reach the deck from the quarter gallery, but observing a blow directed against his head, he dropped into the water, swam to the rudder, and held on until morning.

At day break the Chinese called all who were in the water to return to the ship, which they did, but on Mr. Farquhar attempting to regain the deck, he was struck by a cutlass on the hands, and compelled to let go his hold; he again swam to the rudder, and held on for some hours. A second time he tried to reach the deck and succeeded.

The Chinese then got the ship under weigh, and managed to work her themselves with the assistance of some of the crew, who were compelled to labour.

After twenty days, sailing in various directions (the Chinese not knowing where to proceed), about nine in the morning of January 23rd, the ship grounded on a reef distant about nine miles from Pulo Laot, North Natunas. The Chinese, as many as could, including the passengers, took to the boats, and steered for Pulo Laot, which place they reached at about sunset, and landed. When about half-way to the island, the ship went down head-foremost, carrying down with her some of the crew and Chinese for whom there was no room in the boats. On making the island, four Malays (the only residents in the place) met them; the Chinese endeavoured to prevent the passengers (who spoke Malayu) from holding a conversation with the Malays. The latter succeeded in securing the whole of the passengers and the remainder of the crew, and conveyed them to their houses, from whence the Malays returned to the beach to capture the convicts, but succeeded in getting only 17, the others having escaped in the ship's boats. The Malays managed to communicate with the Orang Kya of Pulo Bungoran, who proceeded himself before daybreak to Pulo Laot, from thence he conveyed the passengers and others to Bungoran. The Orang Kya then went in search of the other Chinese who escaped, but the Malays did not succeed in falling in with them.

The Orang Kya sent directions to the heads of the numerous islands forming the North Natuna group to search for and secure the Chinese who escaped and to forward them to Bungoran. Up to the date of the party leaving the latter place, nothing had been heard of the remaining convicts or the boats.

The captain, officers, and crew appear to have been taken by a surprise that rendered them powerless; or the mutineers would probably have been overcome or kept at bay, as their only means of offence at the onset consisted of billets of firewood; they subsequently got possession of the arms on board, which gave them full control; only one convict died from a shot-wound inflicted by Mr. Gill, the third mate, who persevered to the last in gallantly attacking the Chinese. Had he been aided by two or three others like himself, the convicts would have been got under. The tragedy was a truly awful one; humanity shudders at the occurrence. We ought to mention that Mrs. Seymour's Ayah jumped overboard and perished.

The General Wood, shipped two Chinese lascars at Whampoa; one had previously been two years in the ship, the other was a new hand. She remained at Hong Kong four days, and while there shipped eight men, three as lascars and five to do duties of sepoys.

When the convicts were taken on board, they had on leg-irons and handcuffs; they were then locked up in a prison built upon the lower deck, between the fore and main hatchways. A chain was brought from the shore and rove through their leg-irons, the end being secured with a padlock to one of the stanchions. On the voyage down from China, there was always a guard at night over the convicts, consisting of six lascars, one tindal, and four sepoys, armed with boarding-pikes, cutlasses, pistols, and muskets. Two of the sepoys were stationed below on the main-hatch, one on the forehatch.

There were three Chinese passengers from Macao who landed here (Singapore). On the arrival of the ship, she discharged all the stone ballast and took in a large cargo of sugar. The 'tween decks were filled up with planks, &c. The prison that had been built up for the convicts was knocked down and the whole space filled up, with the exception of a small part abreast of the main hatchway, which, not being sufficient to contain all the convicts, room was made for some of them abreast the after hatchway. The firewood was stored on the 'tween decks where the convicts were kept.

At 9 P.M., January 2nd, that night the ship was anchored and the sails furled. Four of the Chinese who were employed to cook for the rest of the convicts, eight who were sick, and two who were sent on board at Singapore, had not the chain passed through their leg-irons, as the others had. The key of the padlock, that secured the lock of the chain which fastened the rest of the convicts, was left with the sepoy, who kept watch among them on the main-hatch.

About 1 A.M. heard the Chinese calling out; got up and ran aft; met the sepoy from the after-hatchway running forward; asked him what was the matter; he said the Chinese have got on deck; met the 2nd officer at the main hatchway—he ran forward and was seen no more. It was very dark. The Chinese made a rush and secured all the ship's arms. There were about nine muskets in the 3rd officer's cabin, six boarding-pikes in the rack between the stanchions of the poop-rail. A box containing cutlasses, bayonets, tomahawks, and pistols was placed under the poop-ladder on the port side—this box was immediately seized by the convicts. I got on the rail, and a Chinese attacked me with a billet of firewood, I kicked him back; another man coming at me with a boarding-pike, I climbed up by the topsail haul-yards. The deck was lighted up by cups filled with oil and cotton; could see no more on deck but the Chinese convicts; there was a great noise on deck among them, being all busily employed in knocking off their irons.

At daylight, on looking round, it was found that eighteen or nineteen lascars were missing, and also three Chuliah passengers, the captain and first officer's servants. The convicts ordered the tindal to loose the sails; he wanted to heave the anchor up and make a long job of it, so as to have a chance of attracting the notice of the brig; but the convicts abused and threatened. They then knocked out the pin and bolt of a shackle and let the chain run out. The brig got under weigh at the same time, but did not near the ship. One of the boat's falls had been cut away;* the other fall was cut away by the Chinese. There was an European† on board working his passage, who was fearfully beaten about the head by the convicts (he went down with the ship).

One of the Chinese lascars said he knew the way back to

* The boat's fall was cut away by Captain Stokoe, who commenced cutting the other one, but received a sword-cut on the hands and then fell into the water, where he held on by a rope until, exhausted, he perished.—En. S. T.

China, and took upon himself to direct the ship's course. He took the ship through Dryan's Straits; a day or two after we passed a ship, the Chinese hoisted our ensign to her, but would not answer the signals she made. The ship was afterwards anchored near to an island, where eight or nine of the Chinese landed in the cutter, taking with them two lascars. A junk hove in sight, and the Chinese made signals to her to come within hail, by waving a red flag on a long spar; when she neared, the Chinese on board said they would take possession of her. The cutter went from the island to the junk, and after some time returned to the ship. On the 19th day the ship was hove to, close to another island, where some of the Chinese landed and bought fowls and cocoa-nuts. On the 20th day, at about 9 A.M. the ship struck a reef about nine miles distant from an island. There was a light breeze and a smooth sea; after she struck, the boats were hoisted out: many of the Chinese, the passengers, and some of the lascars, went on shore in them; about sixteen lascars and fifteen convicts remained in the ship, waiting the return of the boats. The water rose up to the main deck; at about 1 P.M. she slid off the rocks, and went down head foremost; several persons were floating about over the spot on the spars, hen-coops, &c.

After the Chinese got possession of the ship, they took one of the hatches off and broke out the cargo, eating and drinking any thing they fancied. Every man was armed each with some of the ship's arms, or with knives and thick pieces of wood. The crew now muster: one syrang, one gunner, one seacunny, three tindals, twenty-seven lascars, 2nd and 3rd officer's servants, two topases, one cassaub, one Ceylonese and one sepoy,—in all forty persons.

Another eye-witness remarks:—

* * * On the night of the 2nd of January he was sleeping near the cabin-door under the poop. About 2 or 3 P.M. next morning, when quite dark, heard a great noise and ran into the captain's cabin; he had just got up and desired to shut the door. Two of the passengers called inquiring what the noise was about, to which the captain replied that the Chinese had risen. The Chinese broke open the door—observed the captain run into the passengers' cabin—I ran and jumped overboard, swam round and laid hold of the rudder chains, where was found the first tindal, a lascar, and one of the passengers. At daylight the Chinese promised not to molest us if we came on board. A Chinese lascar commanded the ship. While under weigh the Chinese made inquiries for the chief mate, as they wanted him to navigate the ship, but he was nowhere to be found. About noon we passed a Dutch bark, one mile distant, and hoisted our ensign; she made a signal to us, which was not answered. The Chinese would not allow any one to make a signal.

* * * I saw a quantity of blood about the starboard gangway; some one was lying on the starboard side of the poop, as if he was asleep; a blanket was thrown on him, on which was a quantity of blood, and some on the deck and hen-coops. I saw the person under the blanket move several times; there were four or five Chinese keeping watch over him with cutlasses. . . . Saw neither captain nor officers. The Chinese tindal and carpenter were standing on the poop, giving directions how the ship should be steered. . . . On the 20th day the ship struck on a reef of coral; the ship had all sail set. Got out the boats. In the first cutter were about twenty-five Chinese; the passengers were on the poop. It was told the Chinese, if they killed any one, the Malays would not spare them, as the country was under the rule of a Malay rajah. The convicts wanted to kill the lady passenger, but after it was explained to them that the Malays would look upon them as pirates and treat them as such if they did so, they desisted. . . . One of the Chinese convicts hanged himself to a tree during the night; after which two of the crew kept watch over them with swords provided by the Dot Kya.—Straits Times, Feb. 23.

We trust the melancholy fate of the General Wood will be the last instance of sending away convicts without a military guard. The whole of the Chinese convicts were but lightly ironed, and most of them were under thirty years of age. On the captain's application at Hong-Kong, fifty-three pairs of handcuffs were sent on board; but so well did these men behave in the passage down from China to Singapore, that not more than seven pairs were used: this quiet conduct appears to have put the captain off his guard. With the Hong-Kong authorities must rest the principal share of the blame, since they were fully aware of the characters of the villains deported, seventeen of whom were transported for piracy. We may remark by the way that one Chinese died whilst the ship was staying at this port, and two other men (convicts from Malacca) were shipped at Singapore, making a total number of convicts ninety-four, with twelve lascars, selected from the crew, to act as a guard.

For the Government to pass an act disallowing the transport of convicts without a military guard were an easy task; but the authorities generally do not impose responsibility on themselves. It would perhaps more effectually carry out the object, were the insurance offices to unite, and all, without exception, refuse to grant policies unless military guards were placed on board convict ships. Government would be forced to comply with the reasonable demand of underwriters. The insurance offices here suffer considerable loss by the General Wood catastrophe, the policies granted being as under:—

ditto (two offices) Sp.	dls. 16,000
ditto Sp.	dls. 10,000
ditto (about) Sp.	dls. 3,000

The ship, we suppose, was insured by her owners, Messrs. Jardine, Matheson, & Co., in China, but for what amount we do not know; the whole of the risks taken upon the vessel and cargo probably exceeded two lakhs of rupees, in addition to which there was a large amount of cargo shipped here by Arabs, who religiously avoid opposing fate by insuring their property. The insurances effected here were on account of Calcutta offices, and the managers of the latter will, no doubt, represent to the Bengal Government the impropriety of convicts being sent without a military guard.—Straits Times.

AN ENGLISH CAPTIVE IN COCHIN CHINA.—In the beginning of October last a vessel, formerly known as the Little Catherine, but which had been bought by a Chinaman and converted into a lugger, sailed from this bound to Hong Kong, with a large cargo of timber, rice, &c., valued at 5,000 dollars. She was under the command of Mr. Victor Howes, an Englishman, who was the only European on board, the crew consisting of a Nakhoda and 34 Cochin-Chinese sailors; there were besides 15 Chinese passengers. Nothing was heard of the lugger after she left Singapore, and it was supposed that she had perished, with all on board, in a typhoon. It appears, however, that although the vessel has been lost, all the persons on board of her have been saved. Last week one of the Chinese passengers, named Ah-Tin, made his appearance here, having come from Yan-Tong in Cochin-China, which he left on the 19th ult., in a Cochin-Chinese junk, from whom information has been obtained of the fate of the lugger and her crew. The following is the substance of the statement which this person has made to the authorities. After being about twenty-two days out from Singapore, they experienced very violent weather, and a difference arose between Mr. Howes and the Nakhoda about the most eligible course for the vessel to steer. An attempt was made to cut away the masts, which was unsuccessful, the vessel became unmanageable, and she drifted on a rock in the Gulf of Tonquin within a short distance of the coast. The vessel became a total wreck, and such of the cargo as floated ashore was seized upon by the inhabitants. The persons on board made a raft, on which they reached the land on the 26th October, when they were all immediately taken into custody, and kept in confinement until the 2nd December. The mandarin of the place accused them of being pirates, and they understood that the matter was referred by him to higher authority, from whom orders were received for the release of the whole party except Mr. Howes, and directing them to be sent to China by the first opportunity. Ah-Tin then made his way to Yan-Tong, which he reached in a month and seven days after leaving the place where they had been wrecked. Before leaving, Mr. Howes, who was confined in a fort and allowed nothing for his subsistence but coarse rice, gave him two papers addressed to Mr. Bateman of this place, and which he delivered immediately on his arrival here. Ah-Tin understood that it was intended to send Mr. Howes to China. We subjoin copies of the notes written by Mr. Howes upon two small pieces of thin China paper, apparently with a Chinese hair-pencil and ink.

"My dear Bateman—The crew of the vessel took the command from me and run the vessel on shore in the Gulf of Tonquin, in lat. 16½ north, in Cochin-China, on the 24th October. I am kept a close prisoner, fed on the coarsest food, and if I remonstrate, I am flogged most cruelly. In the name of goodness, do what you can for me.—Yours, "VICTOR HOWES."

"P.S. My father's residence is Mr. John Howes, Pier Head, Yarmouth, Norfolk. Let him know if I am not released soon.

"Yours, in sorrow, "V. H.

"Should I ever get free, I will write to you.

"Show these to the authorities.

"Why am I incarcerated in this cruel manner?

"I have lost all but what I had on. I am covered with vermin—fed on a scanty portion of the coarsest rice, and am closely watched.—VICTOR HOWES."

It will be seen that Mr. Howes states positively that the command of the vessel was taken from him by the Chinese, and that she was run ashore. Ah-Tin denies this, although he admits that a difference took place. It is unfortunate that at the present moment there should be no steamers or other vessels here, either of her Majesty's or the Company's services, which could be despatched to procure Mr. Howes' release, but we trust that if he does not speedily make his appearance in one of the Cochin-China ships which annually visit Singapore, means will be taken for that purpose, of despatching a steamer from Hong Kong.—Free Press.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

TUESDAY, May 2, 1848.

SINCERELY desirous as we are that the advantages, direct and indirect, of sound education should be as widely and as rapidly as possible communicated to the people of India—hopeful as we are that the efforts now in progress for effecting these results may eventually be crowned with abundant success,—we must confess that, from time to time, incidents arise which are calculated to dishearten the most energetic, and dispirit the most sanguine. In a report referred to in a late article in the Bombay Times (part of which will be found among our selections), it is stated that education is mainly prized by native youths as the means of enabling them to attain Government appointments. In fact, the view taken of the advantages of knowledge is the most sordid conceivable.—What is education worth in the market? How can knowledge be most promptly converted into ready money? This is sufficiently lamentable. If such views be universal, or even general, we may despair of effecting any thing by education which is worth the labour of imparting it.

We fear that, in some degree, the teachers may be at least as blameable as the taught. The low ideas of the benefits of knowledge which appear to prevail in India are not peculiar to that country,—they prevail, unhappily, to a great extent in this. Knowledge is valued but as an instrument for the accumulation of wealth, not as one for enlarging the mind and raising man in the scale of moral being. This is indeed in accordance with the miserable philosophy of the day, which regards the material as every thing, the spiritual as nothing. Man, according to the approved Manchester doctrine, exists to make calico. If you can endow him with knowledge which shall increase his power of making calico, you will do something; if you only enlighten, purify, and elevate his mind, you do nothing. Whoever would see this doctrine expounded, should peruse the eclogue between COBDEN and BRIGHT, which appears in the last number of the Man in t' e Moon. There the religion of Manchester (for the worship of mammon is a religion after its fashion) is very amusingly illustrated; and though the light character of the work might lead us to expect a little colouring, the doctrines of the interlocutors are scarcely, if at all, exaggerated.

In India men do not want to make calico: that branch of business has moved westward. A different object is in view; every man is a place-hunter, and no man values any thing except to the extent by which it will facilitate his advance to some public department. To aid this purpose, Indian youth will submit to the drudgery of acquiring some smattering of European knowledge, but they care for it no more than a mechanic cares for his tools: they are necessary to his business, and but for this he would not repine if they were at the bottom of the sea. The love of learning for its own sake, and for the sake of the mental elevation which it confers,—a feeling fast disappearing, we fear among ourselves,—has never yet been known in India; and, looking to the prevailing opinions here, we can scarcely wonder that such should be the case. The higher branches of literature and science are not valued in India; and at home, but that proficiency in them is made the condition of university distinction, they would perhaps experience little more favour. From this cold and dead insensibility to the highest objects of merely human attainments, India must be roused, if India is to rank with Europe in intellectual wealth; and from approaching the like state we must refrain, if we would either elevate India or preserve ourselves from sinking. We hear much of education in these days; but if by education be meant only a training for competition in the lowest worldly struggles, it matters not how soon we hear less of the subject.

"May quackery flourish!" This is a sentiment in which that very numerous class who live and thrive by practising on the gullibility of mankind will join, mentally at least, if not audibly by the tongue, or legibly by the pen. "May quackery flourish; and impudent pretension carry the day!" or how shall those who have no better means of exalting themselves to high place and large emolument attain the gratification of their ambitious aspirations? The Bengal Hurkaru "is happy to learn that Dr. ESDAILE has been appointed Presidency Surgeon." We do not and cannot participate in our contemporary's happiness; first, because by this movement Dr. ESDAILE appears to have jumped over the heads of better men than himself, for his name, the Hurkaru informs us, "stands at the very bottom of the list of full surgeons;" secondly and principally, because he owes his elevation, as the Hurkaru also assures us, solely to the mesmeric mummeries with which he contrived for a considerable time to amuse the Calcutta public, and, through the Calcutta newspapers, the idlers of India, in whatever part of that country located.

Though seniority of standing should, ceteris paribus, give a claim for preference, we do not contend that it should be permitted to supersede every other. Extraordinary merit—provided it be merit, and not mere pretence—may well justify a relaxation of ordinary rules. What can Dr. ESDAILE offer in this way? He has introduced into India a miserable system of delusion, now universally exploded at home after a very brief struggle on its behalf, and he continues to maintain and uphold that system, in opposition, we believe, to nearly all his professional brethren in the East. With reference to the place which Dr. ESDAILE holds on the list of full surgeons, the Hurkaru says, with great naïveté—"Such an appointment can only be looked upon as the reward of distinguished services." Such an appointment should be made only as the reward of distinguished services, but Dr. ESDAILE's services are unfortunately summed up in the one fact of his having lent himself devotedly to the propagation of a gross and monstrous piece of quackery, laughed to scorn by all sensible men three-quarters of a century ago when in its youth, and denounced by the all but unanimous voice of the profession as a cheat when lately reproduced in its decrepitude. Our contemporary, with a confidence that is quite astounding, thus continues—"That Dr. ESDAILE is entitled to some such high mark of approbation no one will think of questioning."

For once our brother is wrong: we not only think of questioning Dr. ESDAILE's claim to the "high mark of approbation which he has received;" but we feel it a solemn duty not to confine our thoughts to the sanctuary of our own mind, but to give them publicity. We denounce this appointment as unjust to the profession to which Dr. ESDAILE belongs, and a pernicious example of the extension of Government patronage to a soi-disant science which is entitled to rank only with astrology, alchemy, magic, and the other occult branches of study which constituted the delusions of former ages, as do animal magnetism and a few others of the present time. A man who, in England, should pretend to apply magnetism or mesmerism to medical purposes would now be met with a shout of derision. The disgraceful exhibitions at the North London Hospital are over. While they were going on they were viewed by respectable professional men with mixed feelings of pity, shame, and indignation. The most distinguished surgeon of the present day said, during their continuance, "I am afraid to have my horses' heads turned towards Bedford-square, lest it should be thought I am going to that temple of humbug, the North London Hospital." But the curtain has finally fallen on the scenes once enacted in that temple, and men may now travel towards Bedford-square, and even as far as Gower-street North, without fear or shame.

The appointment of Dr. ESDAILE, according to the Hurkaru, "demanded some little exercise of moral courage." To this declaration we are able to give in our adhesion. Some moral courage was undoubtedly necessary to enable the dispensers of patronage to pass over the claims of fit men for the sake of favouring one whose friends must rest his pretensions upon his championship of a worn-out specimen of charlatanerie. The Hurkaru is wroth, even to madness, that Mesmerism is not patronised by the medical profession generally. "If the professors," it is said, "would do their duty, every hospital would be a mesmeric hospital when occasion required; that is, mesmeric practice would form a part of the daily routine along with quinine practice, calomel practice, or any other practice." But they will not. To their honour be it said, the vast majority of the profession are zealous in resisting and exposing the delusions of Mesmerism, gainful as they might find a contrary course. And so, as the members of the profession—the very best judges of the subject—will not have the quackery, the editor of the Hurkaru throws himself and Dr. ESDAILE upon the very worst judges that could be selected, the natives of India, who are conjured to club together for the support of a mesmeric hospital, in which mesmeric pranks might be played for the gratification of those who delight in such exhibitions. This, it seems, is rendered highly necessary by "the marked unwillingness exhibited on more than one occasion by the gentlemen in the charge of the various presidency hospitals to aid Dr. ESDAILE, either by sending him patients, or by sanctioning mesmeric practice within the walls of the institutions under their control." The unfortunate lunatic in Bedlam contended that he alone was of sound mind, and all the rest of the world were mad; but they, being too strong for him, had shut him up. Dr. ESDAILE is against the whole profession, and the whole profession against him; but he is right, and the entire profession consequently wrong, and therefore it behoves the natives—excellent umpires in such a dispute—to maintain an hospital, where the one wise man may do as he may list. This appeal from knowledge to ignorance is worthy of the cause on behalf of which it is made.

We beg to be permitted to offer one suggestion for the benefit of the meditated institution. No part of the world, we believe, is richer in astrological learning than India. Let the most able proficient in that illustrious department of knowledge be sought out, and let him be appointed Professor of Astrology in the establishment where Dr. ESDAILE is to be Professor of Mesmerism; his practical duties will consist in discovering fortunate times for commencing and carrying on the manipulations of his brother savant; and if by their united labours the institution do not prosper, why there is no reliance to be placed upon philosophy.

A MAN who loves his hobby better than truth is almost sure to get into difficulties. Speaking truth, and nothing but truth, is not only the most honest, but incomparably the safest plan. This, however, is a lesson which it is hard for many to learn—especially hard for system-mongers and enthusiasts; for men who would remodel society, not upon the great principles of Divine truth, but upon some little paltry crotchet of their own, which they pet for its absurdity, and pamper, not unfrequently, upon the unwholesome delicacies furnished by falsehood. Again, men who are sane enough upon all points but one, but upon that one hopelessly and irrecoverably mad (a very numerous class), are, for the most part, utterly regardless of the truth or falsehood of any statement which it may please them to make, in regard to any matter affecting their cherished folly. If there be a chance of benefiting the craft, that is enough.

By an article in a late number of the Madras Athenaeum, beginning with the ominous words "there is seldom much virtue in recantation," we are made acquainted with a little history which we regret much to be obliged to regard as true. A gentleman of the name of BROTHERTON, who, we conclude, is a ranting, raving, raging teetotaler, has allowed his zeal to carry him to a length which has been the means of reducing him to a very humiliating position. We are especially sorry for this, for Mr. BROTHERTON is a clergyman, and exercises the important and delicate office of a missionary. Now it is peculiarly incumbent upon such a man to reflect before he speaks, and to be prepared to defend what he has had the courage to assert. Such, unhappily, is not Mr. BROTHERTON's way. At one of these farcical exhibitions called "temperance meetings" (ironically we presume with reference to the notoriously intemperate language of the actors), Mr. BROTHERTON thought fit to advert to the emigration of coolies from Southern India to Ceylon, and thus to detail some of the alleged results:—

"From Tanjore the people emigrated regularly to Ceylon, and laboured there among the plantations; and if 500 natives went, no more than half or one-third the number returned, the bones of the remainder being buried in Ceylon. What was the cause of this? They had better wages, every thing was cheap, and why did they die? Liquor, too, was cheap: two-thirds died of the effects of liquor, and the one-third that returned, returned drunkards, and corrupted their more sober neighbours."

We will not stop to comment at length upon the odd effect produced by the reverend teetotaler's question, "why did they die?" which must remind every one of the pathetic remonstrance said to be addressed to their deceased friend by those taking part in Irish wakes, when they upbraid him with having left his own beautiful wife, lovely children, elegant cow, and glorious field of potatoes. We pass on to notice the effect of this statement at Ceylon, and here again we shall have recourse to our brother journalist:

"In the course of time, the oratory of the pious speaker found swift audience in Ceylon, and dire was the wrath which it excited. In the broadest words, and the biggest type, the Agricultural Society, three hundred strong, declared, that 'this committee hereby record their opinion, that the statements therein made are so contrary to truth, that they consider it their duty to give them a most emphatic denial.'"

This was extremely unpleasant, we apprehend, to Mr. BROTHERTON. We will, in charity, hope that he had worked himself into the belief of what he asserted, and if so, such a rebuff must have occasioned him a shock. But worse was to follow. The matter was taken up by the Ceylon Times, which, after suggesting (very properly we think) an outward application to the advocate of the hydropathic system of his favourite fluid, through the instrumentality of pumping, declared that the "author of the calumny against the coolies resorting to Ceylon" deserved "no mercy," and that no one should be admitted to the benefits flowing from the exercise of that twice-blest virtue, who might dare "to support the assertions of Mr. BROTHERTON in the face of fact." At this terrible denunciation, the water-drinker quailed, and he forthwith addressed the Editor of the print which had frightened him in these abject terms:—

"Although I have greatly erred in allowing myself thus to be drawn away by a momentary excitement in the first place, and in suffering myself to be influenced by a false shame in the second place, in not acknowledging my error at once when publicly called upon so to do; yet I trust that on the whole, when my case is heard, that credit will be given me for being actuated by a good motive in making the remarks I did."

Is Mr. BROTHERTON a champion of the doctrine that "the end sanctifies the means?" Does he believe that his "good motive," i.e. fanaticism, will justify his giving utterance to falsehood, provided it be calculated to please the crack-brained followers of teetotalism? However, if his offence were great, it cannot be denied that his humiliation was great also. He absolutely grovels before the party who had thrashed him into good manners. He says:—

"Though a sufferer in the discussion (by my own fault), I do feel most grateful for the manly and gentlemanly way in which the Ceylon press has taken up the matter."

Who would have thought that any one would feel grateful for a recommendation to subject him (the grateful person) to the discipline of the pump? How great must be Mr. BROTHERTON'S love of water! He revels in the enjoyment of it even when it is called in to supply the place of a cat-o'-nine-tails. Indeed, if Mr. BROTHERTON offend again, our Ceylon cotemporary must find some other punishment than pumping. It is like sentencing an idle sleepy-headed fellow to imprisonment without hard labour, a sentence under which he gets fed, lodged, and clothed without working for those comforts—just the life that suits him. The famed Duke of CLARENCE chose to end his life in the liquor which he best loved—Malmsey wine; and if Mr. BROTHERTON were sentenced to death by water, perhaps he would hardly consider it a punishment.

The offender was not content with striving to conciliate the editor under whose scourge he had been brought to something like reason; he thought necessary also to address his bishop for the purpose of expressing a hope that

"The magnitude of the evil of which he complains, and the purity of his intentions, will plead somewhat in his behalf."

Of this we need only repeat, that the purity of a man's intentions will not justify falsehood. But, after all, were Mr. BROTHERTON'S intentions as pure as he would wish to have them thought? Are the intentions of a man likely to be pure when he inflames his imagination day by day by exaggerated pictures of real evils, or semblances of evils which do not exist till by constantly gloating on these distorted or fantastic figures, he becomes incapable of forming a sound judgment upon any case to which their influence can be made to apply? A man who nurses prejudices till they destroy the health of his moral vision has no right to swagger about the purity of his intentions. It is not in his power to entertain a pure intention. His capacity for intending purely is gone as completely as the power of controlling a paralytic limb has departed from him to whom it belongs. He has tampered with the eye of the understanding till it is unable faithfully to perform its office. The light that is in him is darkness, and great indeed is that darkness.

H. & T. PEAT, SADDLERS, HARNESS-MAKERS, &c., No. 167, PICCADILLY, LONDON, avail themselves of the present opportunity gratefully to acknowledge the patronage which they have received for so many years from their numerous connections in India, and to solicit a continuance of that preference which it has ever been their endeavour to deserve. At the same time, they beg to state that, from their very severe losses, they are compelled to decline the execution of any orders unless accompanied by an order for payment (when shipped) upon some agent or mercantile house in London.

It is also necessary that the name of an agent at the presidency should be given, to whom the goods are to be consigned, as the utmost despatch will be used in the shipments from London.

H. and T. PEAT feel bound, in justice to themselves, to make it known that large quantities of saddlery, &c., bearing their name and address, which are not of their make, are sent out to India, and elsewhere, by other parties, and are of very inferior qualities. Gentlemen should, therefore, send their orders direct to H. and T. P. to ensure articles of their manufacture.

All military orders, whether Cavalry, Infantry, Staff, Artillery, or Engineer, will be executed according to the latest regulation, and a discount of 5 per cent. allowed for cash payments.

N.B.—H. and T. P. beg to recommend for durability their 10, 11, and 12 lb. saddles, in preference to the lighter ones of 7, 8, and 9 lbs., at present so much in demand for India; and likewise to observe that, in all cases where the goods are not insured, H. and T. P. cannot be accountable for any damage the same may receive after shipment.

HOSIERY and OUTFITTING WAREHOUSE, 146,

Strand, near Somerset House.—Mrs. WHITE begs most respectfully to recommend to her friends (more particularly those resident in India) her most beautiful make of Lisle Thread Hose and Half Hose for Ladies' and Gentlemen's wear; their lightness, durability, and comfort can only be appreciated by those who have tried them. She also strongly recommends a beautiful description of Merino Vest and Drawers adapted for the East and West Indies.

Mrs. W. takes this opportunity to thank her friends and the public for the liberal support she has received for the last six years, and begs to assure them that as she devotes the whole of her time and attention to her business, that the best attention will be paid to all orders she may be favoured with for either ladies or gentlemen, enclosing an order for payment on a bank or any house of known responsibility in London, will meet with immediate attention.

RIFLES.—Superior London-made Double Rifles, with extra shot barrels, swivels, slings, &c., complete, in brass-bound mahogany cases and double sets of town-made apparatus, water-proof outer cover to case, &c. &c. He tried a number of medical men, but their medicine afforded him no relief; he had recourse to Holloway's Pills, which invaluable remedy soon restored him to excellent health. These Pills act so immediately upon the seat of disease, that they are considered the most popular specific for bile, sick headaches, deranged stomachs, disordered liver, flatulency, and similar complaints; and, as a family medicine, Holloway's Pills cannot be excelled.—Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

Prepared only by Thomas Howard, Surgeon Dentist, 64, Berners-street, who will send it into the country free by post. Madras Messrs. Line & Co.

They allow the assured to reside in the Australasian and North American colonies, and at the Cape of Good Hope. They also allow to the assured for the whole of life one passage out and home to any of those colonies. For British India a very moderate extra premium is charged, and the premium is reduced to the English scale on the return of the assured life to England for permanent residence.
2. Premiums may be paid, and claims settled at Sydney, where there is a Board of Directors and Trustees; and at Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, where there are Agents.

ECONOMY! ECONOMY!

STEPHENS' DYES for STAINING WOOD, as a SUBSTITUTE for PAINT. For Decorating Churches, Large Public Rooms, and Theatres, as well as Private Dwellings.

When economy in expenditure of material and time is of importance, these Dyes will be found of the greatest advantage, as they give a rich colour to plain woods, while they reflect all the beauty of the natural graining, which is so superior to imitations by art, and, at the same time, avoid the disagreeable smell and deleterious consequences of paint.

The Dyes or stains, are in bottles of 6d. and 1s. each, and at 10s. per gallon. The Oak Colour may be obtained in powder at 8s. per lb., which dissolves in water to form the liquid, and 1lb. will make one gallon of stain.—N.B. The trade supplied. Also,

STEPHENS' CONCENTRATED and SOLUBLE INK POWDERS, which contain the chief elementary parts, in a dry state, of his various well-known inks or writing fluids, yet so readily soluble in the water, that by putting the contents of a paper packet into a bottle, and adding to it the quantity of water indicated on the directions, it is ready for immediate use. The economy of this article in carriage, from its reduced bulk, may be estimated when it is considered that one part of the powders will make twenty times its weight and bulk of liquid ink.

Samples of the smaller packets can be sent by post to those who may wish to make a trial of them.

All the above prepared and sold by HENRY STEPHENS, Inventor and Proprietor of the Writing Fluids, 54, Stamford-street, Blackfriars-road, London, and by Booksellers and Stationers throughout the Kingdom.

MUNNERY and Co.'s, 165, Fenchurch-street, City, where a large assortment of Shirts, Hosiery, Gause, Merino under-Shirts, Clothing, Bedding, Military Accoutrements, &c., adapted for each particular colony, as well as for the voyage, is kept ready for immediate use, at prices far more reasonable than usually charged for the same articles. Cabin and camp furniture of every description. List, with price affixed, forwarded by post.

Ladies' ready-made Linen of every description. Light Trunks for Overland.

S. W. SILVER and CO. CLOTHIERS, NAVAL,

MILITARY, and GENERAL OUTFITTERS and CONTRACTORS, respectfully acquaint the public, that they have completed the alterations at their warehouses, 66 and 67, CORNHILL, which enables them to concentrate and exhibit all the requirements of an OUTFIT. Being the manufacturers (with experienced managers) of the chief and most expensive portions of OUTFITS, they are enabled to produce and render them at WHOLESALE PRICES; thus preventing MILITARY and NAVAL OFFICERS, CADETS, and PASSENGERS generally sacrificing the usual intermediate profit. LADIES' OUTFITS (which are under the management of Females) on similar terms.

SILVER and Co. having a correspondent in nearly every ENGLISH COLONY, their customers may at all times avail themselves of their assistance. SILVER and Co. pack and ship their customers' outfits, clear and warehouse their baggage homewards, procure and give SHIP-SAILING Information, outwards or homewards, without receiving a commission for such business. Moreover, they do not allow the too usual commission to persons who introduce customers to them, that purchasers may derive every advantage. For example, individuals who are about to leave for India are generally inundated with applications and lists from Outfitters, who obtain the name and address of the party going abroad from persons to whom they pay (if they supply the Outfit) so large a commission for the information, as to materially increase the amount of the Outfit. Now, SILVER and Co. never forward a list of necessities to any one, unless directed to do so by the party (or friend) going abroad. Thus SILVER and Co.'s prices are not burdened with commission, because all recommendations to apply to them are pure and disinterested.

THE OUTFITTING WHOLESALE and RETAIL CLOTHING DEPARTMENTS, &c., are at 66 and 67, CORNHILL, and at LIVERPOOL. THE SHIRT DEPARTMENT for home use is at No. 10, CORNHILL. THE WORKSHOPS for Clothing, at 41, Bishopsgate-street Within; for SHIRTS and CABIN FURNITURE, at 33 and 34, Nassau-place, Commercial-road; and for SHIRTS, STAYS, BRACES, &c., at LANDFORT, near PORTSMOUTH.

THRESHER'S INDIA GAUZE WAISTCOATS.

THESE really important articles of under clothing, although manufactured expressly for India, are equally valuable in all tropical climates, and are strongly recommended by all medical men as the most effectual preventative of the many diseases arising from check of perspiration to which the residents in warm climates are so particularly liable. This manufacture possesses all the advantages, without the inconvenience, of flannel waistcoats; the texture is light, soft, and delicate, perfectly free from all irritating or disagreeable qualities, and a very superior absorbent, consequently the very best description of under-waistcoat that can be worn in India, or in any warm climate. The valuable qualities of THRESHER'S INDIA GAUZE WAISTCOATS are well known and have been long tested in India, and the very general approval and consequent demand for them has given rise to many inferior imitations, which, with a view to deceive, have been variously marked India Gauze, Oriental Gauze, Gauze Vigonia, &c. Messrs. THRESHER and GLENNY, therefore, beg most particularly to impress upon all parties the necessity of applying direct to their establishment, 152, STRAND, LONDON, for any they may require, and also most especially to caution the public against purchasing any article of the kind except those which are marked THRESHER'S INDIA GAUZE, as none others can be depended upon.

These waistcoats are made both for ladies and gentlemen, and Messrs. Thresher and Glenny undertake to forward them in dozens or half-dozen to every part of England and the principal towns of Ireland and Scotland, carriage free, at the following prices:—Gentlemen's, 75s. per dozen, and Ladies', 68s. per dozen; and also to pack and forward them, free of expense, to any agent in India, by the overland route, at the following additional rates, viz. 12s. per dozen to Calcutta, Madras, and Ceylon, and 18s. per dozen to Bombay.

OUTFITS TO INDIA, BY SHIP AND OVERLAND.

Every particular connected with outfits to India, both for ladies and gentlemen, including detailed lists of requisite clothing, uniforms, &c. &c. for every appointment, with the necessary variations for the outfits of CIVILIANS, CADETS, ASSISTANT-SURGEONS, &c. together with every information respecting passage by ship and by the overland route, baggage, packing, &c., will be forwarded on application to Messrs. Thresher and Glenny, as above.

TRANSIT THROUGH EGYPT.

From Alexandria to Suez, under direction of the Egyptian Transit Company, only 2 cwt. of baggage is allowed without extra charge, and no package or trunk should exceed 80 lb. weight.

THE REGULATION OVERLAND TRUNKS & CASES.

Manufactured by Thresher and Glenny especially for the TRANSIT THROUGH EGYPT, and for the cabins of the Peninsular and Oriental Company's steam-ships to MALTA, ALEXANDRIA, and INDIA, can only be procured at their East-India Outfit Warehouse, 152, Strand, London.

All communications addressed to Messrs. THRESHER and GLENNY, 152, STRAND, LONDON, will have immediate attention.

It will be supplied with all the Leading Journals and Periodicals of the day, particularly those treating on India and the East generally.

EAST INDIA and GENERAL AGENCY, No. 127,
Leadenhall-street (opposite the East-India House).

W. M. BOYCE and CO. in returning thanks to their friends and supporters for the liberal patronage already bestowed on them, beg to intimate that their offices are now established at No. 127, Leadenhall-street.

W. M. BOYCE and Co. continue to forward supplies and goods of every description to Messes, Families, and Individuals, on the most moderate terms, by the Cape or Overland. Passages to the Three Presidencies, or China, by sailing vessels, via the Cape, or by steam, via the Red Sea, negotiated on the most favourable terms.

Outfits for Officers appointed to the Civil, Military, Naval, or Medical Establishments in India, procured with every attention to economy consistent with the supplying of first-rate articles.

PAY and PENSIONS drawn and remitted to any part of Great Britain or the Continent. Luggage cleared and warehoused, and Parcels and Letters forwarded Overland to India.

In order to render their agency as efficient as possible, W. M. B. and Co. would call particular attention to the following points, which they consider of great importance, not only to their friends, but to the public generally.

It frequently occurs that gentlemen residing in India are compelled to send their wives and children home, and remain in India themselves. Circumstances often compel ladies and children to land in England without any one to receive and relieve them from the troubles and annoyances attendant on disembarkation, after a long and fatiguing voyage, and the clearing of their luggage through the Custom-house. In order to meet these cases, one of the Firm is prepared to attend any so situated, personally, and to escort them to their friends. Parties wishing to avail themselves of this accommodation should communicate their intention, in writing, by the Overland Mail, in sufficient time to admit of proper arrangements being made for their reception. Parents in India wishing to send their children to England for education, and unable to accompany them, may avail themselves of W. M. B. and Co.'s agency, who will undertake to receive them, place them at school, and act as guardians, if necessary. If requisite, reference can be given to parties who have already availed themselves of this arrangement. Inconvenience is often felt, and great expense incurred, in consequence of families arriving from India without having previously decided upon a place of residence. This may be obviated by timely application to BOYCE and CO., who are prepared to engage permanent or temporary residences for all parties arriving from India.

A residence of upwards of twenty years in India, the greater portion of which was passed in the East India Company's naval service, renders the head of the Firm peculiarly fitted for the business which is now sought, and which is merely reverted to here as a guarantee that the most scrupulous attention to the interests and wants of their supporters will be attended with the advantage of being able to impart, from actual experience, any information which may be required relative to India.

SUMMARY & REVIEW OF EASTERN NEWS.

THE intelligence by the present Mail which will excite the greatest interest is that relating to commercial affairs; and of these the Union Bank Post Bill question naturally claims the first place. The Harkara gives the following résumé of this and kindred matters. Full details, both of the proceedings in the Supreme Court and at the meeting of shareholders, will be found in other columns of our present publication.

"The case intended to test the liability of the Union Bank shareholders for the post bills drawn by the directors came on for trial in the Supreme Court on the 24th ult. A full report will be found elsewhere. The Court decided that the issuing of these bills was contrary to the constitutions of the Bank, but that the shareholders had rendered themselves liable by the recognition of them, as they had for some time past been brought to account in the published reports of the Bank. A point of law was reserved for argument, but on the hearing the Court unreservedly confirmed its decision. The Bank's legal advisers have recommended an appeal to the Privy Council. Another meeting of shareholders has been held since our last issue, but little was done on the occasion. The Executive Committee again reported that but little progress had been made in the realization of the pro rata contribution and the forced loan; only 26,000 rupees on the former account, and 20,000 rupees on the latter, having been collected since the preceding meeting. Recent events have, however, it is said, induced some of the wealthy shareholders to combine for the purpose of protecting themselves, by coming forward liberally with their means to meet the demands of the creditors. It is understood that Government has refused to allow Mr. H. M. Elliott, one of its civil servants, to act as a member of the Executive Committee."

"The soundness of the views of the Court seemed generally acquiesced in, though at variance with the opinions previously given by counsel. This will maintain or extend the responsibilities of the shareholders, in proportion as it protects the interests of the bill-owners. The prospects of the bank seem to darken on every side: the shareholders hold back in stolid apathy, while the creditors are beginning to push their claims with relentless determination. The debtors of the bank, and those who have literally made away with a couple of millions of its funds, are treated with a gentleness and forbearance, which contrast singularly with the warmth with which the unhappy shareholders are urged on. Mr. Ayrton, attorney, has been sent round by the Commercial Bank of Lombay, to insist on early payment of the 40,000*l.* of its funds, appropriated to their own uses by the Union Bank, when sent to them for the purchase of bills on England. The members of the Calcutta Bar have unanimously refused to hold briefs along with Sir Thomas Turton, one of these most deeply implicated in the bank transactions. Sir Thomas was, it may be remembered, secretary to Lord Durham in Canada, in 1838: he was a barrister of much repute and high practice. Shortly after his return to India, he became ecclesiastical registrar of the Supreme Court, with a salary of 6,000*l.* a year. While in this position he speculated largely with the funds committed to his charge—the deficits amounting to some 50,000*l.* On these coming to light he resigned his appointment, with a view of resuming practice at the Bar, when his brethren refused to accept of briefs along with him. Mr. Grant, son of the late Chief Justice Sir John Peter Grant, seems to be in not much better favour, and for kindred reasons."

At Madras not less indignation is manifested, as will appear by an extract which we submit, from a leading article in the Athenæum; and this, by concluding with a very pithy quotation from the Englishman, carries us back to the state of feeling in Calcutta:—

"It adds nothing to our knowledge, but increases not a little our discomfort, to learn, as we do from the Friend of India, of the 23rd ult. that the public of Calcutta stand up for the rights of caste, and are resolved that the respectable men, who have inflicted such deep injury to the fortunes of hundreds, and disgraced the national character, shall not be visited with the punishment which is measured out to petty villians. Our contemporary observes, that, 'the history of these notorious proceedings, by which the bank has been rendered insolvent, there is we fear, little hope of obtaining. Indeed we may venture to predict, that it will never be given. The disclosures would be fatal to the character of many whom Society has not the courage to proscribe. There appears to be a far greater disposition to screen, than to expose delinquency.' It is to be hoped, that this state of things will not become known in England, before the May meetings are held, or it may tend to diminish the amount usually subscribed for the support of Indian missions. An increased sum may be given towards the founding of new churches in Calcutta. Bibles may be voted for benighted merchants, and phia rults for honest living, may be provided for the use of judges and favourite barristers, but surely it will be said, that religious teaching should, like charity, begin at home. What will Ashootesh Dey, who has had to pay two lacs, because he was unwise enough to accept, what he thought was an honorary appointment, say to his countrymen, when he hears that Sir Thomas Turton is misus five times that amount, with impunity? If he were young, and had a genius for speculation, he might perhaps consider that the Christianity of fashionable life would be of great assistance to him, but then would come the thought, that if he failed in reaching one of the highest stations, and yet indulged his passion for unlawful gain,—if, instead of having a Turton 'the Registrar,' for his dear friend, he should have a Turton 'an eminent barrister,' pleading for his conviction in the criminal courts; regretting that his stern duty to society compelled him to ask, that for the sake of public example, the heaviest punishment should be inflicted on the prisoner, he might pause, and consider if it were worth while to abandon creed and kindred for such doubtful advantages. If Ashootesh Dey be a man of profound sagacity, he will not lay at the door of our religion the vice of the registrar, and the cowardly neglect of duty displayed by the officers of justice; but if, as is most probably the case, he is only a shrewd, painstaking native, he will look upon our boasted morality as a system of deception, and our criminal jurisprudence as a game in which virtue has no stake—in which the passions and vices of men contend for the mastery, whilst the devil looks on, and applauds the players.

"What a profound satire upon civilization is contained in the declaration that the culprits in the gigantic frauds which have been perpetrated will escape, because 'Society has not the courage to proscribe' them. Why, Society has the courage to proscribe every vice which is allied to poverty. It is tender-hearted, yet it supports the hangman. Is alive to the blessings of freedom, but it scruples not to send gangs of men into slavery for crimes rendered venial by misery. Our contemporaries, who shrink from inflicting even the punishment of notoriety upon the wealthy offenders who have transgressed without the excuse of temptation, chronicle police reports, and are faithful in the matters of housebreaking and robbery. It is in a tone of bitter irony that the Calcutta Englishman remarks as follows upon the proposal of the Hurkaru, with reference to the propriety of obtaining the services of Mr. Elliott as a member of the Executive Committee of the Union Bank.

"The Hurkaru is anxious to have the assistance of a Government Secretary, in order that delinquency, if detected, should be pursued and punished. A smart attorney would, we think, do this kind of work rather better than a high officer of government. But really we must regard the proposal as made in jest. What chance is there of delinquents being punished? Who are to prosecute, and, if a prosecutor could be found, what chance has he to succeed? Here in Calcutta, if a man commits a cruel murder, he may perhaps be imprisoned for a twelvemonth. If he seduces another man's wife, and by her aid steals his property, it will be held no offence at all! If he raises thirty thousand rupees by a forgery, he will be permitted to keep the money. Why then should those fear punishment who have only made ducks and drakes of a crore and a half of rupees? If they deserve punishment, it is for being such fools as to have got through so large a sum without making their own fortunes. That, however, is hardly an offence cognizable by law, and therefore the time of an able public officer would be very ill applied in trying to bring the delinquents to punishment."

And here, for the present, we may take leave of the Union Bank, and the astounding disclosures connected with its break-up.

The eddy of failure has been widened by the suspension of payment by the house of CARR, TAGORE, and Co. A meeting of creditors has been held, and trustees appointed, under whom the members of the firm are to conduct the business. Statements of liabilities and assets are proverbially fallacious; but if that submitted on the part of this house be an exception in the way of trustworthiness, there will be enough to pay all creditors, and something left for the partners: the liabilities being announced at twenty-five lacs, the assets at twenty-nine. It is to be hoped that the accuracy of this statement will be borne out by the result; but we apprehend that it gives a view of the situation of the house far less flattering than most persons would have anticipated. A surplus of four lacs beyond liabilities is a poor exhibition for this magnificent firm of reputed merchant princes, the chief native member of which was wont to amuse himself by rambling about Europe, and there indulging in unlimited expense. Instead of a surplus of four lacs, men might have looked for one of forty lacs at the least.

A melancholy accident has occurred to a steamer on the Ganges, the particulars of which will be found elsewhere.

In GOOMSOOR affairs were becoming tranquil, the Khond chiefs having nearly all submitted.

At BOMBAY the arrival of the new governor Lord FALKLAND was looked for about the 26th or 28th ult.

SCINDE continued healthy and peaceable. The latter quality, however, seemed likely to be of somewhat uncertain duration, in consequence of ISLAM KHAN, the Bhoogie chief, who surrendered in September last to Lieutenant MEREWETHER, and who was located by Government on the rich lands near Larkhana, having fled with his family. His return in his former character in the cold season was thought not improbable.

It remains to notice one event which a short time ago might have been of some importance—the death of the Rajah of SATTARA. His Highness was in the 46th year of his age. He had enjoyed his dignity for nearly nine years, and, says the Bombay Times, "had ruled wisely and well." His youth had been dissolute—of what native prince may not this be affirmed? but as a ruler he might bear a comparison with the best of his class. He abolished suttee, constructed bridges, roads, and tanks, and seemed generally desirous to carry out the wishes of the British Government for the welfare of the people.

BENGAL.

THE UNION BANK.

SUPREME COURT, MARCH 24.

(Before the Chief Justice and Sir H. W. Leton.)

W. C. Braddon and Others, partners in Bagshaw and Co., s. W. H. Abbot, Secretary of the Union Bank.

This was an action against the Secretary of the Union Bank for nonpayment of certain promissory notes, or bills of exchange, issued in the name of that establishment.

Messrs. PRINSEP, COCHRANE, and RITCHIE, for the plaintiffs; the ADVOCATE-GENERAL, Mr. DICKENS, and Mr. MORTON, for the Bank.

The first count alleged that, on the 1st July, 1847, the Union Bank made their promissory note for Company's Rs. 10,000, payable sixty days after sight to the order of Messrs. Cockerell, Larpent, and Co., from whom, after several indorsements, the instrument came to be the property of the plaintiffs upon record.

The second, third, fourth, fifth, and sixth counts related to five other instruments of the same description, and each for the same amount, of which they spoke to the same effect.

The seventh count treated the first of these instruments as a bill of exchange, which the Union Bank made, directing it to the defendant, as secretary of the bank, and requiring him, sixty days after sight, to pay to Cockerell, Larpent, and Co., Company's Rs. 10,000; that the same was indorsed to the plaintiffs, through the intermediate indorsements referred to above; and that the secretary saw the instrument on the 25th of October, 1847, "by and through one William Hay," the deputy-secretary of the Union Bank, who, by virtue of a legitimate authority vested in him, accepted it on behalf of the Union Bank.

The like mention was made of the remaining five documents, in the eighth, ninth, tenth, eleventh, and twelfth counts; and the plaint concluded by stating, in a separate count, that the Union Bank was, also, on the 14th January last, indebted to the plaintiffs in Company's rupees one lac, for money found to be due upon an account then stated between them; and that upon this, the bank, on the same day, promised to pay the amount, but never redeemed the engagement.

The defendant pleaded, first, that the Union Bank did not make the supposed promissory notes; secondly, that the Union Bank did not see them; thirdly, that the Union Bank did not make the supposed bills of exchange; fourthly, that William Hay, the deputy-secretary, was not authorised to accept them on behalf of the Union Bank; and, fifthly, that the bank did not promise to pay the sum of Rs. 100,000 in the manner and form alleged in the thirteenth count.

Mr. PRINSEP opened the proceedings, and, after some preliminary observations, went on to say, that the question might probably be raised whether the promise conveyed was a promise on account of the proprietors of the bank to pay, or a promise to pay on their account; but, from the general tenor of the instruments, it would not be difficult in determining whether the bills were those of the Union Bank itself, or of those only who drew them. In the recent case of "Malcolm v. Smith, Cowell and Co.," in respect of a bill drawn by the defendants on the part of the Santipore Sugar Company, the verdict, indeed, did go against the parties signing the document; but there was nothing upon the bill there that connected the drawers with the company. In this instance, there was an express and distinct declaration answering such a connection; for the instruments, upon the very face of them, purported to be "Union Bank Post-bills;" and as there was but one Union Bank in Calcutta, the identity could not be disputed. That the issue was a matter of usual practice in a banking establishment in Calcutta, would appear in evidence. At the conclusion of a lengthened address, the learned counsel called witnesses in support of his case.

The ADVOCATE-GENERAL submitted that the defendant was entitled to a nonsuit, on the ground that the plaintiffs had failed to prove the legal obligation on the bank. If the court were against him upon that point, he would submit that the plaintiffs had failed to shew any authority on the part of the Directors to bind the shareholders of the Union Bank by a document in the form in which the bills were drawn up; and he would further submit that no evidence of ratification could avail him in an action of this nature, directed as it was against a fluctuating body like the proprietary of the Union Bank, and founded upon an Act, authorising the institution to sue and be sued through its secretary.

At the conclusion of the learned counsel's address,

The CHIEF-JUSTICE delivered judgment.—In delivering my judgment upon this occasion, I must not be understood to be conveying a firm and deliberate opinion, but to be giving expression to my views in the form of a summing up to a jury; and I wish it to be distinctly known that any opinion I may offer now will be subject to revision at a future opportunity. The Court has not before it such a full discussion of the points involved in the action as to enable it to arrive at a precise judgment; and hence our reason for stating that we shall be open to further arguments.

In regard to the form of the instruments in dispute, we look upon them as promissory notes; and the plaintiffs can claim a verdict only upon the counts treating them as such. We have no doubt that, by the form of these documents, it is the Union Bank of Calcutta that promises to pay; for it would be, in our opinion, yielding to too subtle a construction of a mercantile instrument to adopt the view taken of its import by the learned counsel for the defence.

There appears to us to be a wide distinction between this case and that of the Santipore Sugar Company. If in the latter there had been any words shewn in connection with the signature as a proof that that signature should be taken to be that of the Company, my decision would have been different; but there was no signature on the document either in their own name, or in any form recognised and usually adopted by the Company; and, therefore, it was that I decided that the only drawers, and consequently the only liable parties, were Smith, Cowell, and Co., and unless responsibility were fixed upon them, there would have been no person liable for the amount of the action. This action turns upon the making or drawing of a promissory note by persons signing themselves as "Directors;" and when they say, we promise to pay on account of the proprietors of the Union Bank, we cannot possibly view their words in the light of a mere direction to pay the bill to credit upon payment, but construe them as applying to the word "promise," and not simply restricted to the word "pay."

In reference to the other question, it involves a point of vast importance; and I am not aware of any decisive cases in regard to it. The current of the modern cases does go to make some distinctions between joint stock companies and private partnerships; but, as I have said, I know of no decided authority upon the subject. All the decisions that have been quoted, are decisions of joint stock companies of a different character from that of a banking establishment. I do not know that there is any decision in which, where a joint stock company has in point of fact issued negotiable instruments, in the absence of authority for such issue, liability has been fixed upon the parties that have been instruments to the circulation. If there should be any decided case of such a nature, of course, it will be our duty to bow to it.

As to the subject of the ratification, there is great weight in the argument urged by the learned Advocate-General that all the members of this copartnership would be indiscriminately bound by our decision. Whereas, in so far as it might affect many, there may be no ground whatever for supposing that there has been any actual ratification of the acts that have been going on. But still the same objection may apply to every other partnership, however limited. It is, therefore, no doubt true that to include innocent parties with parties recognising the acts now protested against, would be to open the way to great difficulties; but the opposite conclusion would lead to greater. Notwithstanding, however, if any authority from the superior courts can be produced that modify the common law of partnerships, we shall be willing to yield to it.

Our present decision, therefore, is that the plaintiffs take a verdict, with interest, upon the counts treating the instruments as promissory notes; but that a verdict for the defendant be recorded upon the counts describing them as bills of exchange, leave being reserved to him to move generally for the reversal of the verdict entered for the plaintiffs. Upon the accounts stated, there has been no evidence, and the verdict upon the count respecting them is also in favour of the defendant.

THURSDAY, MARCH 30.

A rule nisi for the reversal of the verdict having been obtained by the defendant, on the grounds—First: That the instruments proved were insufficient in form, and did not in the face of them sufficiently import a promise by or on behalf of the Union Bank. Second: That there was no authority to issue such instruments, and that no ratification on the part of the entire body of shareholder was shewn,

Mr. PRINSEP, Mr. COCHRANE, and Mr. RITCHIE, shewed cause against it.

On the following day Messrs. DICKENS and MORTON were heard in support of the rule. On

MONDAY, APRIL 3,

The ADVOCATE-GENERAL having been heard in support,

JUDGMENT.

The Court gave judgment.—In construing mercantile instruments, it is particularly the duty of a court of justice to regard the intention rather than the form, and to give effect to the whole instrument. The intention must be collected from the instrument, but resort may be had to mercantile usages in certain cases, as a key to its exposition. If the whole of one of these bank post-bills be considered, it will in effect run thus:—This is a Union Bank post-bill whereby we A. B. and C. D., directors of the Union Bank, promise to pay on account of the proprietors of the Union Bank, &c. To construe this as the promissory note, not of the Union Bank, but of the actual makers, we must consider the description of its "Union Bank post-bill," as though it were struck out, the addition of the words "directors" as mere description, unnecessary, and even tending to mistake and deception, and the countersignature of the secretary as an unmeaning form. But we think that by the addition of the words directors to their signatures, and by the countersignature of another officer of the Union Bank, the actual subscribers to the note, testify that they adopt the descriptive part of the note, and render it true and operative, instead of nullifying it. It is conceded that if the words, "on account of the proprietors of the Union Bank," had come in between the words "promise" and "to pay," or had preceded the word promise, they would have had the meaning of "for" or "on behalf of," and would not have borne to be considered as importing an engagement primary, though undertaken on the part of others. The controlling force of the words "on account, &c.," must rest in this case on their mere collocation. But although in some cases the collocation or arrangement of words may be important, and furnish an auxiliary argument of greater or less force, according to the circumstances of such cases, we find in this case no such controlling power in it as to justify us in viewing these words as neutralizing the effect of the other evidence of intention which the note presents. In "Hall v. Ashurst," stress was laid by Lord Lyndhurst on a similar arrangement of words; but he also dwelt, as did the other judges, on the strong probability which that case afforded, being an engagement from one attorney to another in relation to the expenses of certain proceedings before a bankruptcy court, that credit was meant to be given to the party signing; it was not clear that the creditors would be bound, or that any other person than the signer would be bound. The case, if it is not presumption for us to say so, appears to us to be perfectly correctly decided, but to be clearly distinguishable from the present. The instrument was not similar, and had the evidence of probability been the reverse of what it was, and of as strong a character, we have no doubt that the decision would have been otherwise despite the arrangement of the words. A guarantee may be expressed in any words; so as they show a sufficient consideration. In modern times, the order of covenants or agreements as they are found arranged is little regarded: the whole deed or writing is weighed, so that the whole may be made to harmonize. A partner who may have authority to bind his partnership firm by a guarantee rarely considers very nicely, in writing and signing a guarantee on account of the firm, the form and order of the words which he writes. The words I guarantee, and I undertake to pay, are equivalent expressions, and it would be just the same whether he wrote I guarantee, or I undertake to pay on account of Messrs. So and So the firm, or I on account of Messrs. So and So guarantee or undertake to pay, &c. That would be too narrow a construction which, the circumstances otherwise being the same, held the first to be his personal guarantee, the latter that of the firm. There is no propriety in divorcing the words promise from the subsequent words; a promissory note is not satisfied by a promise to do any thing but pay, or to pay in any thing but specie; an express promise to pay in bills would not be a promissory note. The expression is, therefore, necessarily a compound expression, and the words "on account, &c." are referrible to the whole, and cannot be limited to the payment exclusively. In "Galway v. Matthews" (1 Campbell), the words of the note were "I pay," the word promise being understood as included. The cases of "Thomas v. Bishop," and "Leadbitter v. Farrer," relied on in the argument, are distinguishable. Those were cases on bills of exchange. They were addressed to drawees; the words "which place to the account of the Durham Bank" in the latter, and similar words in the former, were construed to be a direction merely to the drawee. But the foundation for that construction fails as to promissory notes having, of course, no drawees, and presenting no body to be addressed or directed. It must not be supposed that because we do not admit in this case the weight of the argument built on the sequence of these words, and on the form of the expression, that we should hold them of no weight in all notes. In some they might clearly indicate that the maker was a surety, that he pledged his credit on account of another; in some the words might be merely surplusage; in such cases there would be nothing to exonerate the maker from the obligation attaching to his signature. But in this case instead of the actual subscribers guaranteeing the payment by the bank, and the note being taken on the faith of that guarantee, it would be the credit of the bank which would be pledged. As surplusage, we cannot view the words, and as they are not a direction they seem to us to be most susceptible of the meaning, that the note is made for the bank by its agents, which the other portions of it import. Two American decisions were cited at the bar. In one the parties signing jointly and severally undertake for others, and we think it might be very reasonably inferred from that mode of undertaking that their individual credit was meant to be pledged. In the other case the form of the note does not appear, but it appears that the signature was on behalf not of any trading body, but of a society for the diffusion of religious tracts, and prima facie there would be no authority to bind such a body by signing bills or notes for it. In a few of the American cases, the liability of a drawer of a bill, or of the maker of a promissory note, has been apparently determined rather with reference to the general law of principal and agent than to the law of merchants, as far as we can gather from the short statement of such cases in the late Mr. Justice Story's work; and this case may be of that class, but without speculating further on the grounds on which it may have proceeded, it suffices to say that as the form of the note is not given, we are unable to say whether our present decision is at variance with it or not. With respect to the American decisions, they are not authority with us, though extremely valuable often as guides to the formation of a correct judgment. In order to ensure uniformity of decision in the same county, the decision of the higher tribunals are or should be authorities to inferior tribunals; in such cases the judge, though his understanding be not convinced, bows to the authority; but he is not justified in deciding contrary to his own conclusions in deference to a foreign tribunal, however superior in general he may acknowledge such jurists to be to himself. It was urged at the trial by the Advocate-General, that the expression in this note, "The proprietors of the Union Bank," was not the true partnership name, which is "The Union Bank," and "Kirk v. Blurton" was relied on. This bank has not kept strictly to its right name: its promissory notes, payable on demand, are signed by the secretary for the trustees of the Union Bank. It was argued that the bank would not be liable even on these, but only the trustees; but there is, in our opinion, no ground for such an argument. The secretary would not be liable, for he undertakes not at all, but signs as mere scribe, the trustees would not, for it is not probable that mere trustees would have given the secretary authority to pledge their credit, but the common issue from the bank, and payment at the bank, of this species of circulation would furnish abundant proof of the adoption by the bank of that mode of signature and description as binding on the bank. In "Kirk v. Blurton" it was not proved that the signature of Blurton and Co. had ever been acted on by the firm; but in "Faith v. Richmond," referred to and recognised as an authority in that case, the doctrine of the law on the effect of use of a name differing from the true partnership name is fully recognised, and it would be strange, indeed, if the law enabled a partnership to avoid its securities on the ground of irregular or erroneous descriptions of itself, though it has recognised them. A name is applicable to an individual; to a plea of misnomer, it might be replied that he was known as well by one name as the other. Mr. Kyd, in his "Treatise on Corporations," contends, and with reason, that the same replication should be allowed even against corporations, though the strict adherence to the true corporate name, in cases of corporations by charter or Act of Parliament, was formerly much insisted on. Lord Coke inveighs with great force and justice against some decisions, in which corporations had been allowed to avoid their own grants by alleging a misnomer. He shows that these decisions were contrary to earlier and more correct decisions, and there is reason to think that at the present day no such repugnancy to legal principle or to justice would be allowed. See "Mayor of Carlisle v. Blamire" (8 East's Reports). In that case it was held that a description of a corporation by a grantee was evidence against our claiming under him that the name of the corporation at the time of the grant was as described. But even in times when such strictness prevailed, "some seeming difference," as Lord Coke has it, with substantial agreement, was considered not fatal, and mere redundancy to the name was of no moment. See "Dean v. Windsor's" case. (Venir's "Abridgment," title Corporations, p. 272.) The words "Proprietors of the Union Bank" are exactly equivalent in meaning to the words "the Union Bank," and words understood are added to the shorter expression, "the Union Bank." We are therefore of opinion on the first point that the notes are in form the notes of the Union Bank.

The more important question remains. The question of authority for their issue is included in the plea denying their liability, and notice is involved in this. As against bond-fide holders for value without notice the bank might be liable on an unanswerable presumption of authority: that is, liable on the implication of an authority derived on grounds of public policy. The ordinary rule of partnership is that the relation of partners confers a presumable authority (sometimes different from the actual) to transact all business relating to and incident to that partnership, and within the ordinary scope of a partner's authority in similar societies. A bond-fide dealer with the firm has to consider only how far the actual dealing accords with such apparent authority, he is not affected by excesses of authority arising out of violations of special partnership to agreements to which he is not privy. He is safe in acting on the general rule, on the general presumption of authority. This rule binds all trading societies, aggregate of many as well as those composed but of few, and whether corporate or not. The case of "Hawkins v. Bourne" (8 Meeson and Welsby), is a valuable authority to show the application of the rule to a joint-stock company, a completed partnership. It is denied, however, that the issue of bank post-bills forms part of the ordinary business of a joint-stock bank. Joint-stock banks may, of course, vary greatly, some may be banks of issue, others not. It might be found impracticable to lay down a general rule strictly applicable to such varying dealings. But the question here is simply whether a bond-fide holder for value might, in taking such notes as these, reasonably consider that it fell within the ordinary dealing of the Union Bank to issue them. If the case were viewed even as it would have stood before any long usage of issuing such instruments had existed,—and this is the point of view most favourable to the case of the defendants, still, in our opinion, the bank would be liable to a bond-fide holder for value without notice of the restriction in their deed. It is not denied that as the power to issue bills of exchange existed, though it is wisely and carefully guarded by the partnership deed, had bills of exchange been issued in defiance of those restrictions by the directors as accommodation bills for instance, and not on the security specified in the deed, the bank would have been liable to pay such bills of exchange in the hands of bond-fide holders for value without notice. Now, a bank post-bill may be either a bill of exchange, or a promissory note, according to the form in which it is made, and with a very slight variation in form all these bank post-bills might have been issued as bills of exchange without varying the liability of the bank upon them, and without the addition of parties strangers to the bank. Such bank post-bills being bills of exchange, could not have been impeached then in the hands of a bona-fide holder for value. If they had been, in fact, issued on such security as the partnership deed stipulates, the issue of them would have been a legitimate exercise of one branch of business provided for by the deed. The danger consists not in the form of the instrument, but in the improvidence of their issue. But strangers to the deed could not know on what security they were to issue: and all such instruments import a consideration. It cannot then be said, since many bank post-bills might have been issued with strict regularity, that the issue of bank post-bills in any form was prima facie and presumably an unauthorised issue, and should have put these persons on inquiry, as raising any inference of a business beyond the scope of the ordinary authority. But promissory notes are, by the statute of Anne, put on the same footing as bills of exchange. ("Brown v. Barraden," 4 Term Reports, and the argument of Mr. Holroyd, as to promissory notes indorsed before the statute.) No ground, therefore, would exist prima facie to suspect that an issue of promissory notes was prohibited and bills of exchange permitted. The same instrument may be so drawn as to be declared either.

It was in evidence that this bank issued bills of exchange and other promissory notes to a considerable extent, though the latter were payable on demand; but the case has been carried much further by the evidence of the user. Since so much stress has been laid in the argument on this being a body quasi corporate, and modifications of the law have been much insisted on as established in favour of such bodies for protection of the parties composing them, it is well to consider what protection was intended to the prejudice of strangers in favour of the members of bodies strictly corporate; for it cannot be established that the law has been modified in favour of bodies quasi corporate so as to confer a greater exemption from liability than that of the body strictly corporate of a similar character. Upon the same principles that the case has been argued, if they be sound, the user could not have established a liability against the provisions of the deed, though it had been of half a century's duration. But even the most solemn charters of the crown—much higher instruments than mere deeds of partnership—have been greatly modified by usage. Many municipal corporations had defendant bodies—as guilds or fraternities, some occasionally incorporated. Many of these were founded for trading purposes, and many municipal incorporation charters, though government was their primary object, conferred valuable commercial privileges, exclusive trading privileges, exemptions of various kinds, and the like. From long disuse of exclusive privileges, a renunciation of them would be presumed. Though the mayor of a corporation has not a casting vote by law, and though the charter gave him none, he may acquire it by usage. Though the acquittance or other deed of the mayor alone bind not the corporation, yet it may by usage. (See Jenkyns, 4 Centenary, p. 162.) The modifications of the right of election are familiar to every one. The most solemn partnership deeds of individuals are modified by usage, the quasi corporate bodies cannot as to their partnership deeds be more exempt from the power of usage in modifying the strict provisions of their private deeds, than were corporate bodies from the words of their charters. In favour of strangers the modifications would be presumed regular. The acts of de facto mayors bound the corporation in favour of strangers because the body had the power to remove and neglected it. As between themselves there was a difference between the binding force of acts done by de facto and de jure mayors. The corporations were liable for the acts of their ordinary servants done within the ordinary scope of their employments, though done erroneously and without actual authority, or in violation of it. It was sufficient in such a case to shew that they were such servants and their acts. It was not inquired whether the majority, still less whether every individual had been too supine, too confiding, had given directions, or had actually interfered. (See Moodaley and Morton and the East-India Company, 1 Brown, C. C.; "Mayor of Lincoln v. Mayor of Derby," 1 Kyd, 191. See also 1 Kyd, 314; "Sutton v. the Bank of England"; "Davis v. the Bank of England," 6 Bingham; "The Lancaster Canal Company v. Pamally," 11 Adolphus and Ellis.) The two last cases illustrate the position, that he who by his act induces a well-founded belief of an authority or state of things non-existent—and thereby induces another to alter his position for the worse, is liable. The last case proceeded on the ground that a canal company, by forming a canal, invites the public to navigate it, with a view to the profit of the company, and holds out that such navigation is secure; therefore, that if the company by its servants or agents is aware of secret dangers to the navigation, it is liable for the non-publication to the public of the danger. The East-India Company, the Bank of England, canal companies, are all companies having numerous proprietary bodies. It was never asserted that they were in any way exempt from the general law of agency, from the general obligation, so to conduct their affairs that others should not be misled. It was never supposed that these, as well as other bodies strictly corporate, were not liable for the acts, though unauthorised, done by their official and ordinary servants acting within the scope of such apparent and presumable authority. The cases to the contrary are too numerous to be cited. The law is too clear to need the citation of any. The party reposing the confidence must suffer if confidence be abused, in the case of a general agent acting with apparent authority. If a society, whether aggregated of many or of few, whether corporate or not, so conduct its affairs as to give rise to a well-grounded belief on those dealing with it that an apparent is a real authority, it must abide the consequences. Powers of objection, revision, and control exist. The non-enforcement of them must not be turned to the prejudice of strangers. We decide nothing as to the rights of the proprietors inter se, or the liabilities to them of their own managers. We decide against the Bank upon the broad ground that this aggregate body—which can only be sued as an aggregate body, for we are clearly of opinion that the mode of proceeding directed by the Act is obligatory in suits against the company, and that the property of the actual shareholders must first be exhausted before former shareholders can be reached—is liable collectively and in the aggregate for the issue of notes by its officers inducing a well-grounded belief that there was authority to issue them; the uninterrupted issue for years to a large amount was naturally calculated to remove all doubts, to silence all questions in later years. And we have no doubt whatever of the right of bona-fide holders for value to enforce their claims on these securities against the bank. But it is contended that the preamble of the Indian Act was notice to all the world. The preamble enacts no law, but merely states part of the provisions of the deed of the bank. The Act leaves wholly untouched the power of the bank to alter those provisions in the mode prescribed by the deed. The Act, though made public, is in the nature of a private Act. "Brett v. Beales and Others" is a decisive authority that such preambles are not even evidence against strangers of the truth of the facts recited. On what ground are such recitals constructive notice? Ignorantia legis non excusat. This is reasonable, and required by public convenience. Sometimes the maxim is stated that the people are bound to know the law. In fact, however, the bulk of mankind know little of the laws under which they live; and it would be extremely unreasonable to presume that they read or know anything of preambles of Acts private in their nature, stating facts not made matter or parts of the public law. It would be stretching the doctrine of constructive notice, in our opinion, to a most unjustifiable extent. But even if the Act were notice, of what would it be notice? merely of the contents of the deed at the time of the passing of the Act. But as the deed contained a power to vary its provisions, and as there was no legal obligation on the company to communicate to the public its changes in its deed, persons might presume from the subsequent dealings omnia ita esse rita, and the change regular. Actual notice was not proved. There is no legal obligation on us to give effect to constructive notice. The plaintiffs must, therefore, be viewed as holders for value without notice. As to the claims of such persons on bills not disclosing on the face of them that they are invalid in law, see the judgment of Holroyd, Justice, in "Broughton v. the Manchester Waterworks Company" (3 Barnewell and Alderson, 10). The rule, therefore, must be discharged with costs.

The judgment of course establishes the liability of the bank.—Abridged from the Hurkaru.

FRIDAY, APRIL 7.

G. Malcolm and Others v. W. H. Abbott, Secretary to the Union Bank.

This also was an action upon one of the bank post-bills payable to Cockerell and Co., and admissions were made upon both sides comprising the substance of the evidence given in the former case. Messrs. Abbott and James Calder Stewart were also examined to a few points.

Mr. PRINSEP, Mr. COCHRANE, and Mr. RITCHIE for the plaintiffs.

The ADVOCATE-GENERAL and Mr. MORTON for the defendant, observed that there was no use now in taking up the time of the court with the same arguments; but begged to state merely to save the appeal, that the objections for the defendant were the same as in the case reported a few days since. A similar verdict was therefore taken for the plaintiff, as in the former case for company's Rs.25,000.

W. F. Fergusson v. John Leslie.

It was agreed by consent that the same facts and circumstances should be taken in this case, with this addition, that it was proved by the memorial that the plaintiff is still a registered proprietor of the bank, and query, therefore, whether he had not direct notice of the provisions of the deed.

THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—The parties may if they think fit argue this point, as our former decision does not govern this;—though the case is not so strong as if the plaintiff were payee instead of indorsee, our former decision was only as to bona-fide holders for value, affected only by constructive notice.

THE ADVOCATE-GENERAL.—The payees, Messrs. Beckwith and Larpent, of Cockerell and Co. are also shareholders, and so is Mr. Robert Thomas, a partner of Hickey, Bailey, and Co., the intermediate indorsees.

THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—This is quite distinct from the former case de facto, our former decision turned entirely upon the point that there was no actual nor constructive notice.

William Macpherson v. John Leslie Russell.

This was a similar action upon two notes for Rs. 25,000 each, Cockerell and Co. being the payees of the first, and Hickey, Bailey, and Co., of the second note. They had been blank indorsed by those firms respectively, and the notes bore the special indorsement, "pay to William Macpherson, assignee of the Insolvent Court, R. O'Dowda." The members of the payees' firms and Mr. O'Dowda, as in the last preceding case, were shareholders of the bank; but the plaintiff was not.

The like evidence and verdict were taken as in the former cases, by consent.

We understand that the case of "Fergusson v. the Bank" will, therefore, be argued on the point of special notice.—Ibid., April 8.

THE UNION BANK IN LIQUIDATION.

The adjourned monthly meeting of the Union Bank in liquidation, was held on Saturday at half-past 2 p.m. The attendance was unusually small, and the hour at which business began was later than that appointed for the purpose. At the motion of Mr. Sutherland, and the wish of the meeting generally, Mr. PATRICK O'HANLON took the chair, and the Secretary read the following Report of the Executive Committee. From this it will have been seen that the sum yet collected on account of the contributions is Co.'s Rs. 1,22,500, and on account of the loan to Co.'s Rs. 1,23,500; but the secretary intimated that since the report had been written one sum of Rs. 20,000 and another of Rs. 30,000 had been received as loans.

REPORT OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF MANAGEMENT OF THE UNION BANK IN LIQUIDATION. CALCUTTA, 25TH MARCH, 1848.

The earnest appeal of the committee to the general body of shareholders has yet been but feebly responded to, and the committee are not in a position to declare the promised dividend. They are unable to do more than they have done, and they have accordingly considered themselves bound to confess judgments to creditors of the bank for undoubted claims, thus enabling the creditors themselves to compel by force of law those contributions which the committee are unable to obtain by gentler means. The amount of judgments confessed is about 17½ lacs of rupees, and it is expected that proceedings against individual shareholders will be adopted in the course of a few days.

The degree of control which the committee assume to exercise in directing the operation of such judgments has been misrepresented or misunderstood. They have and assume to have, no power of deciding against what particular shareholders they shall be levelled, and which of the shareholders shall be passed over. All that they have done is to submit the list of shareholders to the creditors' committee, distinguishing those who have responded to the call. They propose with the sanction of the meeting to prepare a list for general publication, to be submitted at the next meeting, specifying the names of those shareholders who have responded in full, who have responded in part, and who have not responded at all.

The committee hoped to have been able to report the final decision of the Supreme Court upon the question of liability on the post bills. The trial, however, only came on yesterday, and the legal argument is fixed for Thursday.

The committee have calculated the total amount of claims upon the bank under Rs. 1000 each, and find that they scarcely amount to a lack of rupees altogether. They propose to declare all such claims payable on and after the 5th April, provided the creditors' committee give their sanction.

The committee since the last meeting submitted a memorial to the Governor-General, in pursuance of the resolution praying for his sanction to the association of Mr. H. M. Elliot with the executive committee; but they regret to state that in an official letter written under his lordship's orders it is stated that the instructions of the hon. the Court of Directors is so positive and precise, that his lordship in council is obliged to decline granting permission to Mr. Elliot to accept the office of a member of the committee.

The committee have the satisfaction to state, that the creditors' committee have consented to resume their function, and that since the last meeting they have been in friendly communication with your committee upon the general affairs of the bank.

The committee commenced the inquiry upon the subject of Mr. W. P. Grant's post bills, referred to them at the last meeting, and they have been in communication with the post bill committee, and with Mr. Grant, but in consequence of that gentleman's unavoidable absence from Calcutta for some days, the report is necessarily deferred until next meeting.

A short abstract of the accounts of the bank in liquidation is on the table. From this it will be seen that the sum received on account of the contributions is in all Co.'s Rs. 1,22,500, and on account of the loan Co.'s Rs. 1,23,500, showing that the collections on the former account have only been about Rs. 26,000, and on the latter about Rs. 20,000 since last meeting.

Liabilities of the bank to the extent of about 6 lacs of rupees have, however, been extinguished; and there can be no doubt but that were it possible to come to a settlement of accounts with all holders of claims against the bank, it would be found that a much larger amount has been discharged.

Mr. SUTHERLAND moved that the report of the executive committee submitted to this meeting be received. He did not yet commit himself to an approval of the report, because, before he did that, he should wish to propose a qualification upon a suggestion it contained.

Captain BEAUMONT seconded Mr. Sutherland's motion, and, upon being put, it was carried unanimously.

The CHAIRMAN now repeated a former suggestion he had formerly made for a publication of a statement of the liabilities and capabilities of the bank.

The SECRETARY remarked, that such a list had been given to the creditors' committee; and that, he apprehended, would answer all the objects of Mr. O'Hanlon and his supporters.

But the CHAIRMAN said, he did not see what right the executive committee had to make any exceptions in such a case. Very probably, the creditors' committee were entitled to have such a list; but, if so, the shareholders at large had fully an equal right.

The CHAIRMAN proposed a motion, requesting that the executive committee would publish a list of the names of the debtors of the bank, with the amount of the liability of each.

The motion was seconded, and submitted to the vote, but fell to the ground.

Mr. JENKINS mentioned, that he knew of certain parties over-drawing their floating accounts from the bank, in opposition to No. 7 of the Rules of the Bank. It appeared, he said, that these parties, having had the funds of the proprietors placed in their possession, took advantage of the trust, to help themselves; or, if they had not helped themselves, the paid secretary had allowed the moneys to be abstracted from the bank, which, to say the least, was a breach of faith. He, therefore, proposed that the executive committee inquire and report whether there existed any authority from the directors for such unjustifiable withdrawals, and that they gave the names of the parties withdrawing, with the particulars of similar transactions during the last four years, at the next monthly meeting. When this information should be furnished, it was his intention to move that the officers of the bank be instructed to prosecute the offending parties, if prosecution would lie; for he looked upon the acts as so many robberies of the bank's property.

Mr. MORTON remarked, that if prosecution was the only object, he must confess he did not see the resolution proposed would take effect; for the withdrawal of his account would not subject a party to a criminal proceeding.

Mr. JENKINS replied, that at least the names of the parties would be exposed to the public.

Mr. HOMFRAY seconded Mr. Jenkins's motion.

Before the Chairman put it to the meeting, Mr. MORTON stated that there was no doubt that no order existed for such withdrawal of funds as Mr. Jenkins complained of, and that funds had been overdrawn, but asked that the task of investigation should be thrown upon some other parties, as he had no time to wade through the books of the bank, in such a case as this.

Mr. Jenkins's motion was now put and carried without dissent.

Mr. MORTON now drew attention to the refusal of Government to permit Mr. H. M. Elliot to form one of the executive committee, and proposed that as it was advisable to have the number originally contemplated, as the complement, Mr. Robert Castle Jenkins should be appointed in his stead. There could be no objection to the nomination, as it had been arranged in the first instance that one of the members might be a party not a shareholder.

The proposition was seconded and carried unanimously.

Mr. SUTHERLAND now said that the qualification he desired to introduce in the report, was that, in publishing a list of the contributors to the forced loan, the executive committee should add the number of shares held by each contributor. It was his opinion that where a party owning comparatively a small number of shares contributed a considerable portion of the amount called for, he contributed more liberally than those who, having a larger number of shares, responded to the call to its full extent. It might be thought that he had a personal feeling upon the subject; this might be so, but could not prejudice his suggestion; and as the object of the publication proposed was to show to the public what was being done to relieve the bank of its existing difficulties, he would recommend that the addition he moved for should be an element in this estimate.

Mr. MORTON objected to Mr. Sutherland's motion, upon the ground that, however in former times it would be adding to the credit of a party to publish his name as a shareholder of the Union Bank, it would have directly an opposite effect at the present moment, and be, moreover, at variance with the terms of the deed.

The subject was discussed for some time, and Mr. Sutherland eventually withdrew his motion.

Mr. HOMFRAY next moved and Mr. SUTHERLAND seconded, that the report of the executive committee submitted to-day should be adopted. The motion was put and carried unanimously.—Abridged from the Bengal Hurkaru, March 26.

SUSPENSION OF CARR, TAGORE, & Co.

We regret to learn that Messrs. Carr, Tagore, and Co. (in liquidation) have been compelled to suspend payments. We subjoin the circular issued yesterday morning, and the result of the meeting held on the 5th inst.

"Calcutta, March 31, 1848.

"It is with much regret we have to inform you, that we have been compelled to suspend our payments, it not being in our power to meet several liabilities immediately falling due. We have, therefore, deemed it advisable at once to call our creditors together, to lay before them the state of our affairs, and consult with them on what is best to be done.

"We beg to assure you that the necessity for this step has come upon us most unexpectedly, and arises solely from the disappointment we have experienced in carrying out the plan of liquidation under the arrangements made in January last. We then considered that we might realize rapidly a portion of the large amount due to us by others, but in this we have entirely failed, and in three months we have not recovered more than one per cent. of the amount, at which, at so late a date as November 1846, the debts due to us were valued by ourselves and partners for a settlement of accounts. So unexpected has it been to us, that our late partner, Major Henderson, left India only two months ago, in the full belief that the liquidation would go on successfully, and that there would be no necessity for a suspension of payments.

"Though we have for some years past been engaged in no speculative business, beyond the carrying on of our own indigo, silk, and sugar concerns (our shipments having been confined almost entirely to their produce), still our actual losses in the last two years have been upwards of twenty-three lacs of rupees, arising chiefly from depreciation in the value of property—indigo, silk, sugar, and salt-petre factories, Union bank and other joint-stock shares—and losses on personal debts from individuals, who within the last year have themselves been ruined, and losses in carrying on the factories.

"Notwithstanding this loss, we have no hesitation in stating our confident expectation of still being able to pay in full every rupee we owe. Our liabilities, which, when our late father went to Europe, amounted to ninety-eight lacs of rupees, have been reduced to little more than one-fourth of that amount; and of this considerably more than one-half is on special ample security, leaving less than eleven lacs of rupees of open accounts. Our assets, even at present valuation, shew more than sufficient when realised to cover the liabilities, independent of the property in trust for ourselves and families, our life interest in which will be available to meet any unexpected deficiency.

"Full details are being made out, and will be laid before the meeting, which we propose to hold on Tuesday next, the 4th proximo, at 4 o'clock, when we request your attendance.

"We are, your obedient servants,

"DEBENDERNATH TAGORE,
"GREENDERNAUTH TAGORE."

"P. S.—As parties jointly liable for the debts of Carr, Tagore, and Co. we concur in the above letter.

"D. M. GORDON,
"J. S. STUART."

ing in writing that the partners have acted to the satisfaction of the inspectors winding up their affairs.

"3. That such property as is immediately realisable be realised without delay, and the proceeds paid into the bank of Bengal, for which purpose an account be opened with the bank in the names of the inspectors.

"4. That a large portion of the assets, consisting of indigo factories, sugar, silk, saltpetre, and other works, of which it may not be advisable to force a sale, the same be carried on to such extent as the inspectors may approve, until they can be respectively sold.

"5. That a portion of the private estate of Debendernauth Tagore and his brothers, consisting of zemindari and other landed property in the Mofussil, the inspectors be authorised to let the same, or appoint some competent person or persons to manage the same for the benefit of the creditors until sales can be advantageously effected.

"6. That a large portion of the property, as well of the firm of Carr, Tagore, and Co. as of Debendernauth Tagore, and brothers, being under mortgage to the Union Bank and others, the inspectors be at liberty to make arrangements for redemption or for sale thereof, with the concurrence of the mortgagees; or if they should think fit, for releasing the equity of redemption to the mortgagees on obtaining a release in full, with or without further consideration or other reasonable terms.

"7. That the accounts of the firm and of each individual partner, and also of the estate of Dwarkanauth Tagore, deceased, be kept separate and distinct, in order that the creditors may rank therein as they would do in the case of an adjudication of insolvency against the said firm, and the individual partners respectively.

"8. That dividends be paid to the creditors of the said firm, and the creditors of the individual partners, from time to time, under the direction of the inspectors, as in their opinion is circumstances will permit.

"9. That the dividends of absent creditors not concurring in the trust, be paid into the Bank of Bengal.

"10. That the partners be authorised, subject to the control of the inspectors, to receive and adjust all claims, and enforce all contracts, in the name of the firm or of the partners, or of such of them as may be entitled to claim, or sue in respect thereof, and to sign and give sufficient discharges for the same.

"11. Then, in consideration of Debendernauth Tagore, and his brothers respectively giving up their life-interest in the trust property settled on them and their children by their late father, Dwarkanauth Tagore, they be allowed to retain out of the rents one-third thereof, for the maintenance of themselves and their families, and the family of the late Dwarkanauth Tagore, dependent on them.

"12. That the inspectors have power to direct the payment of all costs, charges, and expenses of carrying into effect these resolutions, and attending the liquidation of the affairs of the said firm and the individual partners.

"13. That the said inspector be at liberty to pay or compound debts of the said firm and the individual partners, to such extent as they shall consider necessary or advantageous.

"14. That the said inspectors shall have power to direct the payment of clerks and others whose salaries are in arrear, and to employ a sufficient and reasonable establishment for winding up the affairs of the firm and the individual partners respectively.

"15. That in consideration of the partners employing themselves in the liquidation of the affairs of the firm, and of their individual estates, so long as their services may be required by the inspectors, and to enable them to settle their private liabilities, each of the partners shall be allowed to retain his household furniture, wearing apparel, and other private property, or such portion thereof as the inspectors may think fit; and shall also from time to time, if the inspectors shall think fit, be allowed a fair and reasonable salary for any service required of them respectively.

"16. That a proper deed, with full powers, shall be prepared for carrying these resolutions into effect; and in directing the preparation of such deeds, the inspectors shall have full power to cause such clauses to be inserted as in their opinion shall best tend to promote the interest of the general body of creditors and the full and proper administration of the affairs of the firm and of each individual partner, and as well for regulating proofs on the state of the firm and of the individual partners as otherwise, and including also clauses and authorities for adjusting and compounding claims, and referring to arbitration, and such other clauses as counsel may advise."

The motion was seconded by Mr. ROB ROY CAMPBELL, and carried unanimously.

Mr. W. F. FERGUSSON, in reference to one of these resolutions, which sanctioned the retention by the sons of Dwarkanauth Tagore a certain portion of the personal property left them by their father, proposed that they be also allowed to retain the family residence at Jorasanko, and their personal property in it.

Mr. Fergusson's motion was put to the vote, and carried by acclamation.

It was now proposed by Mr. MORTON and seconded by Mr. PILANS, that Mr. Robert Castle Jenkins, Mr. F. R. Hampton, and Baboo Ramanauth Tagore be appointed inspectors and Trustees.

The motion was put, and carried unanimously.

The question of remuneration now arising, Mr. FERGUSSON remarked that, as the inspectors would have the advantage of the services of the partners of the late firm, there seemed to him to be a reason why they should not charge such a rate of commission as the assignees of the Insolvent Court, upon whom fall the entire burden and expense. He would, therefore, propose that the inspectors appointed content themselves with three per cent. upon the realisation, debiting the expenses of liquidation to the estate, as a matter of course.

The trustees expressed their willingness to accept of this amount of remuneration; Ramanauth Tagore remarking that, for his part, whatever should be his portion, he should gladly make over to his unfortunate nephews.

Mr. D. M. GORDON now came forward to assure the meeting that none of the partners of the defunct firm had benefited in the remotest degree by any portion of its funds. Although two of the partners had gone home, they had not taken out a rupee from the concern. Mr. G. G. Macpherson had lived upon his own funds all the time that he had been in connection with the house, and, when he left Calcutta, he retired upon them. Nor had Major Henderson, who had quitted Calcutta so recently, derived any profit for himself from the estate: on the contrary, to meet certain immediate demands, paid them out of some money of his own marriage settlement.

Thanks were voted to the Chairman, and the meeting separated. —Englishman, April 5.

DREADFUL ACCIDENT.

It is with deep sorrow that we find ourselves called upon to record one of the most distressing catastrophes which has occurred in this part of the country for many years. The steamer Benares, belonging to the Ganges Company, was almost destroyed by fire near Rajmahal on the 20th instant, and many of her passengers, including nine Europeans, lost their lives on the occasion.

The following is an extract from a letter written by one of the surviving passengers to a friend in Calcutta, and gives the fullest and clearest account of the sad event that we have yet seen:—

"Steamer 'Benares,' off Rajmahal, March 21st.

"I sit down to acquaint you with one of the most awful calamities that has befallen the above vessel that it is possible to imagine, and, which is still more distressing, it has been attended with serious loss of life and property. About 7 o'clock, while under steam within three miles of Rajmahal, the after-part of the vessel, where the horses and conveyances are, was discovered to be on fire; owing to the combustible materials close at hand, the fire raged furiously, and the confusion consequent thereon baffles all description. The vessel was run on a sandbank, and immediately the majority of the passengers jumped into the water, and fifteen or sixteen persons were drowned. Several more are missing, and I fear they have all met with a watery grave. All the cargo in the after hold is burnt, also the conveyances and eight horses; the latter are literally roasted alive. Every one on board has suffered more or less. I have lost nearly all my clothes, and some of the passengers have lost money and property to the extent of some thousands of rupees. I stuck to the vessel throughout, and have got off pretty well. I tried all I could to persuade the passengers not to leave the vessel until there was no chance of saving her, but it was useless, and hence the loss of life. The fire extended as far as the engine-room, and was then got under, but not until every thing in the after part of the vessel was consumed. It is supposed that the fire was caused by one of the syces on board smoking the hookah close to the straw for the horses.

"The following is a list of the persons drowned:

"Mrs. Hartley; Miss Nash; an European soldier's wife; Mr. Houlton, chief officer; Capt. Whistler, invalid; Capt. Sneyd, irregular cavalry; Mr. Thriepland; Mr. Grose; Mr. Barker (a jockey); a Chinese carpenter, an ayah, a khidmutgar, a seacunny, a bearer. Several syces are also missing."

We would gladly cherish a lingering hope that this melancholy catalogue of casualties may be found to exaggerate the loss of life, but we fear that the very clear and circumstantial character of the account of which it forms a part, forbids the indulgence of such a feeling. Doubtless we shall have further particulars in the course of the day, and we await them with much anxiety.—Bengal Hurkaru, March 21.

We yesterday received by the dawn the following letter, which gives a clearer and more complete account of the melancholy accident which happened to the Benares than the letters which we published yesterday:—

"4 miles below Rajmahal, March 21/2.

"MY DEAR SIR.—It is with great grief that I sit down to inform you of a most melancholy catastrophe that occurred to the Benares steamer, and I send the following account, desiring it right that the public should at once be put in possession of the most authentic intelligence, and not be unnecessarily alarmed by vague and idle reports, and that those who have friends on board should know both the best and the worst.

"About half-past 7 p.m. on the 20th instant, when about four miles below Rajmahal, a fire broke out in the hinder part of the vessel where the horses were placed, and being surrounded with tatters, grass, and other inflammable materials, the whole of that portion of the boat in one minute became a raging blaze, and so instantaneously did it spread, that those right aft could not come forward. Captain Townsend, commanding the steamer, at once apprehended the whole danger, and gave word to run her ashore in the shallow water on the left bank of the river, from which we were about 200 yards distant, the high right bank being double as far. She grounded about half way to the shore, and the anchor being let go she held fast.

"By this time the whole of the vessel abaft the engine was enveloped in flames, the upper or awning deck had caught, as well as a great number of buggies and carriages which were placed beneath it. The scene on board was most heart-rending, and enough to appal the stoutest heart. Ladies and children crying bitterly, the flames roaring furiously, every one looking around for safety, and no one finding the smallest prospect of it, the jolly-boat having been cut away by some scyces, who jumped into it immediately on the fire breaking out, and left us in the most dastardly manner. Shortly before the vessel grounded, the impression on every man's mind was that she would blow up every instant, and this was increased by the fear that directly the flames reached the boilers they would burst, and also the danger of some gunpowder on board igniting. This made every one expect the worst, and poor Snepd, late of the Khelet-i-Ghizie's, thinking there was no hope, ran down to his cabin, divested himself of all but his shirt and trousers, and sprang overboard. I heard the plunge, and looking out saw him striking out towards the high bank, and swimming strongly; but, alas! he has neither been seen or heard of since, and his fate is a mystery. I know him to be a bold and strong swimmer, but the current was running swift, and his non-appearance up to this hour, 2 p.m., looks ominous; still there is hope. On the vessel grounding, it was discovered that people could stand with the water up to their middles a few yards from the vessel, and this discovery was the cause of this fearful tale. In spite of the entreaties of the captain, many got out by the anchor ahead, a difficult matter, for the water was up to the neck close alongside. All the ladies and their children (save Mrs. Chisholm), were hauled over the side and some obtained permanent footing; but the high spot proved a very small one, and many gentlemen, strong swimmers, kept their legs with difficulty, and two or three narrowly escaped drowning, while others, thinking they were nearing terra firma, got into deep water and were swept away quickly by the current. These were, Mrs. Hartly, Miss Nash, Captain Whistler, and Mr. Holton, the chief mate; there are also missing, Mr. Gross, Mr. Tenepland, Mrs. Shanahan, a soldier's wife (passage taken for Chunar); Baker, the jockey, in charge of Honeyuskle, who was seen by his brother, Jockey Barker, to jump overboard and sink, as he could not swim in the least; the China carpenter, an Ayah, Mahomud Ali, seacunny, Futteh Mahomed Bundareh, mate, and Modaree Bussesh, servant to Captain Mayne.

"Some of these may have been picked up down the river, but the hope is a faint one, though we still cling to it. Miss Nash was seen to throw up her arms and sink; and as some one cried out that she did so, I looked in the direction but could see nothing, though it was moonlight; the remaining passengers in the water were quickly pulled on board again, being principally induced to come by the captain's assurances that the fore part of the boat could not be burnt under three hours. A country boat now came alongside, and firstly, the ladies and children, and then most of the other passengers and luggage, were conveyed to the shore, which proved to be a large chur in the middle of the river; a few dinghies also pulled up and assisted, and by the time that most of the baggage was conveyed ashore the flames were partially subdued.

"The captain now wished all to come on board again, as there was no fear of the fire extending further; but as the flames were still smouldering, it was decided to erect a bivouac to protect the ladies and children from the night dew, and the bleak wind on the chur. This was quickly done with some boxes and tarpaulin; the flames were quite got under by 11 p.m.; but about an hour later they again threatened to break out, and were with difficulty prevented from doing so. The pumps were kept going till near four o'clock this morning, but the silk cargo on board still continues to smoulder. All the conveyances went utterly consumed, and eight poor, unfortunate horses (amongst whom was Honeyuskle, who distinguished himself at the last Calcutta meeting); as well as the five stock, perished in fearful agony. The origin of the fire remains a mystery. The conduct of Captain Townsend, the commander of the Benares, was deserving of the greatest praise, and throughout the whole of this trying scene he was quite cool and collected, and gave his orders in the most calm and officer-like manner; and I cannot refrain from adding that had those orders strictly been attended to, we should not now have cause to fear for so many.

"The conduct of the second officer, Mr. MacLuskil, was also most praiseworthy. The ladies behaved extremely well in this most trying situation, and the gentlemen all exerted themselves to render needful assistance. The passengers all came on board again this morning, and the steam agent at Rajmahal is sending down boats to our help. The whole of the after-part of the vessel is destroyed, as well as all the cargo there placed, but the whole of the forecargo is safe, and the engines are uninjured. We are now baling out the water, and the captain is of opinion that she will float, and that the engines will work. He has not yet decided what to do, but hopes that the Patna will soon come down to assist him.

"Though I have above given a fearful list of those who are supposed to have found a watery grave, yet their friends need not be without hope, as we have not yet time to go down the river to search for them; but a boat is now starting, and some may possibly have got ashore on one of the churs in the middle of the river.

"This letter has been read over to all the passengers, who concur in the facts I have mentioned, and you are at liberty to publish this letter in your paper with my name attached to it. I have sent a copy to the Dakki Gazette. I write in haste to save the dak.—Your's obediently,

MISCELLANEOUS.

LOCAL.

Messrs. AYREMAN AND Co.—The Englishman says that the firm of Ayrlwin and Co. has been compelled to put its affairs in the hands of inspectors.—Hurrah, March 27.

MARINE COURTS.—The Englishman states that the new rules for abbreviating the proceedings of the marine courts have been duly passed by Government and will now come into operation. The questions are not now to be written down except when they may be considered essential.—Ibid.

SIR THOMAS TURTON.—A contemporary informs us that the Calcutta Bar has unanimously determined not to hold briefs with Sir Thomas Turton, and that it has informed the chief justice to this effect.—Ibid.

STEAM TUG ASSOCIATION.—The meeting of the Calcutta Tug Association on the 27th was a stormy one. The report of the directors was presented by Messrs. Gordon, Stuart, and Co., who claim to be secretaries by a prescriptive right, under the deed, as the successors of Messrs. Carr, Tagore, and Co. They cannot, it appears, be superseded except for misconduct. A committee was appointed to overhaul all the accounts for the last twelve years, from the birth of the association, and the dividend at the rate of 8 per cent. which was proposed, was postponed until the report of that committee was presented. Great objections were raised to the continuance of the present secretaries, who are also the secretaries of the Bengal Coal Company, and thus present the anomaly of directing two establishments whose interest must constantly clash. Messrs. Gordon, Stuart, and Co., as secretaries to the Coal Company, are bound to obtain the highest price they can for their coal; while as secretaries to the Steam Tug Association, it is their duty to obtain the coal as cheap as possible. But all objections were overruled, and they remain in office.—Friend of India, March 30.

CIVIL SERVICE RETIRING FUND.—We understand that a fund is shortly to be proposed for purchasing out the senior members of the civil service, and to accelerate the lamentably slow promotion in the junior ranks. We have not yet seen a detailed sketch of the proposed fund, but believe the principle on which it is to be founded is similar to that of the Artillery Regimental Fund, whereby the parties receiving immediate promotion pay in proportion to the advantages they receive. Ere long we may learn something further on this subject, and will not fail to lay it before our readers. The sanction of Government will be necessary before any such measure can be carried into effect; but we understand there is no fear of such sanction being denied, as the plan proposed will obviate the objections which have generally been urged in opposition to similar projects in the civil service.—Mofussile, March 31.

SIR JOHN LITTLE.—At a meeting held yesterday at the Town Hall, in honour of Sir John Little, it was resolved that a service of plate should be presented to that officer, and that the surplus of the subscription should be placed at his own disposal.—Hurkaru, April 5.

INLAND STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.—The Star publishes an address from the Inland Steam Navigation Company to the shareholders, informing them that in order to carry out the original views of the association, and to make its operations pay, it is necessary to enlarge its operations, to replace the Sir Herbert Maddock, and to build two other steamers; and that it is intended to call for the payment of all the remaining instalments at the following dates—

The 7th instalment,	10th May.
" 8th "	10th Sept.
" 9th "	10th Jan. 1849.
" 10th and last	10th May, 1849.

It will, however, be no easy matter to raise so large a sum in so short a period, in a community reduced to a state of beggary.—Friend of India, April 6.

RETURN OF ARCHDEACON DEALTRY.—Archdeacon Dealtry goes home by the present steamer in search of health, his constitution having been somewhat impaired by the fatigues of his tour in the north-west. A meeting of his friends and admirers was lately held, at which it was resolved to present an address and to raise a subscription for a bust.—Hurkaru, April 7.

THE HYPOTHECATION SYSTEM.—A memorial was lately presented to Lord Dalhousie soliciting his aid in obtaining the abandonment of the hypothecation system. His lordship in his reply stated that the memorial should be forwarded to the Court of Directors.—Ibid.

CHANDERNAGORE.—Military Transports.—The Hurkaru quotes from the Bhaskur a fact, or an assertion, which must be new to the public. The native editor states that the British Government pays Rs. 8,000 a year to the French Government for the passage of troops and military stores through its territories at Chandernagore. We have no reason for questioning the fact except its incredibility. Half a lac of rupees, or the amount of six years' contribution, would have been sufficient for the construction of a road at the back of Chandernagore through the English territories; and it is strange, indeed, that so obvious a stroke of economy should have been so long forgotten. We believe, however, that the line for such a road has been surveyed, and that it will shortly be commenced. It will start from Pulia, and join the Burdwan road some miles beyond Hooghly.—Friend of India, April 6.

Dacca.—Case of Libel.—The Rev. H. Shepherd, the chaplain at Dacca, has just recovered, Rs. 1,000 in a case of libel. He brought an action against one Eknatheas Panioty for having, in a petition to the judge of Backergunge, stated, that on his (Panioty's) refusing to sign a paper, Mr. Shepherd fell into a violent passion and endeavoured to frighten him, and had not the collector been present at the time, he, Panioty, would have considered his life in danger. He further stated that the plaintiff, Mr. Shepherd, was a person of such character that there was nothing to prevent his preparing a forged document with a view to injure the defendant. The principal Sudder Ameem gave a verdict of Rs. 1,000 damages; from this decision both parties appealed to the Sudder Court, where the order of the lower Court was confirmed. Panioty pays the costs of both parties in the Zillah Court, and each pays his own costs of appeal.—Ibid., March 30.

DELHI.—The Accident to Lieut. Aubert.—We regret much to have to record a sad accident which occurred in the Dhoon, on the afternoon of the 16th inst. Captain Hay, late of the 1st European regiment, Fusileers, and Lieut. Aubert, of the 34th N.I., adjutant of the Sirmoor battalion, having received information from some natives that a tiger had killed two bullocks and a man close to them, ordered out their elephants and very soon reached the spot. Captain Hay was a little in advance on one flank of the jungle, and passed the tiger. Mr. Aubert immediately after perceived him feeding on the man whom he had killed, and fired four shots at him. The roaring of the brute frightened the elephant, who bolted; as he was running off, one of the Ghorka servants seized hold of the trunk of a tree, and Mr. Aubert did the same, but while the Ghorka fairly swung himself into the tree, Mr. Aubert fell to the ground, either in consequence of the branch breaking or his being unable to hold on. The tiger instantly sprang on him and seized him by one of his ankles, Mr. Aubert kicking him with his other foot for some time, succeeded at last in getting away with his ankle completely smashed, and actually walked towards the tree and was attempting to get up it, when the tiger again rushed at him, seized his other leg with his claws, dragged him down, and again fastened on the wounded leg just below the knee. Captain Hay's elephant had also bolted, but was brought back, and he reached the scene of the sad accident about dusk. He fired no less than thirteen shots at the tiger, when the latter charged the elephant, and commenced a regular fight with him, the rider being, on account of his extreme unsteadiness, unable to fire a shot at his assailant. After a short time, the elephant got a fair kick at the tiger, who fell as if dead; but to make sure, Capt. Hay fired at him, on which his elephant again bolted; when brought to, she was pronounced by the mahout to be in such a state of excitement as to endanger the rider's life, if he attempted to dismount. Captain Hay was consequently obliged to remain for a time where he was, when presently he saw Mr. Aubert coming up on his own elephant, the sight of which quieted Captain Hay's so much that he was able to go to the assistance of his wounded companion. It may be understood in what a dreadful state the latter must have reached Dhera, at about five o'clock on the morning of the 17th. One of his legs (that first injured) was immediately amputated above the knee, but the doctor is in hopes that, although dreadfully lacerated, the other may be saved; the patient bearing his sufferings with the utmost fortitude. The native who was killed by the tiger was engaged in skinning the first bullock when he was attacked. It is a singular fact, that the father of Lieut. Aubert (who is greatly esteemed by all who know him, and whose friends will grieve to hear of this sad misfortune) was thrown from his horse and killed; that one of his brothers was killed by lightning, and that another died from the effects of a fall from his horse at Delhi.—Delhi Gazette, March 25.

—Thugs on the Banks of the Sutlej.—We have received further information regarding the Thugs lately discovered in the districts on the banks of the Sutlej. It is believed that the system has been carried on pretty freely only of late years, but that those who belong to it are evidently young hands at their work, and have not as yet attained anything like practical proficiency in their detestable art, frequently failing to strangle; in such cases they resort to their tulwars or other weapons, with the twofold object of making sure of those victims who might have survived the effects of the clumsy attempts at strangulation, and of screening the real cause of death. Their principal seats are ascertained to have been situated between Lahore and Umritser, about Kupportalao, also between that place and Phuloor, again along the high road from Ferozepore to Looddeanah and Umballah, and even on to Thanesar. They appear rarely, if ever, to have acted in combined bodies, and as rarely to have held communication with each other, but went out in gangs of from four to eight at a time, and then only remaining together for a short while. They do not appear to have sought to obtain previous intimation regarding parties of wealthy travellers starting with merchandise from one place to another, and then to have followed them up and murdered them, after the preconcerted fashion of the Thugs of the provinces, who used to collect in gangs of 2,000 and 3,000, and frequently murder whole kfeles, and carry off thousands of rupees. The Sikh thugs, on the other hand, start along some high road, trusting to their good fortune for what they may fall in with, and do not appear ever to have obtained a booty exceeding 20 Rs. The number at present in confinement is about thirty, two of whom are Jemadars. The whole, with one or two exceptions, are said to have confessed the crimes committed by them. Almost all those apprehended are of the Rungretah caste, which, though rather low, somewhere between the chumar and the sweeper, is said to have furnished many good soldiers to the Lahore state. About sixty odd have been enrolled in the list for apprehension, and those now in confinement were brought in on the very first trips undertaken by the Nujeebs in search of them. The rest have made off, and nothing can, we presume, now be done till they have again settled somewhere, and been ferreted out, though perhaps some may be induced to return to reap their crops. The officers who have succeeded so well so far deserve great credit; but it would still be advisable to depute some one to undertake the sole duty of rooting out this frightful nest, unless the Thuggee department has been so much reduced, as we hear has been the case, as to leave no officer available.—Ibid., April 1.

DINAPORE.—Change.—We understand that Captain Dossin, S. A. C. General, has proceeded from Dinapore to take charge of Captain Hobday's office at Benares—the latter officer taking the place at Allahabad, of Captain Davidson, who proceeds to the hills on sick certificate.—Mofussile, March 31.

DUM-DUM.—The 18th.—The left wing of H. M.'s 18th Foot is still at Dum-Dum for the recovery of their health; a good many having died of cholera in Fort William.—Hurkaru, March 28.

HOOGHLY.—Registers of Title-deeds.—A Hooghly correspondent of the Bhaskar mentions the difficulty the poorer classes of the community now experience in getting their title-deeds, &c. registered, and alludes to the great influence exercised by some native official. Further notice cannot be taken of the letter for its tone appears to be libellous.—Ibid. April 7.

HOWRAH.—Death of Mr. Reeves.—We regret to learn that during the thunderstorm on Saturday, Mr. Reeves, the manager of the Union Dock at Howrah, was struck by lightning while smoking a cigar in the verandah of his house, and killed on the spot.—Ibid. April 3.

MEERUT.—Promotions.—The officers promoted by General Hodgson's death are Lieut.-colonel Buckley, of the 74th N. I.; Major McKinlay, Capt. Hoggan, Lieut. Williamson, and Ensign Sinclair, all of the 63rd N. I.

—The Garrison.—A treasure escort under Lieut. Nisbett, of the 69th, returned to Meerut yesterday morning. We believe that the Meerut garrison is now complete, with the exception of the sick, women, and children, of H. M.'s 98th, who are on their way from Dinapore by water, and a detachment of volunteers for the same regiment, who are travelling upwards by land. It is somewhat late in the season for European troops to be exposed to the weather; but we suppose it could not be avoided.

—Sir J. Thackwell.—Major General Sir Joseph Thackwell returned from his inspection of the troops at Delhi, on Tuesday morning last; and on the same day the 5th irregular cavalry, entered cantonments, when the command was assumed by Colonel Angelo.—Mofussilis, March 31.

PURNAH, MARCH 31.—Earthquake.—Cloudy all day, very close and hot, a north-wester rising at 2 p. m., wind at intervals in fitful gusts all round the compass, at 5 p. m. heavy rain accompanied with much thunder and lightning. The wind not very strong, a red settled gloom prevailed in the sky during the evening. While sitting at the table after dinner, in company with another person, and exactly at 9 p. m. we distinctly felt the shock of an earthquake. Its duration was about half a minute, and while it lasted, the house trembled, and appeared to vibrate slightly north and south; a low rumbling noise accompanied it. The shock was not a severe one, yet it was evidently the shock of an earthquake. The squall continued during the night. Thermometer 95 deg.—Hurkaru, April 5.

Proceedings of trials in the Benares division will be transmitted to the deputy judge advocate-general at Dinapore.

EXCHANGES.

The demand for first class bills continues greater than the supply, and the rates for such are well supported. Our present quotations are 1s. 10½d. to 1s. 10½d. for 6 months' first class document bills.

FREIGHTS.

Freights, after having undergone almost daily variations—our quotations are new, to London, 5l. 15s. to 6l. per ton.

MARKETS.

A steady business was done in exports during the early part of the week, or until advanced rates of freight interfered with operations. A fair amount of Indigo has been sold. Sugar has been in improved demand, and sales are large considering the limited supply of desirable qualities. Silk is wanted, but the supply continues small. Corals, now that the market has been opened, move off at steady prices. Saltpetre is without change. Rice continues dull for homeward shipment.

The Tencaserim steamer has brought news from China to the 28th February. Opium had declined, and the quotations given range from Drs. 400 to 425 for new Patna. Previous to receipt of this news there was some business doing in Patna at about sale rates Co.'s Rs. 775 to 780, but the value has since sunk to about Rs. 730, at which it is nominal.

The same steady demand for Imports continues. In Manchester Cottons a further and almost general improvement has taken place. Glasgow goods are relatively dull, but rather more has been done than for some time past. The Twist Market is without change. Sales are not extensive, but prices of No. 30 to 50 are supported.

One large sale of Copper has been made, but there is little movement in metals of any kind.

An improved feeling gains ground in the Bazar Money Markets. Discounts on approved Native Hoondees are easier, but the acceptances of very few European houses are current, and then only for small amounts, and at short dates. Company's Paper has a tendency to improve, and in the new 5 per Cents. nothing can be had at the rates ruling a fortnight since.

MADRAS. MISCELLANEOUS. LOCAL.

THE NAWAUB OF THE CARNATIC.—Salutes of twenty-one guns were fired at 11 o'clock yesterday, on the occasion of His Highness the Nawaub of the Carnatic returning the visit of the Honourable the Governor.—Athenaeum, March 20.

ARRIVAL OF THE GOVERNOR.—The Lady Flora, with the Right Honourable Major-General Sir Henry Pottinger, Bart., G.C.B., on board, arrived in these roads yesterday morning at 8 o'clock, after a tedious passage from the Cape of Good Hope of two months. His excellency landed at half-past 5 o'clock, and to judge from his appearance, had suffered but little from the inconveniences of the passage. On his landing he was met by the Commander-in-Chief, Sir George Berkeley, who introduced him to the Honourable Mr. Dickenson, the Governor de facto, who in turn introduced his successor to the various members of the Council, and the officers of the staff. A brilliant assemblage of the most distinguished members of the civil and military services welcomed His Excellency to the scene of his future labours. Amongst those present, we recognised the Honourable D. Elliot and J. F. Thomas, Esquires; Brigadier Ketchen, Colonels Underwood, Tulloch, Steele, Forster, Alexander, Browne, Felix, Whinnyates, Law, and Watson; Majors Garstin, Anstruther, Forbes, Maclean, Reid, and Clark; Captains Hope, Stafford, Nicholls, Caddell, Woods, F. H. Scott, Jenkins, Elphinstone, Maitland, Condy, Russell, Bartley, Cooke, and Scott (Nizam's), Sir H. Montgomery, Bart.,—S. D. Birch, G. L. Prendergast, Morehead, Walter Elliot, E. F. Elliot, A. F. Bruce, J. A. Cherry, J. W. Cherry, R. G. Clarke, T. V. Stonehouse, Hunter, Brown, E. P. Thompson, Underwood, R. H. Williamson, H. Nelson, Geddes, Liddell, and T. G. Clarke, Esquires; Doctors Shaw, Wylie, Jerdon, Thompson, and Cole. After the ceremony of introduction, Sir Henry Pottinger walked through a street formed by the governor's body-guard, and a detail of H. M.'s 4th, from the sea-gate to the Government office, where his excellency was sworn in under the usual salutes. He then proceeded from the council-chamber to the Wallajah gate, through a street formed by H. M.'s 25th foot, the 28th and 51st native infantry. Here he got into his carriage, accompanied by the Hon. H. Dickenson, and drove to the Government House, escorted by the body-guard.—Ibid., April 8.

ARRIVAL OF TROOPS.—The head-quarters of H.M.'s 25th regiment (K. O. B.), under the command of Colonel Chambers, arrived in the garrison of Fort St. George on the morning of the 6th instant. Colonel Chambers, being the senior officer, has been appointed to the command of the troops in garrison.—Ibid.

THE NEW GOVERNOR.—The Fort St. George Gazette of last evening contains the usual proclamations, announcing the landing of the Right Honourable the Governor, and reciting the various commissions by virtue of which he exercises his authority.—Ibid.

MILITARY.—The left wing of H.M.'s 25th (K. O. B.) has been ordered to march from Poonamallee into Fort St. George, on the morning of the 13th instant.—Ibid., April 11.

GUTTA PERCHA.—We hear from our contemporary, the Circulator, that a quantity of gutta percha has been ordered for the service of the Post Office, the use of the material being to preserve the letters from injury by rain.—Ibid., April 15.

MOFUSSIL.

THE KHOONDS.—Suppression of Meriah Sacrifices.—We are happy to learn from an authentic source, that since the return of Colonel Campbell from Ungool, 146 Meriah victims have been secured, including nearly all those whom the Khonds received back in 1846. More Meriahs are expected in the camp, and, in the words of our correspondent, "there is every reason to hope that a foundation has now been laid, for the suppression of this cruel rite in the Boad country; where all the chiefs have made their submission, and every thing wears a most favourable aspect."—Athenaeum, April 11.

OOTACAMUND, March 26.—Visitors.—Many strangers are arriving here from all quarters; the club has numerous inmates, the hotels are full, and there is a great demand for houses; to the no small satisfaction and agreeable disappointment of the Parsee shopkeepers, landlords, and house-agents; for an idea had become prevalent that, in consequence of the General Orders issued in August last, relative to officers obtaining leave to reside only for short periods on the hills, we should have fewer visitors than formerly.

—Death.—Lieut.-Col. C. Conyngham, of the Bombay Light cavalry, who came here some time since, in a very bad state of health, died on Sunday last. He had never rallied since his arrival, but daily became worse. His funeral took place last Monday afternoon.

—Our new Commandant.—On the 10th inst., Major Hall, our new commanding officer, assumed his duties, and his predecessor, Major Reid, C. B., has since taken his departure from this, for Madras, leaving his family here.

—Arrivals.—Amongst the recent arrivals are, Capt. Whistler and lady, J. C. Wroughten, Esq., C. S., C. F. Chamier, Esq., C.S., Mrs. Col. Coffin and family, J. Silver, Esq., C.S., Lieut. Silver, 4th regt. N. I., the Hon. Captain Erskine, and Lieut. Neville, H.M. 51st regt., Major Carstairs, Bombay army, and family, D. Mayne, Esq., C.S., H. M. Wallhouse, Esq., C.S., Mr. H. Richardson, Capt. Bayley, 37th N.I., and family, — Elton, Esq., C.S., and family.

—Departures.—F. Lascelles, Esq., C.S., D. Mayne, Esq., C.S., Mrs. Col. Dunn and Miss Dunn, Mrs. Gen. Farran, Capt. Farran, and Mr. H. Richardson.—Ibid., April 1.

MISCELLANEOUS.

LOCAL.

GENERAL BARR.—Major-General D. Barr embarked, under a salute, on the evening of Saturday last, on board the steamer Sir C. Forbes, for Vingoda, en route for Belgium, to take up his appointment as commander of the southern division of the army.—Times, April 5.

SIR W. COTTON.—Sir Willoughby Cotton and staff took their departure for Nagotna, en route to the Mahabuleshwar Hills, on board the H. C.'s steamer Medusa, at sunrise on the 1st inst.—a salute of seventeen guns from the battery announcing to the good folks of the presidency that another of the magnates of the island had gone from amongst them to seek a more genial clime than that Bombay at present affords.—Ibid.

THE JUMNA.—H. M.'s brig Jumna was hauled out of dock yesterday forenoon, fully rigged and equipped, and will, it is said, sail for England on the 10th inst. under command of Lieutenant Rodney, R. N. She has taken on board part of the armament of H. M.'s brig Cruiser. On board of her are about sixty blocks of sculptured alabaster and marble received by the sloop Elphinstone, from the Persian Gulf, six weeks since. A plaster cast of the finest of these has been taken for the service of our local antiquaries.—Ibid.

HURRICANE.—On the night betwixt Thursday and Friday we experienced one of the severest thunder-storms and most violent gales of wind that has for very many years visited us. The sky had throughout the week been threatening and cloudy, with a considerable amount of lightning each evening, but nothing in the state of the barometer to give cause for alarm. On the afternoon of Thursday it was peculiarly black and alarming. From nightfall it thundered incessantly, with slight showers of rain. About ten o'clock a furious gust sprung up and lasted for nearly an hour; the thunder was loud and apparently close at hand; the lightning vivid, and almost incessant; and so it continued, with an abatement only of the wind, till near daybreak. Upwards of half an inch of rain fell during the night, and the whole state of matters resembled the setting in, in the most decided shape, of the south-west monsoon. The thermometer dropped at once from 84 to 76°; the atmosphere of course was charged with damp; the wind was southerly, veering to west during yesterday morning. The natives seemed to be apprehensive of what was at hand, and on Wednesday the bulk of the native craft moved up the harbour to their monsoon anchorages. On Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, we had enormously high tides; on the afternoon of the latter day up the harbour low tide did not reach any thing like its usual point of descent, and the night tide was nearly two feet under that of the preceding noon, though the morning ebb again ran out as far as in ordinary springs. These curious movements in the waters seem peculiar to the upper part of the harbour, at all events when noticed there they seem not to have been observed so low down as the fort. Of course much mischief has been done by this unexpected burst, April being a month generally exempt from rain. Tents have been blown down, slight bungalows unroofed, and exposed and unstable structures of every sort levelled with the ground.—Ibid, April 8.

THE LATE COL. CORSELLIE.—It is with much regret we announce the death, at Liverpool, on the 21st of February last, of Lieut.-col. H. N. Corsellis, of the 18th Bombay N.I. The deceased entered the army as a cadet in 1818, obtained his majority in May, 1841, and his Lieut.-colonelcy in 1846. The promotions consequent on the death of Col. Corsellis will fall to Capt. S. H. Partridge, Lieut. A. Macdonald, and Ens. F. T. Ross. Lieut.-col. J. D. Browne, of the 10th Bombay N.I., has, we believe, offered to resign the service on the fund bonus.—Ibid, April 12.

PROMOTIONS.—The death of Lieut.-gen. W. D. Cleland, and Major-gen. A. Aitchison, notified in the English Papers received by the last mail, will give line and regimental promotion as follows:—Brev.-cols. D. Capon, and W. D. Robertson, to be colonels; Majors J. Scott, 23rd, and J. D. Browne, 16th regt. N.I. to be lieut.-colonels. 23rd regt. N.I. Capt. J. Outram, C.B., to be major; Lieut. J. G. Forbes, to be capt.; Ens. E. Henderson, to be lieut.; and unposted Ens. A. G. Paul, to be ens. 10th regt. N.I. Capt. J. G. Hume, to be major; Lieut. H. Lodwick, to be capt.; Ens. H. H. James, to be lieut.; and unposted Ens. J. R. P. Dobree, to be ens.—Ibid.

THE JUMNA.—Her Majesty's brig of war Jumna leaves this day on her voyage homeward, under command of Lieutenant Rodney, R. N.—Ibid.

THE SIR CHARLES FORBES.—The proprietors of the steamer Sir Charles Forbes have determined on sending her to Bushire for the purpose of running to and from different ports in the Gulf. She leaves this about the end of the present week, and will, it is reported, return to Bombay about the commencement of the monsoons to be docked. Should her trips in the Gulf work satisfactorily, she will be stationed there.—Ibid.

MOFUSSIL.

ASSEERGURH, April 2.—The Bishop.—The Lord Bishop of Bombay passed this a few days since en route to Dhoolia. He arrived here on the evening of Saturday, the 25th March, performed morning and evening service, held a confirmation on the following Sunday, and left early on the morning of Monday, the 27th. Dr. Wiehè accompanies him. His Lordship is to consecrate the new church at Malligaum.

—Military.—The detachment of the 20th regiment which has lately been relieved at Nassick by the 28th regiment, joined its head-quarters at Asseergurh, on the 29th, and on the morning of the 30th another detachment of the same regiment, consisting of its four right wing battalion companies, of 300 rank and file, marched for Dhoolia to relieve the wing of the 25th regiment now there. The detachment arrived from Nassick found the heat dreadfully oppressive, and it may be imagined that the detachment marching to Dhoolia will have it worse still. It is difficult to conceive what object the Government has had in effecting the arrangement above-mentioned in almost the height of the hot weather—perhaps it is a cunning device in aid of the reduction of native regiments. Neither the detachment just arrived nor that just started had any medical officer with it. Although we of Asseergurh are providentially always free from cholera, such is by no means the case in the country through which the detachment is now marching, of which the 22nd N.I. offered a melancholy instance but two years ago. Yet should such a calamity befall the detachment of the 20th, they have but the skill and experience of a second hospital assistant to trust to. Surely such carelessness of the lives of the sepoys, and with them the lives of the European officers in charge, is (if not to the same extent as that of European soldiers) still very reprehensible.—Times, April 8.

BELGAUM, April 10.—General Hughes.—Brigadier-General Hughes took his departure from this station on the evening of the 1st, accompanied by his aide-de-camp Lieut. Thompson and lady. It was much regretted that the gallant veteran's precarious state of health (since the command of the southern division devolved on him) prevented his amiable qualities being more generally known and appreciated: however, he left with the good wishes of his old acquaintances. Major Stamford, the Deputy Commissary of Ordnance, has gone on a month's private leave to Goa. Ensign Gilmore has proceeded on sick leave to the Mahabuleshwar hills.

— Arrival of Gen. Barr.—Major-General Barr and family arrived in camp this morning, receiving the usual compliment of thirteen guns. The station will now be on the qui vive, and much gay doings are looked on as certain from the General's well-known hospitality.

MARKETS.

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, FIVE O'CLOCK, 14TH APRIL, 1848.—During the last fortnight our market has had a less animated appearance than what prevailed at the date of our last report; and such has been more particularly the case during the past week, as, owing to the excitement caused upon the arrival of the last mail from England bringing news of the decision of the Privy Council in the celebrated opium case, our Mharwarrie dealers, who are more particularly interested in the result, have been kept from making any large purchases; and this influence is likely to exist for some little time longer, to the detriment of our usual business. It was anticipated by many, that the result of the above decision would show itself in some extensive failures, but we do not think such will be the case, as parties in Bombay are not so much interested in the affair as was supposed, and the Mharwarries, who will be the principal sufferers, are able to pay their losses. For the fabrics, more particularly mentioned in our last as being in good demand, a fair inquiry still exists, but generally speaking, languor prevails.

CORROR PICK-GOODS.—During the early part of the past fortnight the inquiry stated in our last as existing for low Grey and Bleached goods continued, and some large sales of these kinds were made; the disposition, however, to continue purchases was, in a great measure, checked from the cause above alluded to, and consequently the business of the past week has been comparatively trifling. The stocks of most kinds of low Grey and Bleached Fabrics continue very light, and so soon as the excitement attendant upon the opium affair shall have calmed down, we look for a recurrence of active demand. For Bleached Shirtings and Grey Domestic of the fine makes, we do not see much, if any, chance of improvement before the close of the season. Dyed and Fancy Goods.—Turkey Red Plain Cloth is dull of sale, and the offers made are below the prices previously obtained. Turkey Red Twilled Cloth is dull, but some slight inquiry exists for Turkey Red Prints of suitable patterns.

SCINDE.

ISLAM KHAN.—Letters of the 22nd March have reached us from Shikarpoor, giving particulars of the escape of Islam Khan, the Boogtie chief, who surrendered himself after the brilliant exploit of Lieut. Merewether. He has fled, with all his family, towards the hills. When he came into our hands Government gave him some of the finest land near Larkhana as a possession, hoping thereby to induce him to abandon his predatory habits, and betake himself to agriculture. His son is understood to have joined the party, and they have betaken themselves to fastnesses where we may not follow them. It is supposed likely that the existing fragments of the tribes will rally round the chief so soon as they hear of his foot being on the heather again. After all their losses, there are still very many members of his race in the hills. Their spirits are undaunted, and their predacious habits inveterate, so that we may yet find work cut out for us on the frontier for the cold season. His plans had been well laid, and his arrangements carefully matured, before his departure. Troops had been despatched in all directions in pursuit of him; but as he had obtained a good start before his pursuers were on his track, the hope that the indefatigable Scinde horse might intercept him about the base of the hills was the only one we had to cling to. He may yet give us no small annoyance, and draw down on himself and his clan another such visitation as those already experienced by them.

THE WEATHER AND HEALTH.—The weather at Shikarpore continued cool, though the hot season was supposed to be at hand. The troops were all singularly healthy. There was hardly any sickness at the station; small-pox had nearly disappeared, and some cases of measles were still about. Dr. Malcolmson had succeeded in establishing vaccination in the camp and town, which promised to be of incalculable benefit to the country.

THE FORCE.—The Shikarpore Brigade consists of the 3rd Regt. N.I., horse battery of six guns, the 2nd Belooch battalion; police, horse and foot, armed and disciplined as sepoy of the line; and Jacob's two Ressallas of Scinde horse. The 9th Rgt. is at Sukkur. This force is quite enough to meet all and every tribe in the hills, if they were unanimous, which they are not.

THE RIVER.—The river was rising. Canal digging was going on with great spirit.—Times, April 15.

CHINA.

OUTRAGEOUS ASSAULT ON THREE MISSIONARIES.

Drs. Medhurst and Lockhart, and Mr. Muirhead, three members of the London Missionary Society stationed at Shanghai, recently visited Tsing-poo, a town about thirty miles distant. Whilst engaged in distributing tracts and instructing the people, the crowd pressed upon and annoyed them, and one of the party accidentally hit a man belonging to the grain junks with his stick; upon which he and some of his fellows set up a shout and threw stones. The ill-feeling, however, was confined to these loose fellows, and was not participated in by the inhabitants of Tsing-poo, who seem to have shewn a friendly disposition. The reverend gentlemen, having determined to return, were proceeding to their boats, when they were fallen in with by another party of these grain-junk men, who, armed with bows, spears, swords, iron bars, and other dangerous weapons, made a savage attack upon the offending missionaries, rifling them of their clothes, watches, and everything they had, plunder having been their object in making the attack. The gentlemen attempted to escape, but were speedily overtaken, beaten, and severely wounded. The ruffians, it is said, spoke of killing them, but dreading the consequences, determined to convey them to their junks, with the view of extorting a heavy ransom for their release. On the way the prisoners were fortunately rescued by the police, and taken to the district magistrate, who treated them with much courtesy and kindness, and sent them under an escort to their boats, lying about five miles off. Many respectable inhabitants of the place came out to congratulate the missionaries on their escape.

It seems that an immense number of these grain-junk men—said to amount to 13,000—have been thrown out of employment, and are hanging about the district between Soochow and Shanghai. The grain tribute, amounting annually to upwards of 4,700,000 shih, or about 336,000 tons, has hitherto been sent forward by way of the Grand Canal. Towards the north, however, the water has this year become so shallow, as to render transit by that route nearly impossible. Great exertions have been used and much expense incurred in trying to remedy the evil, but to very little purpose; and it was therefore found necessary to send part of the grain by sea from the Yang-tze-keang to the Bei-ho. Thousands of boatmen employed in the inland transit have thus been thrown out of employment; and being, like others of their class elsewhere, a dissolute and reckless set of fellows, idle and want have driven them to the commission of many excesses in the neighbourhood of the Grand Canal, latterly extending as far as the country around Shanghai.

Their counterpart as home may be found in the hands of discharged railway navies; and H. B. M.'s Consul at Shanghai, considering it imprudent for foreigners to make excursions into the country so long as it is infested by these lawless fellows, has issued the following Circular on the subject:—

NOTIFICATION.

British Consulate, Shanghai, March 10, 1848.

Her Majesty's Consul has to regret the occurrence of a most unprompted outrage on the part of some junkmen, placing the lives of a party of missionaries visiting Tsing-poo in the greatest jeopardy. While engaged in earnest efforts to secure the apprehension of the ringleaders, and provide for adequate measures being taken by the Chinese authorities to prevent the recurrence of acts alike dangerous to life, and injurious to our interests in China, Her Majesty's Consul deems it necessary to urge in the strongest manner upon all British subjects the prudence of abstaining for the present from any lengthened excursions into the country.

Some 13,000 grain junkmen are scattered between Soochow and Ton shan, hitherto in the employment of the Chinese government, but about to be dismissed without satisfactory or final arrangements having yet been made to provide them with the means of finding other homes, and in the meantime they remain at Tsing-poo and other places, a terror to the peaceable inhabitants, whom they plunder and maltreat with impunity.

The danger of such a state of things to British subjects has been so fully shewn by the recent attack upon three inoffensive missionaries, who seem greatly to have owed their lives to the praiseworthy forbearance they exhibited, that it must be obvious no one with common prudence can at present visit the neighbourhood of those junkmen.

RUTHERFORD ALCOCK, Consul.

To the British subjects at Shanghai.

By the Amelia, which arrived this morning, later advices have been received. From these it appears that Mr. Consul Alcock has been induced "to adopt extreme measures" towards the Chinese authorities, involving very grave questions; but with our present imperfect information as to the grounds on which he proceeds, we are unwilling to suppose these measures are more than the occasion demands, or his powers authorise him to enforce.

It seems that on learning the circumstances of the attack on the three missionaries, Mr. Alcock construed them into an infraction of "Treaty rights," which he felt called on to defend at all hazards; and accordingly, it is said, preferred a demand to the Toun-tse that ten of the offenders should be produced for identification by the parties assaulted, and at the same time issued the above circular, dated the 10th. His demands not having immediately complied with, the notification given below was issued on the 13th,* and at the end of the forty-eight hours specified, the

* NOTIFICATION.

British Consulate Office, Shanghai, March 13, 1848.

The refusal of the Chinese authorities to afford redress for the murderous assault upon three British subjects, by the seizure of the chief offenders, leaves H. M.'s Consul no alternative but to adopt extreme measures, or permit the security of his countrymen and the interests of the nation to be seriously compromised.

Every amicable means therefore having failed, H. M.'s Consul has given H. E. the Taou-tse forty-eight hours from this day at noon to produce ten of the ringleaders in the attack, failing which, such other steps will be taken as Taou-tae was allowed another day to produce the offenders; but as he did not do so, the subjoined circulars were issued to British residents and the commanders of British merchant vessels.* The Espergle had in the meantime been sent for from Ningpo, while the boats of the Childers were engaged in taking soundings of the river above Shanghai, from which it was ascertained that the brig could if necessary proceed to within two miles of the spot where the outrage occurred. The Chinese seem to have apprehended the enforcement of the "extreme measures" threatened; for several war junks arrived inward, and others that had put to sea anchored within sight.

Our advices are probably incomplete; but judging from what is before us, we are not without doubt that Mr. Consul Alcock may have exceeded his powers, and that her Majesty's Government may not be disposed to adopt such responsibilities as he has undertaken †.

[P.S.—We have just seen a letter in which it is stated that, at the commencement of the negotiations, some officers from the Taou-tae proceeded to levy a fine of 200 dollars upon Dr. Medhurst, for having exceeded the prescribed bounds in his excursion; and the matter having been represented to the Consul, he felt indignant that any such proceeding should have been adopted without his cognisance.]—Mail, March 23.

may appear expedient to compel the reparation required. In the meantime, and until full satisfaction has been obtained, it has been notified to the authorities that no Custom-house duties will be paid for British ships. The consignees or other parties will in each case be called upon to enter into an undertaking at the Consulate, to pay the amounts respectively due, whenever called upon by H. B. M.'s Consul.

Security to life and property and the best interests of the commerce of Western nations generally with Shanghai, are at stake; and if no redress be obtained for so brutal and unprovoked an outrage upon peaceable foreigners, all the great advantages hitherto enjoyed at this port may be lost at once. H. M.'s Consul accepts the responsibility of his present course; therefore, in the firm conviction that whatever danger or inconvenience may attend the measures he is compelled to adopt, greater still must overtake the community if either timidity or hesitation be shown.

RUTHERFORD ALCOCK, Consul.

* Circular addressed to the British residents at Shanghai.

A notification issued this day to the masters of all merchant vessels under the British flag within the jurisdiction of H. M.'s Consul, calling on them to be prepared on his requisition, to leave their anchorage for the protection of British interests at this port, is annexed, for the information of the British community.

This is merely a measure of precaution, called for under the circumstances, but H. M.'s Consul has strong reasons to hope, it may not be necessary to act upon it. H. E. the Taou-tae has this morning despatched the Hae-fang, the next civil officer in rank to himself, to Taing-poo, the Consul having been informed last night, that H. E. had deputed that officer to proceed in all haste, and in connection with the Chie-hsen of that place, to seize the offenders. This is the first evidence, wrong from the authorities by the stringency of the measures adopted, of any determination to meet the public demand of H. M.'s Consul for reparation. He trusts that it may be the forerunner of complete satisfaction.

In the meantime, as a translation of the annexed notification has been transmitted to the Taou-tae, with a letter signifying the consent of H. M.'s Consul to wait a short and definite time for the result of the Hae-fang's exertions, there can be but little doubt it will suffice to satisfy H. E. that this concession of time is not due to any want of determination on the part of H. M.'s Consul to follow out to the end the cause upon which he has entered, in defence of treaty, rights, and the best interests of the community.

RUTHERFORD ALCOCK, Consul.

Notification to the Commanders of British ships.

The delay experienced in obtaining redress from the Chinese authorities for an assault upon three British subjects, from which they only providentially escaped with their lives, after having been wounded and treated with the greatest brutality by a band of grain-junk men, none of whom have yet been seized, has rendered measures necessary on the part of the Consul, which may require to be enforced by all the means at his disposal.

In this untoward state of affairs, which H. M.'s Consul sincerely deplors, as contrary to the interests of both nations, it is necessary to be prepared for all contingencies; and the better to enforce our just claims to prompt and full reparation, it may be expedient to call upon all masters commanding vessels under the British flag within the jurisdiction of H. M.'s Consulate at this port, to hold themselves in readiness to leave their anchorage, and support him as the representative of H. M.'s Government, in protecting British interests at this port.

For any detention, loss, or injury which may accrue to them, should their services be required in defence of the public interest, H. B. M.'s Consul has notified to H. E. the Taou-tae, that the Chinese Government will be held responsible.

RUTHERFORD ALCOCK, Consul.

Shanghai, March 16, 1848.

† It is proper to mention that the course chalked out by Mr. Alcock is approved of by nearly all the members of the British Chamber of Commerce at Shanghai, between whom and the Consul the following interchange of assurances has taken place:—

To RUTHERFORD ALCOCK, Esq. H. B. M.'s Consul.

Shanghai, March 14, 1848.

SIR,—Adverting to the Notification No. 14, issued yesterday afternoon from the British Consulate, respecting the recent brutal outrage upon three offending British subjects, the undersigned, impressed with the importance of this indication on the part of a lawless set in the employ of the Chinese Government, and the marked significance lent to this event by the recent melancholy occurrences in Canton, so much vaunted by the ill-disposed in this neighbourhood,—cannot refrain from giving expression to their satisfaction, at the energetic measures adopted to obtain plenary redress from the Chinese authorities, and to assure you of the entire confidence with which they find their interests placed under your guardianship.

Under the firm conviction, that the tranquillity hitherto enjoyed at this port would be eminently imperilled by permitting the Chinese authorities to evade the fulfilment of their duty on this occasion, we would respectfully

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE MINDANAO PIRATES.—From Manila we learn that an expedition has been undertaken by the Spanish authorities against the pirates of Mindanao, who infest the Archipelago. The armament consists of ten large gun-boats, three gun-brigs, and three steamers, with 500 men—to be reinforced, if necessary, by a draft from the garrison of Zebu, and a body of natives, the whole under the command of the Captain General.—Mail, March 9.

ARRIVAL OF THE NEW GOVERNOR.—The Pekin anchored in the harbour at twelve o'clock on Monday last; and half-past two being the hour fixed for the landing of the new Governor, Samuel George Bonham, Esq., preparations were made for receiving him with all the honours due to his high office. Precisely at the hour appointed the barge approached the wharf, and as his Excellency stepped on shore he was received with a salute of seventeen guns. From the landing-place to Government-house the road was lined with military, who presented arms as His Excellency passed, accompanied by Sir John Davis. Mrs. Bonham was escorted by the Honourable Mr. Johnston. Most of the other Government officials were unfortunately absent, having started only a few hours before upon an expedition to the mainland.—Ibid. March 23.

offer you such support, as the assurance may afford you of our readiness to submit to any inconvenience, which in the energetic protection of our permanent interests you may find yourself compelled to demand of us.—We remain, &c.

Her Majesty's Consulate, Shanghai, 18th March, 1848.

Gentlemen,—I have received with great satisfaction and pleasure your letter of the 14th instant. Under the circumstances of peculiar difficulty in which we are placed, it cannot fail to be gratifying to me to know, that you see and feel with me the paramount importance of firm and determined stand being made, to obtain that justice which the Chinese authorities have hitherto shown themselves so averse to render.

There can be no security for life or property, where the authorities either cannot, or will not, punish those who put both in peril. The plea of inability to seize the offenders in the present instance, if admitted, at once relieves the Chinese authorities of all responsibility for any outrage or violence that may be offered to foreigners; and the same argument, first used to limit our excursions, would suffice, if carried out to its legitimate conclusion, to confine every foreign resident to his own home, without providing for his safety even there. I do not know what loss or inconvenience may follow the steps I am myself reluctantly compelled, by the weakness and blindness of the local authorities, to adopt in defence of our Treaty rights; but I am truly glad to learn that you are prepared to encounter these contingencies cheerfully in as good a cause, and are confident in my earnest desire to act firmly and justly for the protection of British interests.

You may also be confident that reparation will eventually be exacted by Her Majesty's Government, should loss ensue; and with this conviction I will not shrink from the responsibilities of my present course, which, whatever may be the first results, I believe upon mature reflection to be the best adapted to avert greater evils than any temporary injury to our commercial interests at this port.

I thank you very sincerely, gentlemen, for the cordial expression of your sympathy and confidence, and have the honour to remain, your obedient humble servant,

RUTHERFORD ALCOCK.

COMMERCIAL.

Hong-Kong, March 29, 1848.

EXCHANGES.

Government Bills at 30 days have been sold in Hong-Kong at 4s. 2d. to the extent of about 30,000l. Canton 6 months bills at 4s. 2d. to 4s. 3d. About two lakhs of dollars in treasure are being remitted to England by steamer. Company's rupees, 212.

FREIGHTS.

There is abundance of tonnage, and very low rates would be accepted for whole cargoes. Small shipments are made to England at 4l. 5s. to 4l. 10s. American ships have been offered at 10 dollars per ton to the United States, without success.

MANILLA.

EXCHANGES.

The intelligence brought by the mails of October and November has been so alarming that a general distrust of bills on England has rendered operations in exchange exceedingly difficult, and although the aspect of commercial affairs in England had improved, the sales of bills continue very small, buyers holding off until the arrival of the January mail, which is looked for with the greatest impatience. Some sales have been made, it is said, on credit at 4s. 7d. but the amount taken for the remittances of the month has been inconsiderable, compared with the usual transactions for the Overland Mail. The unusual scarcity of money, which is general here, tends also to cramp the market for exchange on London. On China, dull at par.

FREIGHTS.

There are none offering at present for Europe or America.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

THURSDAY, May 25, 1848.

THE Bengal Hurkaru, it seems, has a London correspondent, which functionary, a short time since, called down upon his devoted head a vigorous outpouring of the wrath of his employer for presuming to give credence to the opinion of the Duke of WELLINGTON (once thought some sort of authority upon such matters), that the country was but ill prepared for war, while at the same time it was in imminent danger of being involved in hostilities. The Hurkaru snuffs with contempt at the joint folly of the soldier and the littérateur, and declares that we were much nearer war in 1840-41 than we are now, though at that time we had "none of this fuss about national defences." The Editor admits, with edifying candour, that "Mr. COBDEN, Sir WILLIAM MOLESWORTH, and other free-traders, may push their argument a little too far;" but he adds, "they are right in the main when they contend that the abolition of hostile tariffs is a means of security against war, because"—what a because!—"because, in fact, it is one of the best preventives of war!" This is as much as if a man should say, a comfortable fire is one of the best securities against cold, because it is, in fact, one of the best preventives of cold. Or to borrow an illustration from Mr.

GRANTLY BERKELEY,—a punch on the head judiciously administered to a turbulent prisoner is a means of security against resistance, because it is one of the best preventives of resistance. But passing this extraordinary specimen of logical skill, we proceed to the consideration of the assertion that Messrs. COBDEN and Company are right as to the effect of Free-trade in preventing war. We do not mean to enter into any discussion of the merits of Free-trade in other respects; we confine our remarks to this one point. Bread and beef are admirable things to appease hunger; but we doubt whether a shower of pellets composed of these excellent materials would have had much effect in dispersing the Sikh army. Free-trade shall, for the present, enjoy all the advantages that its advocates claim for it but one—that of insuring universal and perpetual peace. To this demand we must very modestly, but at the same time very firmly, refuse to yield. If the doctrines of Free-trade were demonstratively true,—if all men were satisfied of their truth, and convinced that Free-trade was best for the happiness of all nations, and of every individual in each,—then, supposing at the same time that man is a passionless creature, and, moreover, a creature steeped in sensuality, caring for nothing but to live like an ox in a fat pasture in ease and fulness, then Free-trade would insure peace; but let any one of these conditions fail, and the security is gone. If the doctrines of Free-trade be true, it is certain that a very small part of mankind as yet receive them. And in the array against them we do not find exclusively the rulers or the inhabitants of barbarous countries. In how many of the nations of Europe are those doctrines popular? We set no value upon the continental fêtings and feastings of Mr. COBDEN. These things tended to gratify the vanity of that gentleman, and to increase his bulk; but all the world is aware—the object of these ridiculous exhibitions is himself aware—that the tinsel compliments offered him did not come either from the governments of the countries which he visited, or from any large body of the people of those countries, but from a small knot of vain, coxcombical pretenders to science, greedy of notoriety, but terribly cramped in their power of obtaining it. To these persons the progress of Mr. COBDEN was like finding an unlooked-for treasure. They had yearned night and day to see their names in newspapers, but in vain. At length COBDEN came, and they rushed one and all to throw their arms round his neck; and not, indeed, without some sincerity, for he had rescued them from that obscurity in which they seemed doomed to pine hopelessly for ever. All this, let us remind our readers, makes nothing against Free-trade—any more than it makes any thing for it. Free-trade may be true, though its advocates be puppies and sciolists. But it is beyond doubt that neither in point of numbers nor influence had Mr. COBDEN any reason to boast of his foreign admirers. They were nobodies, to whom his presence gave a temporary sense of importance. The whole Continent is against Free-trade, and Mr. COBDEN knows it better than most men. Granting, then, that its dogmas be irrefutable by either reason or experience,—that in its most minute details it is utterly unanswerable by argument,—what avails it so long as mankind shut their eyes to the truth, and refuse to be convinced, though COBDEN preach and MOLESWORTH publish?

But supposing—a most extravagant supposition—that all men were persuaded, by some means or other, of the truth of that code of political economy of which Mr. COBDEN is the missionary.—By the way, his fortune is very different to that of most missionaries. They ordinarily have to endure toil, insult, and persecution. Mr. COBDEN is called upon for no greater sacrifices in the way of duty than to eat a great number of good dinners exemplifying various styles of national cookery, and to pocket eighty thousand pounds! Who would not be a philosopher and a philanthropist? They are unquestionably the most thriving trades going. But we must not dwell upon advantages to which we have been led incidentally to advert. Returning, then, to our subject, we must again desire our readers to suppose (if they can) all the world converted to the doctrines of the Free-traders. What then? Will the passions of men sleep, as "in infancy's breast," in order that exchange may go on briskly, and the power of buying in the cheapest market and selling in the dearest flourish? Is the love of cheap living (supposing it can be gratified) the only desire to which the human mind is subject? Is ambition, national or individual, nothing? Is revenge nothing? Are envy, hatred, and malice, things to be got rid of by a word from Mr. COBDEN'S lips or a stroke of Sir WILLIAM MOLSWORTH'S pen? How is it in daily life? Do we not constantly see men, knowing what is right and beneficial, act in defiance of their knowledge, and pursue courses which they are fully aware are pernicious to themselves, not less than to those around them? The spendthrift knows that he is ruining himself; but he goes on. The drunkard is conscious that he is preparing for himself an early grave; but he fills another glass, and risks the consequences. The obstinate and intractable man knows that his temper stands in the way of his prospects, but he indulges the former, and lets the latter take their chance. The expectation that it should be possible by any cold calculations of expediency to restrain the appetites and passions of men is, indeed, fit to be entertained only by the inhabitants of Bedlam. We have hitherto proceeded on the assumption that danger would arise only from the interference of evil passions with the doctrines of Free-trade. But feelings, noble and elevated in their nature—feelings not to be weighed against any calculations of profit and loss—may sometimes come in to mar the quietness of the scene. We hope Free-trade is not to beat down all the aspirations of patriotism or public spirit. This seems, indeed, to be the intention of the professors, who are ready to exclaim, and who virtually do exclaim, "Let the country sink into a state of serfdom to foreign invaders, rather than the course of Free-trade be impeded." But all Free-traders are not so far gone; and a national insult, too galling to be endured even by the disciples (contumacious disciples, in this respect) of BRIGHT, might suddenly light up the flames of war, and leave the thorough-going partisans of the doctrine, which at the end of six thousand years is to make the world peaceable, to wonder and weep.

These disappointments have, indeed, already begun. Free-trade has just commenced its triumphs, and just at this period Europe seems on the point of being involved in a general war. Look where we will, the elements of conflict are in motion. Everywhere are thrones shaking and people rushing to arms. We, the great customers, as well as the great factors of the world, have levelled almost all our commercial barriers, and informed our brethren abroad that we were ready to receive whatever they would send us.

But they answer in deeds, if not in words, that they have no time to send us any thing—they have constitutions to construct, old authorities to put down, new ones to set up, and many throats to subject to the sword, before they can think of the state of the markets, or of turning an honest penny in the way of trade. And here we must return to the Hurkars. "If," says the writer of the article to which we have already referred, "If, for example, the French saw English statesmen occupying themselves with Free-trade measures and with efforts to promote the adoption of these principles by other states, they would be much less liable to be led away by the war faction." Now the French are not believers in Free-trade, and, therefore, if they sit in the way of going to war, it is not against conviction. They have, however, had abundant opportunities of seeing "English statesmen occupying themselves with Free-trade measures; and with efforts to promote the adoption of their principles by other states." For some years English statesmen have done little else, yet the French are neither converted to Free-trade nor made pacific. But look at the conduct of France in a matter in which they had no mistaken opinions in political economy to mislead them—in which they had not and could not have any doubt as to the precise effect of what they were doing. A few weeks ago Paris swarmed with English families, who went thither not to earn money but to spend it. The Parisians, however, chose to indulge in the luxury of a revolution; the English fled, and the result is, that the shopkeepers of Paris, the manufacturers of articles of necessity or luxury, both masters and workmen, those who subsisted by letting houses and lodgings, and a vast mass dependent for their daily bread upon their obtaining employment in various branches of service, are reduced to beggary and destitution. The gayest city upon the earth has become the very cave of despair. Now the people know what they were about. Many of them, probably, by this time repent of what they have done; but they acted with their eyes open. They chose to cut off the springs of their own prosperity, and they have done it. Let us hear no more, then, of Free-trade being a preventive of war. It was lately observed in the Times, "There was a time—it was only three months since—when men talked fondly of the thirty-three years' peace." Yes, and the success of Free-trade measures led them to speculate on peace coeval with the duration of the world. That delusion is passed, and whatever the merits of Free-trade, it is certain that it is not to be trusted as a conservator of peace.

Once more let us protest against being regarded as among the opponents of Free-trade. The state doctors assure us that it affords the only mode of treatment which can relieve a nation of that very annoying disease, poverty; and we would not for the world contradict them. True, the results of the practice have not been very successful. It is unfortunate for the reputation of a medicine when every patient to whom it is administered either immediately dies, or at least becomes worse. But we cannot help these mischances. Let science flourish. There is still among us a little commercial distress—just a little, perhaps, to fulfil the office of King PHILIP'S warning officer, and remind us that we are but men. But if it were ten times greater than it is, we could not think of appealing to facts in refutation of theories which it has cost so many ingenious persons so much labour to spin. We will stand up for the College against all the facts in the world. If political economists do not know what they are talking about, who should? But then we can stand by the regular practitioners only. When these tell us that Free-trade is the way to wealth, we fold our arms and lowly bend in humble acquiescence. But when a set of quacks, like their brethren in the medical line, require us to believe that their Free-trade pills will not only cure poverty, but every thing else—will make the world at peace, and keep it so, and introduce a real golden age, surpassing in happiness all that poet ever dreamt, we pause. The Citizen, in the Tale of a Tub, found the quintessence of every thing else in a sirloin; Lord Peter, in the same work, found in a sixpenny loaf that which no taste but his own could discover there; Dr. Solomon cured all diseases, past, present, and to come, by his balm of Gilead; others have performed the like feats by pills of curious combination, a crust of bread, a mixture of brandy and salt, a round of magnetic passes, or a few pails of water and pounds of raisins. Now as to all these performances, we must beg leave to indulge an slight degree of scepticism. And so in political economy; we have expressed our unbounded faith in the regular doctors (we hope they will give us credit for sincerity), but we must insist on keeping clear of the quacks, who, not content with maintaining the efficacy of the Free-trade medicine in a certain class of diseases, insist upon its being a remedy for all. We have great powers of credulity, as we hope the political economists will admit; but there is a point where nature recoils—and Mr. Cobden and the Herkyn have found it.

For more than eighteen hundred years the religion of universal peace and good-will has been existing with the evil passions of man. It has greatly lessened, but alas! is yet far from having destroyed their influence. Free-trade, however, is to do at once what Divine Revelation has not effected in a period of nearly twice ten centuries!

MISCELLANEOUS.

Messrs. COCKERELL, LARSEN, and CO.—At the time of the failure of this firm, a statement was put forth, shewing that, after paying in full all demands on them, there would remain the handsome surplus of £189,861. Another statement has, however, just appeared, from which it appears that the greatest dividend that can be paid on the estate will be 4s. 4d. The following is the statement referred to:—

Assets.

FAILURE OF MESSRS. WEBER AND CO.—We regret to announce the stoppage of the East-India firm of Messrs. Weber and Co. The originating cause of their failure appears to have been the purchase of large quantities of rice, which would now scarcely pay its freight. The non-receipt of remittances from their agents abroad, and the refusal of the Bank to continue to discount their acceptances, contributed to hasten their suspension. The total liabilities, it is believed, will be under £50,000.

SERVICE OF MR. VERNING.—It is our painful duty to announce the suicide of Mr. Vening, of the firm of William Vening and Co., in the Cape of Good Hope trade. The cause of the distressing act was in no way, we believe, connected with business, but arose entirely from severe domestic affliction.

VINCENT HARRISON was recently entertained at dinner by the Junior United Service Club.

SIR CHARLES NAPIER, late governor of Scinde, arrived in this country on the 16th inst.

NEW SECRETARY AT THE BOARD.—Mr. Cornwall Lewis has ceased to be joint secretary to the Board of Commissioners for the Affairs of India, having been appointed one of the under secretaries of state. His place at the board has been supplied by the appointment of Mr. J. Wilson, M.P. for Westbury, and, as is understood, proprietor and editor of the Economist.

ARRIVAL OF TROOPS FROM INDIA.—The Monarch arrived at Gravesend on the 10th instant, having on board the first contingent of Indian troops this season. It consisted of the head-quarters of the 21st Royal North British Fusiliers. Its strength was 7 sergeants, 121 rank and file, 6 women, 10 children, Lieut. col. J. S. Hill, Lieuts. A. L. Johnstone, T. Holland, E. Clouston, E. T. Bernard, and H. C. Gray; Quartermaster J. Mahood, and Surgeon J. Dempster, &c. This regiment left England in 1833. The Monarch sailed from Calcutta on the 16th January last. The Emperor, with troops, arrived at Gravesend on the 20th instant, having left Bombay on the 25th January last; the troops brought by her are the head-quarters of the 20th, consisting of 1 quartermaster; 1 serjeant; 1 armoury serjeant; 1 orderly clerk; 1 drum-major; 4 colour-serjeants; 7 sergeants; 11 corporals; 8 drummers; 249 privates; 13 women; 21 children; under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel J. Messiter; Captain J. G. R. Alpin; Lieutenants S. Cotton, M. Baumgartner; Ensigns L. Scofield, R. H. P. Alpin; Adjutant, H. Webb; Quartermaster, A. Cowan; Surgeon, W. H. Young. This regiment was first draughted out in convict guards to Sydney in 1833, and thence proceeded to India, where it served five years.

TROOPS FROM CHINA.—On the 15th instant a detachment of the 95th arrived from Hong Kong, consisting of 1 sergeant, 80 rank and file, 4 women, and 10 children; under the charge of Lieutenant the Hon. R. S. Phibbs and Surgeon J. Eddies, M.D. They left Hong Kong on the 30th December, in the Andromache, which also brought 6 men of the 18th Royal Irish, and the invalid seamen and marines of the squadron in China.

DISPATCHES OF STORES.—The Wellington has been engaged for the conveyance of stores to Madras, and the Robert Small for the same purpose to Bombay.

HOSIERY and OUTFITTING WAREHOUSE, 146,

Strand, near Somerset House.—Mrs. WHITE begs most respectfully to recommend to her friends (more particularly those resident in India) her most beautiful make of Lisle Thread Hose and Half Hose for Ladies' and Gentlemen's wear; their lightness, durability, and comfort can only be appreciated by those who have tried them. She also strongly recommends a beautiful description of Merino Vest and Drawers adapted for the East and West Indies.

Mrs. W. takes this opportunity to thank her friends and the public for the liberal support she has received for the last six years, and begs to assure them that as she devotes the whole of her time and attention to her business, that the best attention will be paid to all orders she may be favoured with for either ladies or gentlemen, enclosing an order for payment on a bank or any house of known responsibility in London, will meet with immediate attention.

H. & T. PEAT, SADDLERS, HARNESS-MAKERS,
&c., No. 167, PICCADILLY, LONDON, avail themselves of the present opportunity gratefully to acknowledge the patronage which they have received for so many years from their numerous connections in India, and to solicit a continuance of that preference which it has ever been their endeavour to deserve. At the same time, they beg to state that, from their very serious losses, they are compelled to decline the execution of any orders unless accompanied by an order for payment (when shipped) upon some agent or mercantile house in London.

It is also necessary that the name of an agent at the presidency should be given, to whom the goods are to be consigned, as the strictest despatch will be used in the shipments from London.

H. and T. PEAT feel bound, in justice to themselves, to make it known that large quantities of saddlery, &c., bearing their name and address, which are not of their make, are sent out to India, and elsewhere, by other parties, and are of very inferior qualities. Gentlemen should, therefore, send their orders direct to H. and T. P. to ensure articles of their manufacture.

All military orders, whether Cavalry, Infantry, Staff, Artillery, or Engineer, will be executed according to the latest regulation, and a discount of 5 per cent. allowed for cash payments.

N.B.—H. and T. P. beg to recommend for durability their 10, 11, and 12th saddles, in preference to the lighter ones of 7, 8, and 9th, at present so much in demand for India; and likewise to observe that, in all cases where the goods are not insured, H. and T. P. cannot be accountable for any damage the same may receive after shipment.

SARSAPARILLA.

BRIDGE'S SARSAPARILLA continues to be carefully prepared by T. A. BRIDGE and Co., Operative Chemists, &c., 27, Regent Street, London. It is a pure Cortical Essence of Red Jamaica Sarsaparilla, and for many years has been extensively used as the best and cheapest preparation of this esteemed alterative Medicine. It has a large sale in INDIA and the Colonies, as well as in England, and the highest testimonials are inclosed with full directions with each bottle. A dessert spoonful is a dose, equal to half a pint of Compound Decoction of Sarsaparilla, as ordered by the London College of Physicians. In bottles—Pints, 12s.; half-pints, 8s.; and quarter pints, 4s. 6d. Messrs. Bridges beg to caution the public against spurious imitations which are now being sold, and respectfully intimate that none is genuine without having the name of T. A. BRIDGE engraved on each bottle. Also T. A. BRIDGE and Co.'s QUINTESSENCE of JAMAICA GINGER, a celebrated remedy for indigestion, flatulency, Gout, Rheumatism, Spasms, Debility, and all nervous affections. The great inconvenience of taking ginger in powder is quite obviated by this preparation, which, by a chemical process, contains all the properties of the best Jamaica Ginger in the highest state of concentration, a few drops being a dose. It is recommended by the first medical men in the kingdom. During sea-sickness, and afterwards, it is most beneficial, in doses of twenty to thirty drops. Families going abroad should be careful to provide themselves with it.

A DISEASED ELBOW CURED by HOLLOWAY'S

ointment and PILLS.—Mrs. Dunham, of Strubby, near Alford, was dreadfully afflicted with an enlargement of the elbow joint. For several months she lost the use of her arm, during which period she was under the treatment of the Faculty in Lincoln, Nottingham, and other places, but obtained no relief, and from the intense pain she constantly endured it was decided that nothing but amputation or death could relieve her sufferings. In this state, Holloway's Ointment and Pills were resorted to, and these truly valuable medicines soon effected a permanent cure, and restored the complete use of her arm. Mr. Hurton, Bookseller, Louth, will testify to this. Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 24, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

WORTHY OF PUBLIC ATTENTION!!!

CHAPMAN'S UNIVERSAL PILLS, a combination of the most approved virtues of the Vegetable Kingdom, blended together in such due and just proportions, as to form at length an article which, they confidently venture to affirm, will be found superior to any thing of the kind hitherto made known; they contain not a particle of Mercury, or any other pernicious ingredients, but act almost imperceptibly, but none the less surely as a gentle purifier of the blood and invigorator of the system. Their private use has been for many years co-extensive with that of the Universal Salve, to which they will be found most valuable agents.

The Proprietors might say much in their favour, and would enlarge upon their merits, were they not anxious that they should stand upon their own, and not have the appearance of being (as is too commonly the case) puffed into notice. They will, therefore, content themselves by saying that, in all cases of Bilious Attacks, Indigestion, Constipation of the Bowels, Sick Head-ache, frequent Nausea, Chronic Rheumatism, Lumbago, violent Cold or Cough, Jaundice, and in short all Internal Diseases, their aid will be found to be invaluable.

Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. each. Wholesale Depot, 5, Swallow Place, Regent Street.

Be particular in asking for CHAPMAN'S UNIVERSAL PILLS. Agents:—Messrs. HANWAY and Co.; SARGENT and Co., Oxford Street; and by most of the respectable Chemists in the United Kingdom.

FEET.—EASE in WALKING.—HALL and Co.,

Wellington Street, Strand, near Waterloo Bridge. The Pannus Corium, or Leather-Cloth Boots and Shoes, are the softest and easiest ever worn. They yield to the action of the feet without the slightest pressure or drawing effect on the most sensitive corns, bunions, gout, or tenderness from any other cause. BENGAL MILITARY FUND, CALCUTTA, 27th JANUARY, 1948.

In submitting to the meeting the annual abstract of the accounts for the past year, the Directors beg to notice that the capital invested in Government securities amounted on the 1st January, 1948, to Rs. 50,00,000, and on the 31st January, 1947, to Rs. 49,58,160, showing an increase of Rs. 1,38,840.

The excess of receipts over disbursements for the whole year of 1947 amounted to Rs. 1,41,770-15-4, after payment of the advances made by the Hon. Company at home, from 1st October, 1945, to 31st October, 1946.

The value of the Widows' Annuities in 1947 exceeds the estimated state of the Fund by upwards of 17½ lakhs of rupees; in 1946, the excess was something more than 6½ lakhs; in 1945, 4½ lakhs; exhibiting a gradual increase of liabilities without a proportionate increase of receipts.

The Directors further desire to notice that Mr. G. F. Nelson, Attorney of the Medical War and General Life Office, has been engaged for some time in investigating, de novo, the state of the Fund, from records at the India House, to which he has been allowed access by the Hon. Court of Directors, and it is hoped that the result of his investigation will be known by the middle of this year.

The Directors are concerned to state that there is reason to apprehend that Messrs. Cockrell, Larpent, and Co., of London, have not paid over (as they stated it to be their intention to do, in their letter to the address of the Secretary, dated 6th February, 1946) to the Hon. Court of Directors the balance, amounting to Rs. 23,819-9-9, which was in their possession when they came to conduct the duties of the agency, no credit having been given for that sum in the Hon. Court's accounts last received, and closed on the 31st December, 1946. A reply from Messrs. Cockrell, Larpent, and Co., to a letter of inquiry made on this subject, was due by the mail which reached this on the 8th instant.

ABSTRACT.

During the year, thirty-seven widows have been admitted (two of them a second time), whose pensions amount to Rs. 61,180-15-10 a year; and eight have been removed from the list, whose pensions amounted to Rs. 11,630-9-7 a year.

ECONOMY! ECONOMY!

STEPHENS' DYES FOR STAINING WOOD, as a SUBSTITUTE FOR PAINT. For Decorating Churches, Large Public Rooms, and Theatres, as well as Private Dwellings.

When economy in expenditure of material and time is of importance, these Dyes will be found of the greatest advantage, as they give a rich colour to plain woods, while they reflect all the beauty of the natural grain, which is so superior to imitations by art, and, at the same time, avoid the disagreeable smell and deleterious consequences of paint.

The Dyes or stains, are in bottles of 6d. and 1s. each, and at 10s. per gallon. The Oak Colour may be obtained in powder at 8s. per lb., which dissolves in water to form the liquid, and 1lb. will make one gallon of stain.—N.B. The trade supplied.

STEPHENS' CONCENTRATED AND SOLUBLE INK POWDERS, which contain the chief elementary parts, in a dry state, of his various well-known inks or writing fluids, yet so readily soluble in the water, that by putting the contents of a paper packet into a bottle, and adding to it the quantity of water indicated on the directions, it is ready for immediate use. The economy of this article in carriage, from its reduced bulk, may be estimated when it is considered that one part of the powder will make twenty times its weight and bulk of liquid ink.

Samples of the smaller packets can be sent by post to those who may wish to make a trial of them.

All the above prepared and sold by HENRY STEPHENS, Inventor and Proprietor of the Writing Fluids, 54, Stamford-street, Blackfriars-road, London, and by Booksellers and Stationers throughout the Kingdom.

NOTICE.—MR. G. W. WHEATLEY RESUMES the BUSINESS of an EAST INDIA and GENERAL AGENT, at 150, Leadenhall-street, heretofore carried on at 24, Cornhill, under the firm of "Wagborn and Co.," and hopes for the support of all who favoured that firm, of which Mr. Wheatley has for many years been an active member. F. MOURNING.—COURT, FAMILY, and COMPLIMENTARY.

THE PROPRIETOR of the LONDON GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE begs respectfully to remind families whose bereavements compel them to adopt Mourning attire, that every article (of the very best description) requisite for a complete outfit of Mourning may be had at his establishment at a moment's notice. Widow's and Family Mourning is always kept made up, and a note, descriptive of the Mourning required, will ensure every thing necessary for the occasion being sent immediately, either in town or into the country, and on the most reasonable terms. It is also to be observed that, as both milliners and dressmakers are constantly employed in making up articles in craps (at all times difficult), superiority in mode and unusual neatness may be relied on.

The LONDON GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE, 247, 240, and 251, Regent Street, —W. C. JAY, Proprietor.

THRESHER'S INDIA GAUZE WAISTCOATS.

THESE really important articles of under clothing, although manufactured expressly for India, are equally valuable in all tropical climates, and are strongly recommended by all medical men as the most effectual preventative of the many diseases arising from check of perspiration to which the residents in warm climates are so particularly liable. This manufacture possesses all the advantages, without the inconvenience, of flannel waistcoats; the texture is light, soft, and delicate, perfectly free from all irritating or disagreeable qualities, and a very superior absorbent, consequently the very best description of under-waistcoat that can be worn in India, or in any warm climate. The valuable qualities of THRESHER'S INDIA GAUZE WAISTCOATS are well known and have been long tested in India, and the very general approval and consequent demand for them has given rise to many inferior imitations, which, with a view to deceive, have been variously marked India Gauze, Oriental Gauze, Gauze Vigonia, &c. Messrs. THRESHER and GLENNY, therefore, beg most particularly to impress upon all parties the necessity of applying direct to their establishment, 152, STRAND, LONDON, for any they may require, and also most especially to caution the public against purchasing any article of the kind except those which are marked THRESHER'S INDIA GAUZE, as none others can be depended upon.

These waistcoats are made both for ladies and gentlemen, and Messrs. Thresher and Glenn undertake to forward them in dozens or half-dozen to every part of England and the principal towns of Ireland and Scotland, carriage free, at the following prices:—Gentlemen's, 78s. per dozen, and Ladies', 60s. per dozen; and also to pack and forward them, free of expense, to any agent in India, by the overland route, at the following additional rates, viz. 12s. per dozen to Calcutta, Madras, and Ceylon, and 10s. per dozen to Bombay.

OUTFITS TO INDIA, BY SHIP and OVERLAND.

Every particular connected with outfits to India, both for ladies and gentlemen, including detailed lists of requisite clothing, uniforms, &c. &c. for every appointment, with the necessary variations for the outfits of

CIVILIANS, CADETS, ASSISTANT-SURGEONS, &c. together with every information respecting passage by ship and by the overland route, baggage, packing, &c., will be forwarded on application to Messrs. Thresher and Glenn, as above.

TRANSIT THROUGH EGYPT.

From Alexandria to Suez, under direction of the Egyptian Transit Company, only 2 cwt. of baggage is allowed without extra charge, and no package or trunk should exceed 50 lb. weight.

THE REGULATION OVERLAND TRUNKS & CASES.

Manufactured by Thresher and Glenn especially for the TRANSIT THROUGH EGYPT, and for the cabins of the Peninsular and Oriental Company's steam-ships to MALTA, ALEXANDRIA, and INDIA, can only be procured at their East-India Outfit Warehouse, 152, Strand, London.

All communications addressed to Messrs. THRESHER and GLENNY, 152, STRAND, LONDON, will have immediate attention.

S. W. SILVER and CO. CLOTHIERS, NAVAL,

MILITARY, and GENERAL OUTFITTERS and CONTRACTORS, respectfully acquaint the public, that they have completed the alterations at their warehouses, 66 and 67, CORNHILL, which enables them to concentrate and exhibit all the requirements of an OUTFIT. Being the manufacturers (with experienced managers) of the chief and most expensive portions of OUTFITS, they are enabled to produce and render them at WHOLESALE PRICES; thus preventing MILITARY and NAVAL OFFICERS, CADETS, and PASSENGERS generally sacrificing the usual intermediate profit. LADIES' OUTFITS (which are under the management of Females) similar terms.

SILVER and Co. having a correspondent in nearly every ENGLISH COLONY, their customers may at all times avail themselves of their assistance. SILVER and Co. pack and ship their customers' outfits, clear and warehouse their baggage homewards, procure and give SHIP-SAILING information, outwards or homewards, without receiving a commission for such business. Moreover, they do not allow the too usual commission to persons who introduce customers to them, that purchasers may derive every advantage. For example, individuals who are about to leave for India are generally inundated with applications and lists from Outfitters, who obtain the name and address of the party going abroad from persons to whom they pay (if they supply the outfit) so large a commission for the information, as to materially increase the amount of the outfit. Now, SILVER and Co. never forward a list of necessities to any one, unless directed to do so by the party (or friend) going abroad. Thus SILVER and Co.'s prices are not burthened with commission, because all recommendations to apply to them are pure and disinterested.

The OUTFITTING WHOLESALE and RETAIL CLOTHING DEPARTMENTS, &c., are at 66 and 67, CORNHILL, and at LIVERPOOL. The SHIRT DEPARTMENT for home use is at No. 18, CORNHILL. The WORKSHOPS for Clothing, at 41, Bishopsgate-street Within; for SHIRTS and CABIN FURNITURE, at 22 and 24, Nassau-place, Commercial-road; and for SHIRTS, STAYS, BRACES, &c., at LANDPORT, near PORTSMOUTH.

THE HAND-BEDSTEAD FOR CADETS, weight 17 lbs.

BESEMERES and SONS, CLOTHIERS, OUTFITTERS, and Ready-made Linen Warehousemen, invite overland travellers to India to inspect their PORTABLE BEDSTEAD, price 12s. 6d., invented and made only by them. Although so light, it is strong, compact, of full size, and may be used without a mattress; it passes readily into a box 6 inches in diameter, 24 long. Bedstead, bedding, blankets, sheets, quilt, &c., packed in one of their Waterproof Regulation Overland Trunks, weigh under 50 lbs. Overland Trunks, One Guinea each. Lists of Outfit for Cadets and Assistant-Surgeons, estimates and information of every expense of the passage and journey, forwarded by post. Lists of Linen, priced, may also be had.—Outfitting Warehouses, Nos. 61 to 64, Houndsditch, London.

Communications for the Editor, and Advertisements, should be sent under cover to Messrs. Wm. H. Allen & Co., 7, Leadenhall-street.

SUMMARY & REVIEW OF EASTERN NEWS.

ALTHOUGH the excitement caused in India by the failure of the Union Bank is in some degree subsiding, the affairs of that unfortunate institution continue to furnish the chief topic of discussion. Little or no progress, however, seems to be made towards a settlement, and the shareholders are still lying under the dread of being overwhelmed by the operation of the law. The ordinary course of things has, however, been diversified by the unexpected introduction of a curious little episode. A native holder, BABOO AUSHOOTOSH DEY, sold his shares, it is said, in November last, to another native, named KALLIKISSEN GHOSH. The transfer was recognised and recorded at the bank, and the purchaser, it appears, has paid the pro rata contribution on the shares transferred. But the law requires, as a condition of the relief of the party transferring from liability, that a memorial of the change of proprietorship shall, within twelve months, be registered in the Supreme Court. This not having yet been done, BABOO AUSHOOTOSH DEY is still, in the eye of the law, a shareholder in the Bank, and subject to the liabilities of that position. To exonerate himself therefrom, he applied to the Supreme Court for a mandamus, calling on the administrators of the affairs of the Bank to make the requisite registration; but the application was refused, on the ground of the insufficiency of the affidavits by which it was supported. Subsequently the application was renewed on amended affidavits, and a rule nisi granted. So stands the matter at present—the next mail will, it may be expected, apprise us of the result. We find it stated in the Bombay Times that “a complete list of the shareholders has been drawn up, and is about to be published, shewing who have responded to the forced loan and contribution calls, and to what extent they have done so.” It is added that “several shareholders, relying on the Charter Act, propose to resist any proceedings against themselves personally until the affairs of the bank are wound up, its assets realised, and a true statement of its final condition exhibited,”—and that “a large number of those connected with it have retired beyond the reach of the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to await the turn of events.”

Lord FALKLAND arrived at Bombay on the 27th of April. His health appears to have suffered greatly on the voyage. Mr. CLERK returned from the hills on the 30th, and was expected to leave for England early in May. He had declined numerous proffered testimonials to his honour, and seemed to desire quiet rather than any thing beside.

From SCINDE, the intelligence is not on the whole unsatisfactory, but no trace had been obtained of ISLAM KAN.

GOOMSOOR seems, from the following statement, to be rapidly approaching, if it have not attained, a state of order and tranquillity:—

"We have letters from Goomsoor to the 11th April. The campaign in the hills had terminated, and the troops returned to quarters. The heat of the weather was terrific, and a considerable amount of sickness had occurred amongst the field force, which latter, it was hoped, would now quickly disappear. All the Boad Chiefs had tendered their submission, which had been accepted of, on their faithfully promising to abstain in future from the sacrifice of Meriahs. As a proof of the sincerity of their professions, considerably upwards of two hundred of these miserable wretches had been by them delivered up to us, and a few more were looked for. The force had, during the campaign, visited regions on which, probably, the foot of an European had never before trod, and thereby not a little astonished the natives. Many of the friends of Chokra Bisayo had forsaken him, and returned to their homes. The report ran that he himself had gone to meet Colonel Ouseley, to deliver himself up to him—not apparently wishing to fall into the hands of those who had so long been on his track. The whole of the Bisayes of the Valley of Chokapand and Chuld had made the most abject submission to Lieutenant McVicar, who, it was reported, intended proceeding with them to Ruasackondah, where a searching inquiry was to be made into their late conduct towards us. All who had quitted the valley were desirous of returning to their villages; the whole of Chokapand was at peace, and the chief men entirely at our mercy."

We now scarcely think of looking for news from the PUNJAB. The following, from the Delhi Gazette of the 12th of April, seems to give us all that can be furnished.

"A Lahore correspondent repeats the oft repeated tale that there is absolutely no news, but adds that the court-martial on Lieut. Lowther, 52nd regiment N.I. 'for having tarred and feathered a native,' was just over; and that no more were at hand at present.—Mr. John Lawrence and family left for the Jullundur on the 3rd of April.—Mr. P. Vans Agnew, accompanied by Lieut. Anderson, had left for Mooltan. They will have a hot season, and the usual hard work (which we have attempted elsewhere to describe) to encounter, and have no house to get into.—'Parties who can do so are getting away to the hills; and those who can't migrate are making themselves snug for the ensuing campaign against heat, dust, and sand flies.'"

Another correspondent of the same paper; and apparently a very silly one, having indulged himself in sneering at the presumed occupations of the assistants to the Lahore Residency, has been reproved in the following spirited article:

"A correspondent, whose brief communication it is unnecessary to publish, as we give the substance of his lucubration, writes rather angrily regarding the doings of the assistants attached to the Lahore Residency, and looks upon them, as we dare say many others of his way of thinking do on all 'politicals,' as a class of officers very highly paid for doing nothing: he hints that, enthroned in easy chairs, they give audiences under punkahs to dependent princes, and dictate a 'sub acha' diary to a clerk while quietly picking their teeth after breakfast. We can assure our friend that as far as the 'Assistants' to the Lahore Residency are concerned, and indeed most other politicals of the same class, we are pretty sure they do not find it such a jolly lounge as he pretends to, or really does, think. On a fair average we should say, from what we have heard, that each of these 'young gentlemen' considered himself pretty well off with any thing under twelve hours work per diem, and indeed marked that day with a white stone on which he got one meal uninterrupted by 'a reference.' Indeed, the ordinary diet laid down for Anarkallee by Government is a kind of sandwich, consisting of 'a mouthful of ham between two urzaes.' In the provinces it must be even worse; nothing under 'stripping to it' will do. There is one gallant Captain (A.) in Hazara, with a turbulent hill province, and a Sikh army to keep in order; a major and a subaltern (L. and L.) at Peshawur, with half a dozen provinces rolled into one, and a large Sikh force under them, with the consciousness that they are holding the key of the Punjab and of British India; another perspiring six foot subaltern (N.) at Rawal Pindie, settling and administering justice to the whole Sindh Sagur Doab, north of the Salt range; and again, jumping over the Indus (a very pretty leap), our correspondent would find, if he had the heart to look for them, a brace of subalterns in charge of the whole Daman-I-koh, from the Trans Indus Salt range, south of Peshawur, to Dheta Gaze Khan, and about 100 miles of hill frontier, swarming with Afghan tribes, who never yet bowed to king or kaiser. And then again we have two unfortunates packed off at this 'delightful' season of the year to relieve the Governor of Moistan of his charge, and settle his country. Now every one of these, be it remembered, has a body of troops to look after, and is at once general of division, major of brigade, assistant adjutant general, deputy judge-advocate, and all the rest of the staff in his own propria persona. Next he is sessions judge of all the countries under his control, and is all day in kacheroo, hearing appeals. Thirdly, he is revenue settlement officer, and has to remodel the whole revenue of his district, and very likely to collect it afterwards; and, lastly, as is the case with the officers in Hazarah and Bunnoo, he has first to reduce and then to occupy the province consigned to his care; to knock down the forts of the native chiefs, and build up strongholds for the Sikh government. The above is an unexaggerated bill of fare of the duties of a Lahore political assistant, and the great resident's occupation may be best described as 'having to look after all the assistants.' Let our correspondent consider all this, and when the hot winds blow, or rather when they don't, and when tatties burn, let him wait a sigh of compassion to the politicals across the Sutlej. We say nothing of the dangers to which they are unceasingly exposed, and which some of them have incurred. They speak for themselves."

This should operate as a lesson against writing upon subjects not understood.

The NIZAM and his chief minister continue in a most comfortable state of alienation, and it was conjectured that the removal of the latter was not improbable.

BENGAL.

THE UNION BANK.

SUPREME COURT, APRIL 14.

Application for a Mandamus.—MR. LONGUEVILLE CLARKE applied at the rising of the Court for a rule to shew cause why a mandamus should not be issued, directed to the directors of the Union Bank, commanding them to enrol a memorial in the proper office of the Supreme Court, of the transfer of seven Bank shares, which had been the property of Baboo Aushootoss Dey, to Baboo Kallikissen Ghose. It appeared by the affidavit of Aushootoss Dey, that on the 19th of November last, he had sold these shares to Kallikissen for Co. Rs. 300 a-share. Notice of the sale was given to the bank, and the transfer was duly made in the bank book. Subsequently, Aushootoss was called upon to pay Rs. 200 a-share by way of contribution, which he refused to pay, on the ground of his not being a proprietor. Subsequently, the bank applied to Kallikissen, the purchaser, who immediately paid the contribution, and received a receipt in his own name. The bank having been afterwards called upon to enrol in the Supreme Court a memorial of the transfer pursuant to the provisions of Act 23 of 1845—had neglected to do so, or to return an answer to the application. Mr. Clarke submitted that there were three points to be considered. First, that the only objection the bank could urge was, that the transfer was collusive, but from this they were now estopped—for they had not only sanctioned it, but entered it in their own books, and they had no right to keep the public record at variance with their books, of which it ought to be a correct copy. They had, by a subsequent act, acknowledged Kallikissen to be the proprietor of these seven shares, they had demanded from him his contribution on them, they had received it from him, and granted to him in his own name, as such proprietor, their receipt; they could not, therefore, now question his title. The second point was, whether the Court had the power to issue the mandamus. The rule was that the Court would issue a mandamus to enforce a private right withheld by a public officer. Now, the directors and secretary were, under Act 23 of 1845, public officers for certain purposes. The bank could sue or be sued in the secretary's name, without his being rendered personally liable. A copy of the memorial recorded in that court, on the affirmation of a director or the secretary, was evidence for the public of the liability of the shareholders on actions against them. This was a public document, and he whose duty it was to register or enrol it, became for that purpose a public officer, by virtue of the Act which gave the authority and enjoined the duty. In the case of The King v. The Bank of England, 2 Bar. & Ald. 648, the Court refused to compel the bank to disclose their accounts in order to compel a dividend, Abbott, C. J., saying, "that it was an examination only fit for the Court of Chancery"—Holroyd, J., characterizes it "as an exposure of private accounts," and Best, J., stated that it would be making the Court auditors for all trading companies." None of these objections applied to this application, it was not for the purpose of exposing accounts, or compelling any payment, but it was to make that public which the Act intended to make public, and to supply evidence to the public to enable them to sue, in return for the boon to the bank which enabled them to sue in the name of the secretary. Mr. Clarke cited and commented at great length on the cases of The King v. The Mayor and Aldermen of London, 2 T. R. 177; Anonymous, 2 Strange, 686; Middleton's case, 1 Sederfin, 169; The Queen v. The Victoria Park, 1 Queen's Bench Rep. 288. The third point turned on the words of the Act, which required the enrolment to be made within twelve months. This made it imperative to enrol within that time, but it never was intended to enable the directors to refuse to enrol immediately, when called upon to do so by the vendor and purchaser, thereby not only injuring them, but also the public, by withholding the evidence of those who were liable or not liable. This was not supported by the letter of the Act, and was contrary to its spirit, publicity, and the facility of obtaining evidence, being its primary object.

The CHIEF JUSTICE said he would decide on granting or refusing the application to-morrow.

APRIL 15.—THE CHIEF JUSTICE disposed of Mr. Clarke's application for a rule nisi in this case this morning. His lordship said that it did not appear to him that the affidavit upon which the learned counsel based his motion, was sufficient. In a case of so much importance, a much stronger affidavit must be produced to justify a Court in granting even an application for a rule nisi. This was an application on the part of Aushootoss Dey for a writ of mandamus to be issued, directed to the directors and secretary of the Union Bank, commanding them to take the necessary steps towards enrolling a memorial in the Supreme Court of a certain transfer of shares alleged to have been effected on or about the 19th of November last, from Aushootoss Dey to Kallikissen Ghose. The interval between the alleged transfer and the actual suspension of payments by the Union Bank had been so extremely short, that it was in itself a sufficient circumstance to induce one to pause, as suggestive of doubt. The affidavit put in by Mr. Clarke did not say who Kallikissen Ghose was, nor did it disclose that the purchase-money had been paid, or explain the reasons that led to the alleged transfer so shortly before the stoppage of the bank. In the absence of this information, then, and of a denial, moreover, of collusion, or of an intention to evade the liabilities of the bank in the event of an emergency such as that which had actually occurred, it appeared to him that the affidavit was clearly insufficient to justify the granting of a rule nisi. He would say nothing about what his course would have been, had the affidavit been complete. He was not of opinion that, in a proper case, and upon proof of the absence of all improper motives or objects, the remedy now sought for would be denied, where the bank was still going on; but here the writ would be altogether discretionary, and the court should not interfere in respect of a transaction said to have occurred on the very eve of the bank's insolvency, by taking any steps that might operate prejudicially for the creditors. Mr. Clarke had argued that the bank was precluded from urging that the alleged transfer had been effected by collusive means, by having recorded the transfer in its books, which, in his lordship's opinion, it ought not to have done, and by having received the contribution of Rs. 200 upon each share from Baboo Kallikissen Ghose; but it was most clear that the creditors had a vital interest in the question as to who the shareholders of the bank are; and they could not be precluded from advancing any objection by the acts of the bank.

APRIL 19.—MR. CLARKE now applied for a rule nisi for a mandamus on the revised affidavit of Aushootoss Dey, supplying the defects pointed out by the Chief Justice on the former application (see our report of the 15th and 16th instant). The affidavit now stated that the shares were sold on November 19 last, to Kallikissen Ghose, for Rs. 360 each share, for which Kallikissen, who was a man of property, paid the money down. That it was a bond fide transaction and no collusion. That he (Aushootoss Dey) knew by report at the time that the bank was likely to sustain considerable loss from the failure of Cockerell, Larpent and Co. of London; but he did not at the time anticipate or believe that the bank was likely to become insolvent, or unable to meet its liabilities, or that its paid-up capital of a crore of rupees had been lost. That he did believe a large loss had been sustained, and that it would take some years to recover the same, and before any dividends could be paid, and that shares would become unsaleable, and he was therefore desirous of ceasing to belong to the bank, which had been ill-conducted and mismanaged. That the shares were transferred in the bank books and the usual forms observed. That Kallikissen, on February 1st last, as the proprietor of the shares, paid to the secretary of the bank, Mr. Russell, for and on account of the bank, the sum of Co.'s Rs. 2,400, as his contribution due and payable on the shares, whereon Mr. Russell gave Kallikissen a written receipt. And that he, Aushootoss Dey, had served a notice on Mr. Russell to have a memorial of the said transfer registered in the Supreme Court, according to the provisions of Act 23 of 1845, to which no answer had been received. The learned counsel, on the suggestion of the Chief Justice, said that he would also file the affidavit of Kallikissen Ghose, the purchaser.

The CHIEF JUSTICE granted the rule nisi; notices to be served on the directors and secretary of the Union Bank, and on Mr. Richards as president of the creditors' committee.

(From the Friend of India, April 13.)

The public have not forgotten the outcry which was raised against Messrs. Glyn, Halifax and Co., the London bankers, by the directors of the Union Bank, at the meeting which was held in Calcutta on the last day of the last year. Their conduct was represented as disgraceful, and it was asserted that they had rendered themselves liable to an action at law. We stated at the time that these gentlemen had always sustained the highest character in the commercial community in England, and that we must have some stronger evidence than the mere assertion of a Union Bank Director before we could admit the slightest suspicion of their integrity. The Englishman stated, on Tuesday last, that a letter from the firm, dated the 24th of February, had been received in Calcutta by the last mail, in which they asserted that so far from having encouraged these post bills transactions, they had peremptorily refused to negotiate these instruments, or to act as the agents of the Union Bank in disposing of them, although they would have been allowed a commission of one-half per cent. on the sale, and permitted to carry the proceeds to the Union Bank account in their books. They peremptorily deny that they ever were engaged in any such transactions, directly or indirectly. They never had but one transaction of the kind, and on their refusal to act, the bills were handed over, according to the instructions of the secretary, to Messrs. Cockerell and Co. For our part we never had the slightest doubt that all their transactions with the bank, by which they have unfortunately been involved to the extent of 18 lacs of rupees, had been marked by transparent integrity; and a perusal of their correspondence, as given in the Englishman, will impart the same confidence to others, even if they had not previously been enabled to make up their minds, from the disclosures of the last three months, as to the degree of credit which was to be given to any charge of dishonesty which a Union Bank director might bring against another party, to cover his own delinquency.

An advertisement has been published by the present secretary to the Union Bank, stating that a list of the shareholders with a specification of the names of those who have responded in full, of those who have responded in part, and of those who have not responded at all, to the calls made by the committee, will be submitted to the meeting to be held on the 29th instant, and, with the sanction of the meeting, will be published immediately afterwards. That list was ready before the last meeting, and might have been presented to it, and published immediately, and the public would then have been enabled to ascertain in what position the shareholders stood who have wisely availed themselves of the Haddington steamer to quit this scene of confusion and anxiety. A shareholder in the Englishman of Tuesday last declares that he for one will not feel inclined to pay any attention to the calls of the committee, until they publish a detailed schedule of the debts and credits of the bank, and shew that they have honestly and without fear or favour commenced on the realisation of the amounts due to the bank. Other shareholders we know have resolved, as soon as any attempt is made upon their property or their liberty, to bring the question at once before the Supreme Court, whether any shareholder is liable for the debts of the bank under the provisions of the Act before its assets and property have been realised and found inadequate. However reasonable this may appear, it is to be questioned whether it will eventually be for their benefit,—but we shall return to the subject next week.

BENGAL COAL COMPANY.

By a very curious provision in the deeds of the Calcutta Steam Tug Company and the Bengal Coal Company, the secretaryship of the former and the managing directorship of the latter are vested perpetually in the firm of Carr, Tagore, and Co., or in one of the members thereof. This firm being now virtually defunct, it has become a question whether its right to the perpetual management of these companies descends to the firm of Gordon, Stuart, and Co., which has taken up its general business, and two of the three members of which were partners in the privileged house. To judge from letters which have appeared in our columns, some of the shareholders of the Coal Company at least appear inclined to support a reversion of the new firm to a reversion of this charter. But we must say that it does seem proprietors that they should be held bound to leave the management of their funds and business in the hands of men who, to common understandings, would appear to be in no way connected with the favoured firm, except as being responsible for its debts, the debts of a house which has lately been compelled to suspend its payments.

The objections of the shareholders, some of which, as we remarked above, have been recorded in our columns, have attracted the attention of Messrs. Gordon, Stuart, and Co., as may be learnt from an official correspondence which we publish elsewhere. The de facto managing directors of the Coal Company, having fortified themselves with the opinion of distinguished counsel, come forward with a proposal which the directors of the company submit to their fellow shareholders. Three eminent barristers have, it would appear, given it as their opinion—we think the opinion should have been published, however—that Messrs. Gordon, Stuart, and Co. are entitled to the office as the representatives of Carr, Tagore, and Co. Messrs. Gordon, Stuart, and Co. nevertheless agree to waive their supposed legal claim under the deed, provided they are elected to the office by the directors, and confirmed in it by the shareholders at the next annual meeting! That is, if the proprietors will give them an indisputable title to the office, they will waive one that is at least questionable. If not, they will fall back upon the deed and hold their post in defiance of the shareholders, if the law or its interpreters will allow them. In justice to them, however, we must observe that they engage, if elected by the directors and confirmed by the shareholders, to allow an alteration of the deed as to the seemingly unaccountable clauses on which they rely; and consent that at any future time they may be ejected under a vote of want of confidence from a properly convened meeting. On the whole, then, we ought, perhaps, to regard Messrs. Gordon, Stuart, and Co., as very reasonable men in conceding so much to their enforced constituents, since they might, if well assured of the validity of their right, have resolved to keep the office to themselves and their successors for ever.

The Directors have elected them, and declared the next annual meeting, to be held in November next, special, for their confirmation or rejection. This is perhaps the wisest course that could have been adopted under the circumstances. The present management is pronounced safe and satisfactory, and an appeal to law, if unsuccessful, would bind the obnoxious clauses round the neck of the Company for ever; while by acceding to the proposal of Messrs. Gordon, Stuart, and Co., the proprietors will, in a few months, acquire the right of doing what they like with their own. — Hurkaru, April 17.

MISCELLANEOUS.

LOCAL.

ARRIVAL OF SIR DUDLEY HILL.—The salute, of thirteen guns, fired yesterday, was in honour of the landing of Major-General Sir Dudley St. Leger Hill, C. B., who arrived by the Procursor, and not, as stated in this morning's Englishman, to notify the installation of Mr. Drinkwater Bethune as a member of the Supreme Council. The salute of fifteen guns in honour of the events thus referred to was fired this morning, when Mr. Bethune took the oath and his seat. Sir Dudley Hill has arrived to take his tour of duty on the general staff of this Presidency. The gallant officer and his family are, we understand, residing for the present at Spence's hotel. — Hurkaru, April 11.

THE NEW MASTER ATTENDANT.—Captain Thomas, the new Master Attendant, having arrived in the Procursor, took charge of his office yesterday, thereby terminating several officiating appointments. — Ibid.

THE ADDRESS TO THE ARCHDEACON.—The address voted to Dr. Dealtry at the late meeting of the members of the old church congregation and his friends and admirers generally, was presented on Saturday afternoon; but as the intention of making the presentation then was not made generally known, a great number who otherwise might have been present did not attend. In consequence also of proper notice not being publicly given, the address was not so numerously signed as might have been expected from the archdeacon's extensive popularity, but an advertisement in the Exchange Gazette, just a day after the fare, announced yesterday that the "Testimonial," i. e. the address, lies for further signatures in the vestry of the old church. It is intended to forward the address to Dr. Dealtry. — Ibid.

THE ASSIGNEES OF PALMER AND CO.—The Englishman reports progress in the case of Ashootosh Dey and Mr. Larpent. The weakly baboo was some weeks back ordered to pay two lakhs of rupees with interest, as having been one of the assignees of Palmer and Co.'s estate. The money, it will be remembered, was drawn from the Union Bank by Mr. Larpent, and deposited with his own firm of Cockerell and Co., and lost. The Insolvent Court assigned, Mr. Macpherson, has adopted stringent measures against the baboo, and an attachment was the other day issued against both parties, calling upon them to pay the whole amount in four days. Another attachment, it appears, was issued on Thursday, which was set aside yesterday for informality. The baboo immediately paid the money and filed a bill against Mr. Larpent, and applied for a writ ne exeat regno, which was granted. So Mr. Larpent does not go home in the Haddington. — Friend of India, April 13.

ACCIDENT TO MR. FORLONG.—The papers state that Mr. James Forlong, the head manager of the Bengal Indigo Company's factories, has been accidentally wounded by the discharge of a pistol, and that the wound is considered dangerous. — Ibid. [A subsequent paper states that it was believed the accident would not prove fatal.]

FATAL ACCIDENT.—Two young gentlemen, volunteers of the pilot service, met with a watery grave on Saturday last. Mr. volunteer Elphinstone, a son of General Elphinstone, of Cabul, and Mr. Thomas Ryder, a son of Captain Ryder, of the Royal Navy, were proceeding down Garden Reach in a boat, when a sudden gust of wind upset it, and the lascars in the boat was the only person saved. — Ibid.

CLERICAL MOVEMENT.—The Rev. J. H. Pratt, the bishop's chaplain, we learn, takes the archdeacon's duty during his temporary absence, assisted at the Thursday evening services, by the Rev. G. G. Cuthbert, secretary to the Church Missionary Society, who has removed into the building known as the Old Church Rooms. — Ibid.

SIR THOMAS TURTON'S DEFICIENCIES.—We learn that Government has expressed its very decided disapprobation of the mode in which the chief justice proposes to make up the deficiency of 10 lacs of rupees in Sir T. Turton's office, by placing his successor upon half-pay, and appropriating the other half to the widows and orphans. — Ibid.

FORMATION OF A CALCUTTA LLOYDS.—We have before us a circular announcing the establishment of a Calcutta Lloyd's, on the plan of the well-known institution of the same name in London. The rooms are, we understand, to be open from this day in the fine new building at Colvin's Ghat, over the offices of the Peninsular and Oriental Company. The subscriptions are fixed at thirty-two rupees per annum, or six rupees a month. Already the list of subscribers contains the names of most of the principal commercial and many of the nautical men of the place. The proprietors suggest that the subscribers should nominate from among themselves a committee to frame rules for the election of future members and for other matters of detail. The habits and necessities of Calcutta life have in former times been found somewhat opposed to the success of projects partaking of the nature of that now under notice; but we believe that such a change has taken place of late years, such progress has been made towards an assimilation of local usages with those of home, that there is no reason to apprehend failure on this ground. — Hurkaru, April 15.

OPIMUM SALE.—The following is the result of the sixth opium sale of the season held this morning:—

	Chests.	Highest.	Lowest.	Average.	Proceeds.
Behar	1,790	765	750	755 4 8	13,51,975
Benares	775	730	725	726 12 4	5,63,250

The drug is still on the decline, the above exhibiting a fall of about thirty rupees from the average of the preceding sale. — Ibid, April 17.

MESSESS. EWING, AIRD, AND ANDERSON.—An adjudication of insolvency was obtained against the estate of Messrs. Ewing, Aird, and Anderson, on Wednesday last, and a meeting of creditors was convened for the following day, to elect a co-assignee who should administer the estate, which has now gone into the Insolvent Court as a matter of course, in conjunction with the official assignee. A meeting was held according to appointment, and Mr. Kettlewell, of the firm of Messrs. Leach, Kettlewell, and Co. was nominated visd voce. — Ibid, April 22.

MOFUSSIL.

ALLAHABAD.—April 6.—Arrival of Col. Benson.—Colonel Benson has arrived here from Cawnpore. The precise nature of his mission appears to be unknown; but he is reported to have a roving commission for 'going to and fro on the earth, seeking' for abuses in the executive department. And if many-tongued rumour happen for once not to lie, two or three courts of enquiry (the result of his inquiries) are about to be held on as many executive officers in upper or middle India. His encampment, which is a large one, stands near the hotel (some three or four miles hence), at which he is himself residing—but his business lies in cantonments, and one would imagine that he would find it more convenient to be 'nearer to his work.'

Mr. Scarlett and Major Butt.—Apron des botes, a Mr. Scarlett, a shop-keeper of this place, is about to start by dak for Calcutta, at the expense of Government. This is the person who disclosed certain facts which formed the basis of the recent proceedings against the late Major Butt of the engineers—and it is said that he does not communicate his varied and valuable information, without a good deal of what old Trapbois calls 'consideration.'—Hurkaru, April 12.

Mhow.—Accident to Captain Herbert.—We regret much to learn that another serious accident happened in the early part of the month to a sportsman while out shooting. Captain Herbert, one of the 9th Light Cavalry, stationed at Mhow, went out into the district with the intention of shooting a bear of whom he had received intelligence. The beast was wounded, but not mortally; he turned upon his pursuer, attacked him with fury, and tore his leg and arm in such a frightful manner, that his recovery was at one time considered very doubtful. Captain Herbert is now, we believe, out of danger, but fears are still entertained of his recovering the use of his wounded limbs.—Delhi Gaz., April 18.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDER.

STORES AND EQUIPMENTS.

Head Quarters, Simla, April 6, 1848.—On several late occasions the judgment of regimental and station committees on stores and equipments tendered to regiments for acceptance, have been directly reversed by special committees, a circumstance which shows the necessity that some uniform system should be prescribed to check the inconvenience which such conflicting opinions involve; his Exc. the Rt. Hon. the Commander-in-Chief, with the sanction of the Right Hon. the Governor-General of India in Council, has therefore been pleased to resolve, that musters (bearing the seal of the military board) of the principal articles of regimental equipment, which are furnished under the authority of the board, shall be kept by regimental quarter-master, and in future it is to be considered a rule, that the opinion of committees are to be limited to a comparison of the articles tendered, with these musters.

As this is the test by which magazine officers are required to receive all stores, the standard and comparison for receipt and issue will thus be uniform.

The military board is requested to cause muster patterns of the principal regimental equipments, as above specified, to be furnished to quarter-masters of corps, to enable the above arrangements to be carried into effect at an early date.

COURT MARTIAL.

CAPTAIN EDWARD STOKES SCOTT WARING, 6th L.C.

Head Quarters, Simla, March 27, 1848.—At a general court martial, assembled at Lahore, March 3, 1848, Capt. E. S. S. Waring, 6th L.C., was arraigned on the following charge:

For disgraceful conduct, in the following instances:

1st. In having, at Meerut, on or about November 3, 1845, obtained the accommodation of the indorsement of Messrs. W. R. Ford and Co., merchants of Meerut, to a promissory note, payable at four months after the date thereof, for Rs. 450, to enable him to obtain a loan from the North-Western Bank of India, and on which he did obtain such loan, and in having, by his failure to pay the amount of the said promissory note when it became due, and subsequently rendered it necessary for Messrs. Ford and Co. to pay the amount with interest, and which sum has been owing to Messrs. Ford and Co. from May 4, 1847, and is still due; he, Capt. Waring, having in letters to Messrs. Ford and Co., written between May 9, and November 15, 1847, repeatedly pledged himself to an early payment, and having broken his promise throughout.

2d. In having, in a letter to the said Messrs. Ford and Co., dated June 9, 1847, falsely stated that he had written to his agents, Messrs. Cockerell and Co., to pay to the agent of Messrs. Ford and Co., in Calcutta, the sum of Rs. 500, and deceitfully desired Messrs. Ford and Co. to direct their agent accordingly to apply for the money.

3d. In having, in a letter to the said Messrs. Ford and Co., dated June 20, 1847, falsely asserted that his not having heard from the agent of the bank at Lahore, was the cause of his not sending them a draft for his debt to them, and in having, under pretence of payment, transmitted to Messrs. Ford and Co. with the said letter, and bearing the same date, an order for Rs. 500, payable at 30 days' sight, but of no value, because not drawn on any person.

4th. In having, at Ferozepore, on or about July 3, 1847, drawn a bill of exchange for Rs. 515, and payable at 30 days after sight, upon Messrs. Cockerell and Co., merchants of Calcutta, in favour of the said Messrs. Ford and Co. or order, and in having fraudulently tendered the same to them in pay of his debt to them; he, Captain Waring, well knowing that the said bill of exchange would not be honoured by Messrs. Cockerell and Co.

5th. In having, at Nakodah, on or about October 28, 1847, drawn a bill of exchange for Rs. 500, and payable at two months after date, on Bridj Lall, Commissariat Gomastah at Ferozepore, in favour of the said Messrs. Ford and Co., and fraudulently tendered the same to them in part payment of his debt, and in having falsely stated to them, in a letter of the same date, that Bridj Lall had promised to pay the amount; he, Captain Waring, having had no authority to draw the said bill of exchange upon Bridj Lall, nor having had any sufficient reason to expect that it would be accepted and duly honoured by Bridj Lall.

6th. In having, on or about June 30, 1847, induced Lieut. T. E. B. Lees, 43rd N.L.I.R., and cornet J. Theobald, 6th L.C., to endorse a promissory note for Rs. 500, dated June 20, 1847, payable in 3 months after date, to enable him to obtain a loan from the Simla and Umballah Bank, through the Lahore agent of that bank, which loan he accordingly obtained, and in having taken no sufficient measures to pay the same, and by his failure to pay the amount of the said promissory note when it became due, and subsequently, having rendered it necessary for Lieutenant Lees and cornet Theobald to pay the amount with interest.

7th. In having, at Ferozepore, on or about September 18, 1847, drawn a bill of exchange for Rs. 1,000, and payable at thirty days after sight thereof, on P. L. Trench, Esq., B.C.S., at Ghazee-pore, in favour of Mr. J. O. B. Tandy, Lahore agent to the North Western Bank, or order, and in having fraudulently attempted to get the same discounted by Mr. Tandy, he, Captain Waring, having had no authority to draw the said bill of exchange upon Mr. Trench, nor having had any sufficient reason to expect that it would be accepted and duly honoured by Mr. Trench.

8th. In having, at Nakodah, on or about October 28, 1847, drawn a bill of exchange for Rs. 1,100, and payable at two months after date, on Bridj Lall, commissariat gomastah at Ferozepore, in favour of Mr. E. Hughes, or order; and in having fraudulently tendered the same to Mr. Hughes, as Ferozepore correspondent of the Lahore agent to the North-western Bank, in payment of his debt to the bank, he, Captain Waring, having had no authority to draw the said bill of exchange upon Bridj Lall, nor having had any sufficient reason to expect that it would be accepted and duly honoured by Bridj Lall.

9th. In having, at Lahore, on or about November 17, 1847, given to Mr. J. O. B. Tandy, Lahore agent of the North-western Bank, in payment of his, Captain Waring's, debt to the bank, an order on the deputy pay-master at Lahore for Rs. 1,200, by instalments of Rs. 200 a month, to be deducted from his, Captain Waring's, pay, he, Captain Waring, well knowing that the said instalments could not be paid under that order, in consequence of his having previously obtained leave of absence, from November 15, 1847, to proceed to the presidency, and apply for furlough to Europe; that order having been given to deceive Mr. Tandy, and to induce him to withhold proceedings for the recovery of the debt due by him, Captain Waring, to the said bank.

10th. In having, at Ferozepore, on or about September 30, 1847, dishonourably given a bond to Bridj Lall, commissariat gomastah at Ferozepore, for the repayment of ten thousand one hundred and forty rupees, with interest by instalments of four hundred rupees each month, which bond contained a condition in the following words; viz. "in failure of which said instalments, the whole amount, with interest, to be payable on demand from my commission. I further bind myself, and authorize my brother officers to sell out my commission, and whatever they think just to pay for my commission as a captain in the honourable East-India Company's service, the whole amount, with interest, to be payable from the said commission on demand," he, Captain Waring, well knowing that the said condition was deceitful and could not be fulfilled, and thus fraudulently and falsely inducing the said Bridj Lall to believe that the said bond contained valid security for the said sum with interest.

11th. In having, at Ferozepore, on or about October 21, 1847, fraudulently endeavoured to persuade Bridj Lall, commissariat gomastah at Ferozepore, to allow him, Captain Waring, to draw on him, Bridj Lall, in favour of the Lahore agent of the North Western Bank, for the sum of eleven hundred rupees, due by him, Captain Waring, to that bank, by the assurance that he, Bridj Lall, would receive a sufficient sum by instalments, from the deputy pay-master at Lahore, in part of the amount specified in the bond referred to in the 10th instance, before he, Bridj Lall, would be required to pay any money to the said bank, he, Captain Waring, well knowing that there was no probability of the said instalments being continued to be paid by the said deputy pay-master, in consequence of his, Captain Waring's, being about to submit an application for leave, from the 16th of November, 1847, to proceed to the presidency, and apply for furlough to Europe; which leave he applied for on the 28th of October, 1847, and obtained accordingly.

12th. In having, in a letter dated November 17, 1847, dishonourably, and without the consent of the said Bridj Lall, requested the deputy paymaster at Lahore to suspend payment of an order presented by Rada Kissen, the agent or representative of the said Bridj Lall, beyond Rs. 200 a month; and in having, in a letter written on the 2nd January, 1848, at Lahore (dated by mistake 2nd January, 1847), dishonourably requested the deputy paymaster at Lahore not to deduct any portion of his pay for December on account of Rada Kissen, the agent or representative of the said Bridj Lall, notwithstanding that he had bound himself in the bond alluded to in the tenth instance, to pay Rs. 400 per mensem to Bridj Lall, in payment of his debt to him, and had given the said Rada Kissen an order for regular monthly instalments of Rs. 400, which order had been registered in the pay-office, Lahore, on the 8rd of November, 1847.

13th. In having, at Nakodah, on the 30th October, 1847, made application for leave to proceed to the presidency, and apply for furlough to Europe, on private affairs, which was accordingly granted to him in General Orders, dated 6th November, 1847; he well knowing that the grant of the said leave and furlough would interfere with the settlement of the debt due to the said Bridj Lall, to whom he had given the bond above-mentioned, and an order on his monthly pay and allowances, and of the debts due to the North-Western Bank, and to Messrs. Ford and Co., of Meerut, as above-mentioned.

14th. In having, on or about the 6th of November, 1847, at Sultanpore, in the territory of the sirdar of Akowalla, when proceeding with remount horses from Nakodah to Lahore, obtained supplies of lambs, fuel, and fodder from the villagers of Sultanpore and servants of the sirdars, and in having marched from the place without paying for the said supplies.

15th. In having, at the time and place last specified, taken ten sheep from a butcher or butchers of Sultanpore, against his or their consent, and in having marched from the place without having paid for the said sheep.

Finding.—The Court, from the evidence before it, is of opinion, that prisoner Captain Edward Stokes Scott Waring, of the 6th regiment of light cavalry, is of the 1st Instance of the charge, guilty, with the exception of the words "and is still due," but the Court finds that the money was due up to January 31, 1848, the date of the charge.

2nd Instance, not guilty, and accordingly acquits him of the same.

3rd Instance, not guilty, and accordingly acquits him of the same.

4th Instance, guilty.

5th Instance, guilty.

6th Instance, guilty, with the exception of the words "having rendered," but the Court, in their stead, finds the word "rendering."

7th Instance, guilty.

8th Instance, guilty.

9th Instance, guilty.

10th Instance, guilty.

11th Instance, not guilty, and the Court accordingly acquits him of the same.

12th Instance, guilty.

13th Instance, guilty.

And the Court also finds the prisoner guilty of disgraceful conduct in connection with the guilty above found.

14th Instance, guilty.

15th Instance, guilty, with the exception of the words "against his or their consent," of which it acquits him.

But the Court finds that the prisoner was not guilty of disgraceful conduct in the last two instances, of which it acquits him; but of highly unbecoming conduct, inasmuch that he neglected to see that the supplies and sheep were paid for.

Sentence.—The Court having found the prisoner guilty to the extent above specified, sentences him, the said Captain Edward Stokes Scott Waring, of the 6th regiment of light cavalry, to be cashiered.

Approved and confirmed,

(Signed) Gough, Gen. Com.-in-Chief.

Head Quarters, Simla, March 22, 1847.

The name of Captain E. S. S. Waring will cease to be borne on the returns of the 6th regiment of light cavalry from the date on which this order may be published at Nakodah, of which a report is to be made to the adjutant-general of the army, and to the assistant adjutant-general at the Presidency.

MARKETS.

The Express portion of the London mail of the 24th February arrived on the evening of the 6th instant, followed by the Precursor steamer with the bulk of the mail on the 9th, and the Express, with London news to the 7th ultimo, came to hand on the 17th, and a portion of the mail on the 18th instant. The intelligence received by those opportunities is full of commercial and political interest. The progress of commercial improvement in England continued. Money remained abundant, but was procurable, as before, only on undecidable security. Political causes had thrown consols down to 82, from which point there was a decided upward tendency; and when the mail left they were at 83, holders looking for higher prices. Grains of all kinds were abundant and cheap; and, with a fair harvest, the returning prosperity of the country would not be retarded, at least by a scarcity of food. The indigo sale had passed off with spirit at an advance of 6d. to 9d. on October rates, and the market had since maintained a firm appearance. Sugar had fallen 1s. per cwt. and rice had also given way to the same extent. Saltpetre was in large speculative demand, and had advanced 2 to 4 shillings per cwt. The alarm created by political events on the continent had, however, unhappily the effect of causing much embarrassment and anxiety in the export business of the country; and shipments have been generally suspended until further accounts could be received from parties who had given orders, and from intended consignees.

In our Export market we have to report a continuation of the good demand which existed for Indigo. Immediately after advices of the February sale had been received, several transactions by private contract took place at an advance of 5 to 10 Rs. per maund, which, however, was not maintained at the subsequent public sales, which went off at previous rates. The demand for Sugar slackened latterly, and purchasers can procure the article on easier terms. The new crop has not yet come into market. A brisk demand has risen for Saltpetre, consequent on the news of political occurrences in Europe. Rice, for the English market, continues under total neglect. Silk is wanted, but the market remains bare of stock; and silk piece goods have attracted less attention. The news of the unsettled state in which the mail left the market at home has had a depressing influence upon shippers here.

Government have corrected an oversight in Act 6 of 1848, by which goods from the free ports of the Straits of Malacca, Tenasserim, and the Province of Arracan, were exempted from the payment of duty. Act 7 of 1848 enacts that the exemption in Act 6 shall not apply to those ports; and, further, that no drawback shall be allowed on the re-export of goods where duty has not been charged.

The improved feeling and steadiness noticed in our last report as prevailing for Manchester Goods has continued. The market was closed on the 14th, 15th, and 16th, in consequence of the Churruck Porja holidays. It re-opened on the 17th with much cheerfulness and animation, and a good deal of business has since been done in staple fabrics, in some instances at advanced rates. Mule Twist is firmer, and Metals are generally looking up.

There is no change to note in the aspect of the Money Market, nor have Government securities undergone any material fluctuation since the date of our last report.

BOMBAY.

RAGHOOJEE BANGRIAH.

We displace some other matter this morning in order to make room for the long and interesting report of the trial of the redoubtable freebooter, Raghoojee Bangriah, which appears in another part of our paper. It will be seen that the offence for which the culprit was arraigned was committed so far back as September, 1844, and consisted in an attack made by his gang on a small party of Police sepoy, eight of whom fell during the affray. The evidence relates that this party, eleven in number, started, on the 14th of September, from a place called Oundha, in the Poonah Zillah, with orders to proceed to Bheemashunker, and pursue the Bund-wallahs, who had made their appearance at that place, and attacked the ryots, with the view of seizing money and provisions. Besides the eleven sepoy, there were a couple of guides, and a boy, the son of one of the party. On arriving at their destination, they obtained information—but from whom is not stated—that the marauders of whom they were in quest had taken their departure from the neighbourhood, and gone down the ghats into the Concan. They then decided on returning to Oundha, and commenced their march accordingly. After traversing about six miles of ground, they came to the jungle of Ranmulla, where there was a stream to cross, and the weather being wet and cloudy, they proceeded cautiously along. Not long after fording the river, one of their number, who had stepped aside, gave an alarm; and proof was soon afforded that they had got amongst a band of depredators, more numerous and formidable than the gang they had expected to meet at Bheemashunker. It appears the robbers were some ninety in number, and armed with swords and shields, bows and arrows, spears, matchlocks, sticks, slings for throwing stones, &c. They had also horns, which were blown as signals when needful. On meeting them, the sepoy were told to lay down their arms, which they refused to do, but, on endeavouring to fire their muskets, found they would not go off. Whether this was owing to the rain, or to some foul play or other, it is difficult to say. The robbers took advantage of the circumstance, and fiercely assailed their opponents, eight of whom speedily bit the dust. Raghoojee Bhangriah, with his sword and shield, and a cloth about his head, seems to have been foremost in the fray; and one of the witnesses describes him as having aimed a blow at him, which, on his leaping aside to avoid it, descended and cut off the hand of another man. Of the three sepoy who escaped, one was spared because of the presence of the little boy his son, whose helpless state the marauders seem to have commiserated. Another heard the order given that he should be deprived of his nose, ears, and hands; but this mutilation was countermanded in consequence of his being the friend of the above favoured individual. On their departure, about four hours after the commencement of this conflict, the leader said to him: "Tell your sahib my name is Raghoojee Bangriah. I have five hundred men at my call. It is of no use sending poor native troops against me. Let Europeans come, and if I am a true Bangriah, I will hang their heads and hats to the trees in the jungle!" Raghoojee appears to have been at this time a mere youth: he was short, thin, of dark complexion, and seemingly about 22 years of age. On the termination of the conflict, the robbers cut the throats of the eight men who had fallen, and threw their bodies into the river.

The witnesses on the trial clearly identified Raghoojee, though at the lapse of upwards of three years and a-half; and their evidence as to the circumstances of the outrage tallied in all material respects; so that there could be no doubt of the guilt of the prisoner. His defence was, that he was not present on the occasion of the fight in September, 1844, and that the witnesses were induced by animosity to swear so positively against him. We are informed that he would have engaged some one to conduct his case from the commencement, had it not been for the reluctance exhibited by the vakeels of the court to defend a criminal against whom a prosecution had been instituted by Government. The Parson called in at his request towards the conclusion of the trial, and who declined to act without making sure of his fee, had, it appears, no authority to practise as vakeel, but was in the habit of defending prisoners in the "court below." Raghoojee has been condemned to death; and the result of the proceedings has given great joy to the natives; but his sentence will, of course, have to be confirmed by the Sudder Court and by Government before the last penalty of the law is inflicted upon him. Our reporter tells us that there are several members of Raghoojee's gang in Tannah jail—some under sentence, and some waiting to be tried—together with the patell of a village, who gave Lieutenant Gell the information of Raghoojee's pilgrimage to Punderpore, and who is to be tried on a charge of having for some time connived at the acts of the outlaws.

The story current among the natives as to the causes which induced Raghoojee to take to "the road"—or, more correctly, the jungle—is curious enough to deserve mention. The freebooter's father was a village functionary, and having engaged in some evil practices, a man named Amrutrao interfered and got him punished. Raghoojee likewise committed a robbery, and, at the instance of the same Amrutrao, was captured and incarcerated. Bolder than his sire, however, he succeeded in effecting his escape, and roamed the country for his living. Amrutrao, who had succeeded the elder Bangriah as Jemadar, reported him to the authorities as a more than ordinarily dangerous character, and obtained special powers for his capture. Thus armed, he is alleged to have gone to Raghoojee's mother, and to have used violence towards her, in order to extort information as to the "whereabouts" of her son. Hearing of the outrage, the young robber swore a deep oath of vengeance; and, not long afterwards, some of his gang fell upon Amrutrao and cut him to pieces! This happened about two years ago; and several of the parties concerned were, we understand, convicted and hanged for the offence. But the most curious part of the story is to come. The vow which Raghoojee had "registered in Heaven," and the fulfilment of which was to be contingent upon the death of his enemy, was that he would perform a pilgrimage to Punderpore, and there "shave off his beard." Circumstances delayed the performance of this duty, and it was not until the time when Mr. Gell set out in pursuit of him that he could get an opportunity of carrying his intention into effect. The result is well known. The pilgrimage was fatal to Raghoojee. But the natives say that his fall was brought about entirely by an unfortunate event—the death of Dewjee Mahar, whose name is mentioned in our report, and who, it is averred, was his astrologer, and in the habit of foretelling the events of his career, and warning him against any danger that clouded his prospects! This man is believed to have fallen in some affray subsequent to the disturbance of 1844, and many persons do not hesitate to declare that had he lived, the famous freebooter of the Mahratta country would still have borne a "charmed life," and been able to defy alike the valour and the sagacity of his enemies.

We do not, of course, vouch for the accuracy of all this. We "tell the tale as 'twas told to us;"—and a native was the chronicler.

Since writing the above, we have been supplied with the annexed statement, affording some further and more authentic particulars connected with the murder of Amrutrao, and other passages in the career of Raghoojee Bangriah.

Memorandum.—Padoo Nirmal and Bhavoo Keng were both convicted of murdering Amrutrao, Jemadar of the Ghant police, in the Koncan Zilla, before Mr. Tarrant, late acting judge of Tannah, who tried them in the capacity of special commissioner, under an authority from Government. They were hanged about two years ago at Dolekham, in the northern Koncan, just at the same spot where Amrutrao was murdered. The murderers were associates of Raghoojee, who commissioned them to commit the crime, because he apprehended Raghoojee with 63 other men, for having committed a gang robbery in the Koncan Zilla. Raghoojee, on this occasion, was placed in a chowkee of the village of Rajooras, with hand fetters connecting two prisoners together. He and the other prisoner connected with him made their escape and fled; but that prisoner was shortly afterwards apprehended. It is said that Amrutrao Harree, in order to discover the articles stolen by Raghoojee, went to his house and insulted and ill-treated his mother. This increased the recklessness of Raghoojee, who afterwards determined to shed the blood of Amrutrao. Raghoojee's father, in consequence of the exertions of Amrutrao, had been transported as a felon for life, for certain atrocious deeds he was convicted of having perpetrated. Two of the associates of Raghoojee, in the case of murder at Ranmulla, have been apprehended, and tried before Mr. Warden and Mr. Brown, who held commissions from Government on two different occasions to try those prisoners. They were both accordingly tried, convicted, and hanged, in 1845 and 1847 respectively. The first prisoner confessed, in the course of his trial, that he was Raghoojee's associate, and that Raghoojee was his leader, and slew four or five men with his own hands. Both these men have been executed at Poona, and several others have been at different times apprehended, of whom a few were hanged, and others transported, and imprisoned for life, and for certain terms of years, as the nature of their offences warranted.

Raghoojee had, about two years ago, written two letters to Government, and to Mr. Keays, the session judge of Tannah, stating that if his father's situation, which had been given to Amrutrao, were conferred on him, by discharging that person from his office, he would be able to suppress the Bund.

Dewjee Mahar was shot by the police sepoy of the police corps in the Poonah district.—Telegraph and Courier, April 17.

CALCUTTA COMMERCIAL MORALITY.

We have not yet had the good fortune to receive the last number of the Calcutta Review, which contains, we observe, an article on Calcutta commercial morality, which appears with peculiar propriety at the present time, when so small a measure of the commodity referred to can be produced even as a sample in the market. The reviewer clearly states the manner in which visionary firms come into existence, and how men of straw gain credit with the money-lender. The gentlemen adventurers who go in quest of a profession, and require to raise ready cash to begin the world with, seem not to give themselves the slightest concern how it shall ever be repaid by them; if they can find men foolish enough to give a security, or make a first advance, then all is right for many a day to come. Bills are drawn to meet bills—goods are made to represent ten times their value—and there seems really nothing substantial about the whole concern but the villany and extravagance of those who share in it. The grand object of the ambition of the swindlers appears a singular one: for a few years to keep a racing stud, expensive carriages, and make a figure in colonial society, seem the terms on which they are willing to sell themselves, and earn a reputation of which Newgate would not envy them. To attain riches, honours, and eminent position, great crimes are committed and hazards incurred. We had not supposed that the chance of a some half-score years of celebrity in the commercial capital of Bengal would have been temptation enough for almost any man to have suffered himself to be enrolled in the list of contemptible swindlers who have cheated others for the most pitiful ends, in the full assurance that they would themselves be cheated of the very ends they had in view. The Union Bank plunderers and their confederates were playing against such fearful odds that nothing short of a miracle could have saved them in the long run from exposure. One of the earliest proceedings on the part of the partners of a Calcutta firm trading on nothing; has been, it seems, to obtain a splendid mansion and an extravagant establishment of carriages, horses, servants, and furniture, and to indulge in personal or domestic expenses scarcely justifiable in men of ordinary fortune. The whole of what were the retinues, and might have been converted into the profits or capital of the concern, were thus given to the winds at once, and the household calls supplied by fresh acts of fraud and dishonesty. But even this variety of recklessness, by which a low-bred personal vanity for a time was soothed, was not sufficient. The carelessness and extravagance with which Indigo establishments were managed, was sufficient to have brought ruin on the wealthiest capitalists. There seems to have been no desire to restrict themselves to the smallest possible amount of roguery—no wish expressed to avoid taxing the purse of their creditors more extensively than was essential. There was not attempt at management, either without or within doors: if the masters swindled and squandered, so did their men. Managers of indigo factories occasionally hoarded or spent many times the amount of their nominal incomes. To give the original accommodation a chance of fructifying by thrift or management, seems never to have been thought of. To try to pay up the capital that had been originally advanced, and then realise the fruits of industry for future use, was out of the question. The first thing was to make a dash—let those care about the means who came hindmost. While the prevailing villany, and general destitution of principle, and disregard of character and appearance, through which alone such things as these could have come to pass, astonish us, we must confess ourselves almost equally amazed at the monstrous gullibility by which vulgar and dishonest spendthrifts came to be provided with the means of indulgence. A very small amount of information ought to have been sufficient to satisfy any one that the personal expenses indulged in by the commercial fashionables of Calcutta could not be supplied by the honestly-reaped fruits of commerce,—that no honest man could have lived as many of them appear to have done,—and that the style they aspired to must have been as much beyond their means as it was uncalled for by their position. If the members of the bank, rapacious houses, who prided themselves on being "the most dashing" men in Calcutta society, could live on the returns of their transactions, those who with transactions equally extensive and profitable, and a very different style of ambition, pumped the ozen heater of their way without attempting to ape their betters, must have realised fortunes in a marvellously short period of time. But this was notoriously not the case; and the conclusion flowing from the fact was inevitable—that the "dash" was cut at other men's expense. The impudence and the extent of these transactions is perhaps the most marvellous of the whole. The climax of both was the issuing of half a million of post-bills after it was known that the Union Bank was ruined, and those for whose sake the bills were issued ought to have been in the bankrupt list: it must, at the time, have been foreseen that by this stupendous swindle the evil day could not be postponed for eighteen months under the most suspicious circumstances, and that for this much of a reprieve—this much of an extension of indulgence—hundreds of the confiding, who had already been systematically plundered, must be literally reduced to beggary. The reviewer seems chiefly to deal with those who have actually shared in the frauds referred to; but for every actual participant in crime there must have been some half-dozen who knew of what was in hand, and yet gave no warning—afforded no evidence of the antipathy which every honest man ought to have felt towards the dishonest. The wonderful amount of blindness and forbearance shewn the rogues, so long as they remained unbranded—though, assuredly, not unsuspected or undetected, is even a worse symptom of the state of public morals in the commercial capital than the number of downright swindlers proved to exist in it. Had the fashionable scoundrels been shunned so soon as they became suspected, the object of becoming scoundrels would have been frustrated, seeing this was the certain method of making them unfashionable. As places in society are assigned by its heads, it appears to us that on all such things as these a large amount of responsibility devolves on our rulers: the frequent and severe scrutiny of a Government-house invitation-list would accomplish an incredible amount of good—where "moving in the best society" coarsens on the worthless so much power in doing mischief. Even in the lesser presidencies, how often does one meet at Government-house with women who might feel gratified by being suffered to hide their shame in the penitentiary—men for whom the house of correction were a more fitting place than where they are found to be received with acceptance!—Times, April 22.

MISCELLANEOUS.
LOCAL.

COMMODORE IN THE PERSIAN GULF.—Captain T. G. Carleton, I. N., has been appointed commodore in the Persian Gulf, under Captain Hawkins, and will proceed shortly in the sloop Epiphron, to take up his command. The Epiphron returns, we believe, immediately to Bombay with Commodore Hawkins, and it is expected she will bring down with her a large quantity of the Nimroud Marbles, collected at Bussora, for transmission home to the British Museum. Those sent to England by the Janna were a portion of the same collection, and were brought to Bombay by the Epiphron in February last.—Times, April 22.

SUPERINTENDENT OF PENSIONS.—The Gazette of Thursday announces the appointment of S. V. W. Hart, of the 2nd Grenadiers, as superintendent of pensions and family payments, in room of the late Major Rowley.—Captain H. Barr carrying on the duties of the office till Captain Hart's arrival; and that of Lieutenant E. D. Marston, 25th N.I., to be barrack-master, vice Captain Parr, who has succeeded Major Willoughby in the Fort-Adjutancy. Lieut. Gell, we believe, succeeds Lieut. Marston as superintendent of police at Kurrachee; and Lieut. Walker, of the Marine battalion, takes the place of Lieut. Gell as Adjutant of the Ghaut Locals. The same Gazette also announces a change in the designation of the Ghaut Light Infantry, which is hereafter to be called by the more appropriate name of the "Ghaut Local Infantry."—Ibid.

RETIREMENT OF COL. HAGART.—A vacancy has just occurred in the adjutant-generalship of the Bombay army by the retirement from the service of Lieutenant-colonel Charles Hagart, which is to take effect from the 1st May next. As a matter of course, we presume, Lieutenant-colonel Hancock, deputy adjutant-general, will succeed Colonel Hagart, Major T. Donnan taking Colonel Hancock's place as deputy, in which situation he has been acting since the departure of Colonel Hagart, on sick leave, to the Neigherries.—Ibid.

SCINDS SALT.—We have just received some very beautiful specimens of this mineral in a form we were not prepared for. One of them is a cubiform crystal nearly two inches each way almost as transparent as glass, affording a beautiful play of colours by refraction. Another is a snow-white stalactite, purer than Paris marble, without any lustre whatever; the third, an elegantly carved dish, exactly like highly crystallised marble or alabaster. They are all singularly beautiful, and the donors of them has our most grateful thanks for the contribution.—Ibid, April 26.

DR. WOOLMAN.—We observe Assistant-Surgeon Woolman, of the Bombay service, gazetted as Private Secretary to the Governor of Madras. This gentleman's history in connection with the service is so singular, that we hope we may be permitted to allude to it without any material breach of the rule which forbids the journalist from meddling with the affairs of private life. Dr. Woolman left England for India in February 1844. On his way out, overland, he was distressed from his intense tips of proceeding direct to Bombay, by the offer of an appointment in a passenger ship on its way from Suez to India. He was in part induced to accept of this by the delay it allowed him in Egypt, so as to enable him to visit Thebes. Thither he proceeded in April, in company with Mr. R. Gordon, Artillery Cadet, who was cut off by small-pox on the Nile. On his way down Mr. Woosnam was detained at Aden, where sickness was prevalent, and there was a deficiency of medical men. He arrived at Bombay on board the Julius Caesar in June, in charge of sepoy's suffering from Aden boils, and through his means was government induced to make such arrangements as to exempt sick sepoy's from the suffering to which until then they had occasionally been exposed on landing. He was some ten months in Bombay, during which time he had the good fortune almost always to hold some acting staff appointment or another. In July, 1841, Sir H. Pottinger arrived here on his way to China, and desired to have a medical man assigned to him: the party intended was not at the presidency, and Mr. Woosnam was sent in his stead. He was a man of good talents, excellent acquirements and much skill in his profession; and his good sense, good temper, and agreeable manners, were considered to qualify him well for the task assigned to him. Not long after his arrival in China he was advanced to the post of Private Secretary, and so well performed his duties in this position that Sir Henry Pottinger secured the continuance of his assistance on his return to England in 1844, whither Mr. Woosnam accompanied him with the view of arranging and closing the vast mass of documents which the plenipotentiary was unable to have perfected in China. He accompanied Sir H. Pottinger from England to the Cape, where he filled his former office, and is now private secretary to the Governor at Madras. We may, we think, congratulate our Madras friends in having in Dr. Woosnam so accessible and pleasant a means of access to their ruler—and a man as likely to use the knowledge and influence he possesses for praiseworthy ends as need be desired.—Ibid.

EXAMINATION AT THE ELPHINSTONE INSTITUTION.—The examination of the pupils of the Elphinstone Institution was held yesterday in the committee room of the institution at a quarter past eleven o'clock. A considerable number of gentlemen were present to witness the presentation of prizes. Sir Erskine Perry, Knight, occupied the chair. Mr. Harkness proceeded to read the report. It embodied numerous items of interest, but we regret our not being able to furnish our readers with even an outline of it, there being no accommodation prepared for the reporters. The report on the whole was a very favourable one. The students were very highly spoken of. There are at present in the institution about eight hundred and fifty-nine pupils, all very promising young men and youths. Mr. Harkness, on concluding his report, called each boy in his turn to receive his prize, which was presented by Sir Erskine Perry. About seventy students received books as rewards for proficiency in different studies in the English and vernacular languages. The prizes being distributed, Sir Erskine Perry rose and addressed the gentlemen present at some length, and concluded by addressing the young men who had received the rewards, on the beneficial results which accrue from an early and close application to learning.—Ibid.

ARRIVAL OF A NEW GOVERNOR.—The H. C. steam frigate Servant, Commander Lowe, having on board the Right Hon. Lord Viscount Falkland, lady, and suite, anchored in the harbour shortly before midnight of the 27th, having left Aden at half-past nine o'clock on the night of the 19th. Shortly after her arrival, Sir E. Perry, Sir B. Oliver, Capt. French, and some other gentlemen, went on board to pay their respects to the new governor, who wisely preferred remaining on board to landing at such an hour with a strong adverse tide. His lordship and family landed at seven yesterday morning under the customary salute from H. M. S. Vernon and the battery: he considerably declined the attendance of troops, and all military parades was dispensed with—an agreeable relief in this roasting weather. Lord Falkland proceeded immediately to Parell, where every thing was in readiness for his reception. He will be at home in and assume the reins of authority on Monday. We are sorry to learn that he has been suffering considerably on his voyage, and that a large abscess on his chest required to be opened on the voyage. He was rarely able to quit his cabin. His lordship is accompanied by the Hon. Col. Ashburham, and Captain Carey, R. N.—as military and private secretary respectively.—Times, April 29.

DR. MCKENZIE.—Dr. McKenzie, we believe, proceeds to England ten or twelve days hence as physician in attendance on Mr. Clerk.—Ibid.

ROYAL SALUTE.—A royal salute was fired yesterday at noon from the battery in honour of the birth of another prince to our illustrious Sovereign on the 18th March inst. The salute compliment is to be paid to the auspicious event at all the military stations under this presidency.—Ibid.

EMBANKMENT.—We mentioned in a former issue that leave had been granted by Government to have an embankment run from the Cooperage to Colaba, with a view of reclaiming some four or five acres of ground, already nearly filled up with sand from the sea. It is not at present intended to bring up this to the level of the esplanade—a wide bank of about thirty feet of sand behind the stone wall facing the sea, will, it is supposed, be sufficient, while the street sweepings are being thrown in next to the Colaba shore to obtain a turf-bearing soil. These seem skilful and judicious arrangements: the manure mixed with the sand, and moistened by an abundant supply of fine fresh water close by, will speedily give a smooth grassy sward, such as we have very few examples of. The smell, which at present is annoying, will cease to be perceptible when the rains begin: and that which used to be putrifying in the sun, or tossed backwards and forwards by the tide a perennial nuisance, will become the means of extending the esplanade, enabling the wood-yard to be extended, and the vellard to be widened, without trouble, to any extent that may be desired.—Times, May 1.

MOFUSSIL.

AMHERSTAD.—The Mission.—The Rev. G. H. Pieritz, formerly missionary to the Jews at Jerusalem, but now in connexion with the society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign parts, arrived here with Mrs. Pieritz on March 25th, from England, with the view to join that society's mission at Ahmedabad.—Church Missionary Record.

BRISBANE. April 17.—Dr. Tawse—Superintending-surgeon Tawse left this station last evening to take up his appointment at the Presidency as Inspector-General of Hospitals and third member of the Medical Board. He was much esteemed, and leaves us with much regret for his loss. We are to have Surgeon Montgomery, I understand, as his successor.

Gen. Barr.—Major-General Barr, I hear, proceeds shortly to the Ram Ghaut, accompanied by his staff, to enjoy the cool breezes from seaward.

The Late Rajah of Sattara's Affairs.—Mr. Hart, of the civil service, I have been informed, proceeds on a commission to investigate into the affairs of his late highness of Sattara.

The Weather.—We had some light rain last evening, preceded by much thunder and lightning. We looked for heavy showers through the night, but all stormy indications passed off, and we are nearly grilled with the heat, and not a few troubled with a certain cutaneous affection called the "prickly heat."—Times, April 22.

KALABAGH.—Coal.—We have been favoured by a correspondent to whom, in such matters, we are under the deepest obligations, with some specimens of coal from the Upper Indus, near Kalabagh. It differs very materially from most of what we have seen from seams in India. It retains its woody structure, but bears a very close resemblance to some of the less perfect specimens of jet from near Whitby in Yorkshire. It is hard, heavy, and lustrous; breaks with an imperfect conchoidal fracture, seems to have considerable toughness, and might, we should imagine, be easily cut into ornaments and polished. Its remoteness from any place of consumption, and the extreme cheapness of fire-wood on the Indus, will, we should imagine, make it of little value as fuel, however abundant it may be on the banks of the river. It burns freely, and gives out a very large quantity of heat. Along with it specimens of iron pyrites, in which it abounds, have reached us. The mineral is common amongst most kinds of coal, and greatly deteriorates their quality. It is of no sort of value by itself. It is often mistaken for a copper ore, to which externally it bears a strong resemblance.—Ibid., April 26.

FROM THE 18TH TO THE 29TH APRIL INCLUSIVE.—SATURDAY AFTERNOON, 29TH APRIL, 1848.—The languid feeling stated in our last report as then prevailing in consequence of the news of the decision in regard to the Opium case having induced our Mharwarrie dealers to suspend their purchases for the time being, may be said to have passed away, and a fair inquiry again exists for those fabrics of low quality which for some time past have had the attention of our dealers. There is every disposition manifested on the part of the holders to meet any demand that presents itself, owing to the short period that has now to elapse before the close of the season, and the natural result has been, that where large transactions have had effect a reduction in price has, in most instances, been submitted to.

COTTON PIECE GOODS.—The transactions of the past fortnight have been on a larger scale than those we had to report by the last mail, but generally speaking the prices obtained have been below those previously ruling. The fabrics most in demand are low grey jaconets, medapollams, and shirtings, especially the two former, which are much sought after, while stocks of all are exceedingly light. The same remark as to scarcity applies to similar goods in a bleached state, and a fair enquiry also exists for them. For grey domestics of the fine and heavy makes there is no enquiry whatever; of low and middling 24 yards cloth several sales have been made. —Grey longcloths. At present no stocks exists, and the season for these goods is now over.—Dyed and fancy goods. Turkey red plain cloth continues dull of sale at reduced prices. For Turkey red tweeled cloth no enquiry exists. There has been some little enquiry for Turkey red prints of good patterns, and a few sales are reported.

EXCHANGE.—A rapid and considerable decline has taken place in the last few days, as very few China bills have been received by the last steamer, and our dependence for some time past has been chiefly upon them, owing to the greater part of the local bills finding their way to the Government Treasury against advances granted on produce at a low rate of exchange. We have heard of transactions in bank paper at six months' sight at 1s. 9½d. to 1s. 10d., and there is no probability of improvement for some time to come, but on the contrary, there is a great likelihood of still lower rates.

MONEY MARKET.—Money has been pretty easy during the past fortnight. Bank stocks, however, have receded in value, as will be seen from our quotations. Shares in the Oriental Bank went down to par after the payment of a dividend, and a farther decline took place owing to several parties having been under the necessity of realising their property.

EXPORTS.—COTTON WOOL.—A decline took place in the value of this article after the departure of the last mail, and some large transactions had effect at reduced prices. Upon the arrival of the mail from England two days ago, bringing unfavourable accounts of the Cotton-market there, a considerable fall took place, and the article is much depressed. No transactions have taken place in the interval, and we look for further decline on our quotations, as stocks are large and considerable quantities coming forward.—Accounts from China lately received mention a decline having occurred in prices there also.

CEYLON.

DARING BURGLARY AND APPREHENSION OF THE ROBBERS.—On the evening of the 28th ult., during the temporary absence of Mr. Forbes, his bugalow, on the Lyivakande Kande Estate, Matalle district, was broken into, and the iron cash chest carried off. Mr. Forbes, on his return after dark, immediately procured lights and went to his lines to examine his coolies. On his way thither he discovered the missing box lying in the dry bed of a stream with its top broken to pieces—being of cast iron it offered little resistance to a heavy blow. The whole of the cash contained in it, about £24, had been taken out. On making a strict scrutiny amongst the coolies, who were all found in their houses, as if nothing had happened, a man was found having his hand slightly lacerated from a recent wound. This clue to suspicion was diligently followed out, and the result was, that the greater part of the money, which was in notes, was found concealed in the suspected individual's house. The notes were stained with blood, which brought home the guilt of the robbery to the above individual most successfully. The other inmates of the house were also taken into custody, as it is very evident, from the weight of the iron chest, that more than one man had been concerned in its removal. The above neighbourhood, for the last fourteen months, at least, has enjoyed, a bad celebrity for the frequent occurrence of robberies on it, and Mr. Forbes deserves much credit for the promptitude and ingenuity shewn in tracing the delinquents in the present case, as it will be likely to prevent attempts at burglary for the future.—Colombo Observer.

TRADE OF THE STRAITS SETTLEMENTS.

We have at length found our way through nearly three hundred pages of not very attractive matter, presenting tabular statements of the trade and shipping of the Straits' settlements for the official year 1845-46. The return commences with the imports and exports of Prince of Wales Island, and it is gratifying to find that there is exhibited an increase on the imports of the preceding year of something more than Rs. 1,270,000, and on the exports of upwards of Rs. 1,920,000. This increase appears to be owing, in some measure, to the alteration of the duties levied in England on the principal article of Straits' produce, which has given an impetus to the agricultural interests of the settlement, and caused on the spot a larger demand for merchandize. The favourable crop of beetle-nut on the Pedlar coast has also exerted a most beneficial effect both on the outward and inward trade.

With reference to the exports to Great Britain, the principal increase is manifested in the articles of coffee, nutmegs, rum, sugar, and tin. The increase in piece goods alone imported from Great Britain amounts to Rs. 261,635. The trade with America and foreign Europe shews but little variation on either side. The imports from Mauritius have fallen off considerably; the exports shew a very material decrease. There is also a deficiency of Rs. 140,569 in the imports from Calcutta; accounted for, however, by the fact that the imports from Arracan are now entered under a separate head, whereas in former years they were blended with the Calcutta returns. A slight deficiency may also be observed in the exports to Calcutta. Passing over other details of less consequence, we find that the exports to China shew an extraordinary increase, being more than double those of the preceding year. The following is a statement of both outward and inward China trade:—

Imports	168,996	296,931

In this increase of exports, opium shews the largest amount; in the year 1844-45 there was no export of this article, and the change in favour of 1845-46 is attributed to the opening of a new line of packet steamers by which the merchants in the Straits got the first news of any alteration in the China market, and were thus enabled to export goods before the alteration could be known in Calcutta. It is not supposed that this remarkable increase is likely to be permanent, although "it may not probably recede to so great a degree or so rapidly as it has arisen."

The total returns of the trade of the past five years are as follows:—

	Imports.	Exports.
1841-42 ...	6,262,308	6,076,156
1842-43 ...	4,538,656	5,200,668
1843-44 ...	5,434,714	4,999,966
1844-45 ...	5,511,940	5,335,939
1845-46 ...	6,899,784	6,737,503
Aggregating as follows:—

	Imports.	Exports.	Grand Total.
1841-42 ...	6,793,427	+ Ra. 7,017,699	= Ra. 13,811,126
1842-43 ...	5,383,804	" 6,245,259	" 11,629,063
1843-44 ...	6,236,786	" 6,046,914	" 12,283,700
1844-45 ...	6,771,864	" 6,469,692	" 13,241,556
1845-46 ...	8,051,113	" 8,390,509	" 16,441,622

In the above returns the second columns refer to the one item of specie.

The number of square-rigged vessels entered during the year was three hundred and sixty-six, being thirteen short of the number of the former year. Three hundred and sixty-one square-rigged vessels cleared out, a decrease on the last statement of thirty-three. The falling off in inward tonnage is five thousand one hundred and thirty-eight, in outward four thousand six hundred and eighty-eight.

We now come to the Singapore returns. The following is the general result of the trade of Singapore, for the year under review:—

	Merchandise.	Treasure.	Total.
Imports ..	23,432,105	3,184,343 Rs.	26,616,448
Do. from Penang,	1,269,123	393,832 "	1,662,955
Do. from Malacca,	529,652	143,221 "	672,873
Exports ..	17,046,974	4,117,013 "	21,163,987
Do. to Penang, ..	1,147,011	722,359 "	1,869,370
Do. to Malacca, ..	279,304	257,066 "	536,370

Shewing an increase in the imports of Rs. 1,939,956, and a falling off in the exports of Rs. 539,236. The trade with Great Britain shews a diminution of Rs. 22,827 in the imports, and of Rs. 759,993 in the exports. The Calcutta trade, both outward and inward, has also declined. The amount of opium imported is less by 458 chests; the total deficiency in the imports is 862,394, and in exports 490,450; the latter apparently owing to a serious decrease in the exportation of sycee silver. The China trade inward has increased by Rs. 410,122, but the outward trade has receded to the extent of Rs. 815,116—which is attributed to a falling off in the exports of opium.

We have next the returns of the trade of Malacca for the year under review. The imports shew an increase of Rs. 33,063, the exports a decrease of Rs. 41,831.

Mr. Garling, the Resident Councillor at Penang, furnishes a valuable minute on the Copper Currency Act, which, however, is rather out of date, as the question of the currency of the Straits' Settlements is now, we believe, decided. There is also a copy of the regulations and restrictions of the port of Cochin China. Lastly, there is a minute on the advantages of making Macassar a free port, which is also out of date.—Bengal Hurkaru.

SCINDE.

KURRACHEE.—The Weather.—By the Bombay Steam Navigation Company's steamer Dwarka, which came into harbour on Saturday, the 22nd ult., we have letters from Kurrahee to the 18th instant, and from other parts of Lower Scinde of corresponding dates. The weather at Kurrachee during the week from the 8th to the 15th had been extremely hot, and many of the European soldiers had fallen victims to it.

—The New Church.—The erection of the long-talked-of church at Kurrachee was about being entered on, Government having granted the sum of Rs. 52,060 for the purpose.

—The Government.—The machinery of government was, during the commissioner's absence, being kept in motion by the secretary, Captain Brown, and Mr. Pringle's assistant, Lieut. Lester. The commissioner and family left Bombay for Kurrachee on the morning of Saturday, the 22nd, on board the Queen.

—The Scinde Gazette.—The case of the proprietor of the late Scinde Gazette would seem to be connected with those of the local elements of the camel baggage corps, two of which terminated so unfavourably for them, the third being still in course of investigation, and on the conclusion of which Mr. Von Geyer will be brought to a court martial.

—Upper Scinde.—Islam Khan.—Our advices from Upper Scinde come down to the 15th instant, Islam Khan, the Boogie Chief, who we a short time since reported as having escaped from the colony at Larkhana, had not been recaptured, though numerous parties had been out in all directions in quest of him. The latest, and believed to be the most authentic, account of his movements was to the effect that the chief had reached his own country in safety, but that he had not found his tribe quite so ready to rise on his behalf as he had imagined they would have been, the rencontre with Lieutenant Merewether being rather astonishing them, and made them averse to venturing again in the plains on marauding expeditions on behalf of a chief who had once for his own purposes forsaken them. The disgrace attaching to Islam Khan for having, on his flight from Larkhana, left one of his wives behind him, would seem to have been so great—the safety and protection of their families being the first principle of honour among the hill tribes—that the chief appears to have left the Boogie and retired further into the hills, and joined another tribe, from amongst which he had chosen another wife, and thus virtually united himself to them; so we may conclude that for some time at least he will not give any annoyance to our frontier stations. Should he be so inclined as to attempt to do so, Jacob and his horse would soon, we have no doubt, render a good account of him and his band. Since the escape of Islam Khan upwards of 200 of his tribe had come in and surrendered themselves to Major Goldney, the Collector at Shikarpore, who had located them with all their effects at Larkhana.

—Enmities.—On the 10th instant, a contest had occurred betwixt some men of the 1st Belooch battalion and the Upper Scinde police. A quarrel arose in a cluster of huts outside the city, occupied by women of ill-fame, but by the timely and judicious interference of the officers of both corps peace was speedily restored, though at one time, from the number of combatants engaged on both sides, serious results were apprehended. As some were armed with swords, severe wounds were given and received on both sides. One Beloochee was so severely wounded by a sabre cut in the arm that amputation was obliged to be resorted to: the limb was taken out from the shoulder-joint by surgeons Malcolmson and Ward, and the man was doing well. One of the Scinde police was so severely wounded by sword cuts in the head that doubts of his recovery were entertained. The wounds and bruises inflicted by bludgeons were numerous and severe. A court of inquiry was sitting to investigate into the cause of the quarrel, and to determine the degree of blame attachable to each party. It would appear perfectly clear that the disturbance did not arise from any ill-feeling betwixt the corps, but from an accidental affray, when others joined in, like an "Irish row."

SHIKARPORE.—Fever.—It having been reported to the authorities that fever of a very severe type had suddenly appeared in a village named Sultan-ke-gote, ten miles from Shikarpore, which had proved fatal to a great number of the inhabitants—that no one who had been attacked had recovered, and that the people believed it to be the plague, Dr. Malcolmson, civil surgeon, immediately proceeded to the fever-stricken village for the purpose of inquiring into the nature of the disease and affording medical assistance to the sufferers. On his return he is said to have reported it on its commencement to be the remittent fever of tropical climates, accompanied in most instances with unequivocal symptoms of typhus. Twenty-two of the villagers had died of the disease, and many of them were ill of it; it seemed to attack both old and young indiscriminately. Dr. Malcolmson had on his first visit administered suitable remedies, and had again visited the same village for the same purpose: no more deaths had occurred, and the disease was fast disappearing.

—The Troops.—The troops of all arms of the Shikarpore brigade continued in the best of health, hardly any sickness, certainly none that could be attributed to the climate. Dr. Barrington, of the 9th N.I., had left Upper Scinde for Bombay on sick certificate.

—The Weather, Vegetation, &c.—The weather was burning hot, but not nearly so much so we are told as at Hyderabad and Sukkur. Some of the officers had commenced the use of tattles, punkas, and thermautidotes. Grapes, malberries, and apples were just coming into season; the beautiful gardens of Shikarpore were in full blossom, and recalled recollections of home; and, says a correspondent, "in the delightfully cool evenings and mornings, a stroll through the orange groves, in full bloom, with the fair (for fair they are) and beautiful ladies of Shikarpore, reminds one of some parts of Italy. The river is now rising, and when the canals are filled it will be enchanting to slip down the stream and abandon the boat to the current under the shadow of the delicious and fragrant-smelling baun and cirris trees, whose blossoms at this season perfume the air with an exquisite odour."

—State of the Country.—With the exception of a few petty robberies and a few murders—of common occurrence in Scinde—all remained tranquil. Nor do we think the broken Belooch spirit can ever, unassisted, again sufficiently rally to cause any serious alarm. Though the mass of the people are contented with the English Government, which guarantees to them life and property and protection, yet it cannot be expected that a Belooch population of 400,000 can so soon forget the power which they once held, and control which they once exerted over the general mass of the people; consequently scowling visages are said still sometimes to be seen in the inland villages. This, however, is nothing more than the growling of a wolf, harmless from his fangs having been drawn. On the whole, Scinde may be said to be in a state of profound tranquillity throughout the length and breadth of the land; there is no rallying point for the discontented, if they were so inclined. Major Goldney, the collector in Upper Scinde, appears eminently adapted for the position which he holds: to a profound knowledge of the languages of the country, is in him combined a perfect knowledge of the customs and manners of the people. He is in reality one of the most talented of Sir Charles Napier's hard-working military servants.

DUTIES.—An amendment has already appeared on the Act VI. of 1848, which repeals the duties on goods imported in foreign bottoms in any port within the three presidencies, by which its operation is extended to Scinde; which leads us to infer that Young Egypt has not yet been annexed to the Company's dominions. We thought that all this had been settled, though nothing had been said about the matter: and we are disposed to infer that it is so, and that the new clause is added on the principal laid down by the miller of the Monastery when he mattered twice that it was "best to make sure," or the British practice of enumerating England, Ireland, and Scotland, and town of Berwick-upon-Tweed. We must it seems still have India and Scinde—and Young Egypt can claim kindred at present with no one of the presidencies. Her soul is like a star, and dwells apart; and long may she so dwell, if we would but relieve ourselves of the monstrous waste she occasions.—Bombay Times, May 1.

PENANG.

Death of Mr. Sarason.—The Penang Gazette received to the 25th ult., announces the death of J. W. Sarason, Esq., resident-counsellor at Malacca. It also contains a report of changes in the administration of the Straits Settlements,—that Colonel Butterworth goes to Madras, and will be succeeded as Governor by Mr. Blundell;—that Mr. Church, the resident counsellor at Singapore, retires, and will be replaced by one of the young Bengal civilians, Mr. L. S. Jackson, or Mr. H. Nelson.—Bengal Review, April 19.

PESHAWUR.

Major Lumsden.—We are informed by our usual Peshawur correspondent that Lieut. Lumsden had been directed to proceed thence to Lahore with his corps of guides, and that Lieut. Nicholson is to take his place at Peshawur, as soon as he shall have finished his work at Hassan Abdal. The Governor, Sirdar Gulab Singh, Providence, was about to proceed on leave to assist at the celebration of the marriage of his son, Lema Singh, which is to cost Rs. 120,000. He has leave for two months and a half, and his eldest son, Col. Atta Singh, of the artillery, is to officiate for him during his absence. The Hoodee passed off very quietly, and our news-writer says the troops settle as they have not spent a more pleasant festival for years.—Delhi Gazette, April 12.

THE CONQUEROR.—We regret much to learn that the Conqueror was unable to reach Attock. Her commander, Lieut. Christopher, proceeded up to Attock in a boat, and declared it unsafe, from what he saw, to venture so far with his vessel, on account of the number of rocks and the strength of the current.—Ibid.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

The New Bishop.—It affords us pleasure to announce to our readers that the Right Rev. Dr. Gray, Bishop of Cape Town, together with several clergymen, and other gentlemen understood to be candidates for admission to the sacred ministry, arrived in the colony on the 19th instant. This event, which has been for some time anxiously looked for, will be no doubt hailed with satisfaction by that intelligent and respectable portion of the colonial population to whom the Church of England is endeared as the communion in which they were born, and with which, from their view of the Scriptural character, as well of its doctrines as of its external forms and constitution, they desire to preserve their connection unimpaired. It is known to our readers that applications for such an appointment were addressed from this frontier, some years ago, to the leading members of the English hierarchy. But though we gave currency in our columns at the time to a memorial on the subject, we abstained from expressing any opinions as to the desirableness of the object in view; not, indeed, from any disinclination to see the organization of the Episcopal Church, to which we ourselves belong, rendered complete in this colony, but in consequence of the difficulty of perceiving from what source the expense of providing for the maintenance of the episcopal office was to arise. We did not consider that either upon a view of the actual position and circumstances of that church in the colony, or even upon general grounds, it would be proper for its chief minister to be dependent for his support upon an annual grant from the public treasury; and it could hardly have been expected at that time that so noble an instance of munificence would be exhibited as that by which Miss Burdett Coutts, in endowing the bishoprick at her sole charge, has signalized her devotedness to the blessed cause of Christianity. We would only express our hope and sincere desire that the fruits of her pious care in furnishing an episcopal see in South Africa may be visible in the present age, as well as in ages to come, in the exertion thereby, under God, of a growing influence for good upon the state of religion and education in the country at large, and that her name may go down with distinguished honour to posterity as a benefactress to the colony. It could not but be gratifying to men of charitable and candid disposition to observe the friendly reference to the Dutch Reformed Church contained in the appeal made by the Bishop to the Christian public in England soon after his designation to the episcopal office; and we cannot doubt that the kindly feeling thus evinced will be largely reciprocated by very many excellent members both of that body and the other religious denominations by which his lordship will find himself surrounded; and should circumstances in some instances even cause it to fall out otherwise, we trust that the parties on each side may be led in the spirit of mutual forbearance, and in obedience to the direction of Scripture, to "follow after the things that make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another."—Frontier Times, Feb. 29.

AFFGHANISTAN.

Our last Kabul intelligence is to the effect that the Peer of Dost Mahomed Khan having written from Jellalabad, expressing an urgent desire to see him, and explain orally his opinions regarding the proceedings of Sirdar Mahomed Haider Khan, the Ameer, accompanied by Ghoolam Mahomed Khan, Mookterood-dowlah, Hafizjee, Moullah Mahomed Saeed Khan, Barukzaie, Shah Abasser, &c. and one thousand Suwars, quitted his capital, which he left in charge of Sirdars Ufzul and Akram Khan, and proceeded to the lower provinces, reaching Balabagh on the 22nd of March; on the 23rd he was invited to Tattung by Nawab Jubbar Khan, Sirdar Haider Khan going out to Charbagh to meet his father, who reached that place on the 24th; a rumour soon after prevailed that unless the Sirdar could manage, by a timely present, to remove the displeasure of his father, he would be deprived of the Wuzerat, and see Sirdar Afzul Khan declared his father's heir. The Ameer did not remain at Charbagh, but proceeded at once to Jellalabad, where he occupied the house and garden of the late Mahomed Ukbar Khan, north-west of the town, and close on the banks of the river. A number of the neighbouring chiefs assembled to pay their respects to the Ameer. It appears that the mother of Haider Khan kept him well informed of all the intrigues on the tapis, and recommended, amongst other things, that in case the Ameer should demand of him an increase of his rent to the extent of two lakhs, he should agree to pay, as Sirdar Ufzul Khan, supported by the sons of Mahomed Zuman Khan, was ready to give that sum if he were appointed Wuzer. Hafizjee had, at her request, undertaken the office of mediator between the father and son; not, however, apparently, with much success, as Shah Mardan Khan was, shortly after the Ameer's arrival, appointed Governor of Jellalabad, in suppression of the Sirdar. Since writing the above we have received later letters (down to the 28th March) but they contain nothing of any importance. A robbery, on rather an extensive scale, has been committed in the passes near Cheshmare by some Ghilzies. Sirdar Haider Khan, who was encamped with his troops near the residence of the Ameer, had not as yet accommodated his differences with his father; though it was rumoured that the latter, having received a considerable present from his son, would soon return to Kabul. It was also stated that he proposed sending a vakeel to Major Lawrence at Peshawur, and that Shah Mardan Khan has been selected for that purpose; our writer adding that the jalas for conveying him down the river were already prepared.—Delhi Gazette, April 12.

We learn, by Peshawur, letters of the 6th instant, that the Ameer Dost Mahomed Khan, having settled his differences with, to the satisfaction of, Sirdar Haider Khan, had returned on the 3d idem to Kabul, where his presence is said to have been much required, as Akram Khan proved himself unequal to the government entrusted to his care. No doubt the lady mother of Haider Khan knew how to increase his difficulties. Some reports had reached of an inclination on the part of the Western Hazarehs to join Yar Mahomed of Herat, but they require confirmation. The Ameer, before his departure, made some arrangements with the Khaiburies, but the details are not given.—Ibid., April 19.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

H. G.—The letter of this correspondent in conformity with his wish is acknowledged.

MRS. S. has our thanks.

A respected COLONIAL Correspondent will be at no loss to determine why his communications have not found a place in our journal.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

FRIDAY, June 2, 1848.

On Saturday, the 27th of May, a meeting, important from its numbers, and still more important from the wealth, influence, and character of those composing it, was held at the London Tavern, Bishopsgate-street. Its object was to uphold the system of free labour in the British colonies, and to prevent the United Kingdom from becoming dependent for its supplies of sugar and coffee on slave-holding and slave-importing countries. The élite of the mercantile world were present, and Mr. THOMAS BARING took the Chair. A series of resolutions were passed, recording the judgment of the vast assemblage on the desirableness of maintaining the system of free labour; on the difficulties of the British colonies, and the impossibility of their maintaining successfully a competition with the slave-cultivated lands of Cuba and Brazil; on the horrible increase of the slave-trade within the last two years; on the monstrous inconsistency of affecting to check the operation of the slave-trade by a vast sacrifice of life and a ruinous expenditure on the coast of Africa, while we are stimulating the demand for slave labour; on the necessity of promptly and materially modifying the fatal Act of 1846; on the duty of the British nation to avert the destruction of its colonies, and secure full success to the great experiment of emancipation; on the expediency of encouraging the introduction into the colonies of suitable free labourers under proper supervision, and of facilitating local improvement; and on the just claims of the colonies, until placed in a situation to encounter the opposition with which they will have to contend, to receive such support as shall place them on a footing of virtual equality in respect of the cost of labour with those countries in which slavery continues to exist. A number of speeches were made which, one and all, were admirable in their way. Nearly every speaker took ground not previously occupied, and each made out a case which ought alone to be sufficient to carry the object which the meeting had in view. To us the proceedings of the meeting have a peculiar importance; for in the present state of the question of the sugar and coffee duties, the interests of the Eastern dependencies of the British Crown are identified with those of the Western. If the West-Indian colonies are doomed to furnish one mighty hecatomb for the ruthless devourer, Free Trade, India will necessarily be another victim; and if its friends, actuated by the recollection of old differences now better to be forgotten, or, paralyzed by apathy, stand aloof from the contest, they may rest assured that they will not escape the common ruin.

Bishop BUTLER was of opinion that nations, like individuals, sometimes go mad; and does not the present state, not only of public feeling but of Parliamentary feeling, seem to countenance this belief? A few brief years only have fleeted since we resolved on the abolition of slavery; and, to carry our resolution into effect, we made sacrifices surpassing any ever made by any country in the world, for the sake of a principle of general humanity. We have continued, down to the present time, to maintain an armed force at a ruinous cost, both of money and men's lives, for the purpose of putting down the slave-trade. Whether or not we have acted wisely in this matters not—we have, at least, acted in sincerity; for their is nothing attractive in service on the coast of Africa; and even the Accuser-General, Mr. CORDEN, could not allege that our gallant officers and men, engaged in the distressing duties of that service, were but enjoying a pleasure-trip. Yet now we are ready to throw away all the results for which we have laboured; we are turning our backs upon a course which we have followed through a combination of difficulties, enough, it might have been supposed, to deter the stoutest heart, and giving to slavery the greatest triumph which in modern times it has ever gained. And for what? Because a set of men, some of them crack-brained idolaters of a system, others "wise in their generation," seeking to promote their personal interests, regardless of aught besides—because a set of men thus made up tell us that Free Trade is the philosopher's stone; and that its laws admit of no exception. Since the year 1845 the slave-trade has doubled in extent! Hear this, ye who laboured to put down this accursed traffic, and who sacrificed your time, your money, your ease, your health, your comfort in the cause. You have done all this in vain. The Manchester Parliament have decreed that your labours shall be neutralized, and unless, like the high-minded citizens of London, you speak in accents not to be either mistaken or despised, the Parliament of Westminster will ratify the decree of their northern brethren. What madness was it to embarrass ourselves, and reduce our colonial fellow-subjects to the brink of ruin, if, after putting down slavery in the British dominions, we are to encourage it, to foster, to pamper, to feed it up into gross and loathsome obesity in foreign countries! Slavery is either right or wrong; it is either a good thing or a bad one. If right and good, why did we put it down in our own possessions? If wrong and evil, how can we without incurring fearful guilt and imperilling our national safety support it elsewhere? Well and truly may we adopt the language of one of the resolutions passed at the City Meeting, and declare "that the interest and the honour of the British Empire are alike concerned in averting the destruction of the agriculture and trade of the colonies; and in securing the full success of the great experiment of emancipation, the failure of which would indefinitely postpone the abolition of slavery throughout the world." It is clear, as Alderman THOMPSON justly said, "It is clear, that as long as slave-grown sugar is admitted into our country; the slave trade will exist in all its horrors." It will exist; and it will go on increasing. Thousands upon thousands will be slaughtered in the wars waged by the ruffian chiefs of Africa, for the purpose of procuring slaves for the market; thousands upon thousands more will perish amid the horrors of the middle passage; thousands upon thousands again will expire ere half the natural term of life be run, sinking under the effects of a degree of labour which no human frame can sustain, and the strokes of the ever-sounding whip, without which it could not be enforced. And who will be accountable for these things? The British nation, which, gulled by the most stupid and the most unprincipled pretenders that ever appeared to form a sect, has been led to believe, that while causing all these horrors, it is only to fulfilling its vocation of setting the nations of the world an example in the way of free trade. This is the doctrine of the "freebooters," among whom, that very unhappy person (for all persons cursed with bad tempers are unhappy) Mr. BRIGHT, chose to rank himself. The "freebooters" of Europe may well sympathize with the "freebooters" of Africa. But the sympathies of the generality of Englishmen are, we devoutly hope, better directed than towards the ruffian who steals slaves, or the wretch who murders them by over-work and excessive punishment. At all events, let us be consistent. Either let us cease to denounce slavery, or let us attest the honesty of our denunciation by abstaining from participating in its results. These two courses are before us. But let us look well at both, before we choose between them. The latter is as just and as safe as it is plain. The former involves, indeed, an abandonment of our previous policy, but that is not all; it involves an abandonment of the great principles of justice and mercy, and the adoption of the lowest description of worldly expediency, as our sole guide. By choosing it, we shall virtually say, we care not how many human beings are subjected to captivity, oppression, and untimely death. We despise the claims of justice, and laugh at the sanctions of religion; we are ready to strike hands with the blood-stained slaveholder, and take a share of his blood-engendered profits; to defy decency, to set at naught conscience, and to brave the threatenings of divine vengeance—all these abominations we are ready to commit, all these restraints we are ready to shake from us, all these penalties we are ready to incur. Come what will, come what may, free trade, and cheap sugar we will have—we know the moral cost, and are ready to pay it.

We learn from the Bombay papers that a meeting has been lately held at that presidency to celebrate the opening of a Mechanics' Institution there. The Chief Justice, Sir THOMAS ERSKINE PERRY, presided, and of course made a speech, which, in justice, we must admit to be very far preferable to some which he has delivered from the bench. His views were not in all points unimpeachable, but his appreciation of the value of Mechanics' Institutions was, in the main, just. He stated that he "was not very convergent with what had been done by Mechanics' Institutions during the past twenty-five years," but he believed it would be found that they had "not been very influential." He is quite right—they have not been influential; many of them have ceased to exist, and those which survive, linger on in a wretched state of valetudinarianism. The reason of these results is, moreover, hit by Sir THOMAS PERRY most correctly: "It is hardly to be expected," he says (and he says truly), "that men who work hard all day should devote their leisure hours to the laborious researches of science. I apprehend," he continues, "that little or nothing has been done for the advancement of science by these institutions;" and so, like a sensible man, he refuses to entertain the hope that the hantling of Bombay will do more than its predecessors at home. Thus, seeing no chance of advantage from occupying the high ground taken some years ago by Dr. BAKER and Lord BACONHAM (whom, by the way, he eulogizes, for exciting hopes, we suppose, which could not be fulfilled), the Chief Justice descends into a safer position, and makes up his mind that "rational amusement, more than any thing else, is the object which should be aimed at" by those who take the lead in Mechanics' Institutions. Now we have not the least objection to men amusing themselves in any way they please, provided they do no injury to themselves or others; and if they like Mechanics' Institutions, let them have them. The Chief Justice's is the right view of these establishments—they are places of amusement, and nothing else—scientific toyshops, where children of a larger growth may obtain gratification, resembling in character, but oh! how inferior in degree, to that which their more youthful brethren derive from cheaper and more readily-available sources. The frequenters of these institutions care nothing for the exhibitions that take place, except as they afford amusement. Chemistry and electricity are prime favourites among the physical sciences, because they furnish such pretty experiments. Astronomy is rather popular, because an orrery is something to look at. Those branches of knowledge which cannot afford gratification to the eye are dead failures. There is no harm in all this, if it be not dignified by the title of scientific pursuit. If the people collected at a lecture derive pleasure from it, well and good; but it is certain that the majority of them know and care no more for the scientific doctrines which they hear enunciated, than the butterfly who flutters in the sun knows of the nature, position, or dimensions of the glorious orb in whose light and warmth he luxuriates. Why, then, is this kind of amusement dignified especially by the epithet "rational?" It has no more claim to be called, par excellence, rational, than a game at blindman's-buff or touch-tag. If people amuse themselves harmlessly, it is a very good thing; but do not let us flatter them into a belief that they are philosophers because they choose or are driven into a particular kind of amusement. On one point Sir THOMAS PERRY is not very consistent. He sneers at the physical enjoyments of past ages, and yet falls into raptures on the Grecian games. With the Greeks, moreover, he associates the French, and refers to that people as affording an example in the way of rational enjoyment. We do not believe that the French are great patrons of Mechanics' Institutions; but their amusements are doubtless very rational. For instance; who that has visited the Continent has not witnessed over and over again the delightful spectacle of richly-whiskered and moustached men, evidently on the best terms with themselves, sitting calmly under the canopy of heaven, inhaling the blessed breeze (rendered more odoriferous by the fumes of tobacco), and bending all the powers of their minds to the achievement of victory at the intellectual game of domino? Here we leave the game to children; but the French, in the intensity of their rationality, retain it for the delight of their maturer years. This is French rationality. Again; what can be more rational, and at the same time more innocently delightful, than the practice recently indulged in so largely of wrenching up miserable poplars from their original location, bedubbing them trees of liberty, planting them in new holes, and hunting up unfortunate carrés to come and bless them? Of a truth, our once lively neighbours—now, alas! lively no more—do excel in rationality. As to the old stories of Henri Quatre, and the fowl boiling in every peasant's pot, which the Chief Justice quotes, we are quite willing to adwith that a fowl, or better still, a good substantial joint of beef or mutton, are most excellent things for working men. Such enjoyments will do them more good than all the Mechanics' Institutions in the world, with all their playthings and all their speechifying. We should rejoice to see them all well supplied in this respect; then they might hear lectures if they liked, and profit by them as much as they could. SELDEN says an Englishman fights best upon a full stomach; and we are persuaded that, if he is to grow scientific, a good layer of meat and bread will furnish an excellent foundation. As to the natives of India, whom the promoters of the Bombay Institution are trying to draw within its walls,—at present without success, for only four have joined,—as to the natives, we do not pretend to advise with the same confidence which we feel in regard to our own countrymen; but we have a strong belief that an ample supply of such food as is agreeable to them will, in their case also, be found a very nice preparative to a course of philosophy.

We dare not meddle with the other speeches at this gathering. One made by a distinguished Scottish minister is stated in the Bombay Times to have been so elevated in its flights, and so profound in its divings, that it could not be reported. As the editor of the Times is himself a Scotchman, and, as we believe, a good member of the Kirk, as of extensive acquirements, we cannot help sort of a speech this could be. But if it were less than those usually delivered at Mechanics' in our country, we need not, indeed, feel surapacity of the reporter to follow it.

A BOOK was lately published for the purpose of advising parents in the choice of a profession for their sons. Of course, the leading occupations of civilized life were included; but there is one profession which, having grown up in modern times, we fear may have been overlooked, and we would respectfully suggest to the author of the work which we have adverted to that the omission (if it have occurred) should be supplied in a future edition. The profession to which we refer is that of a political adventurer,—a patriot or a philanthropist, as the case may be. It is unquestionably, at present, the most thriving one going; and though, like other professions, it will without doubt in time be overstocked, and probably very quickly, from the great profits recently made by its members, there is hope for industrious young men for some years to come. There is one great advantage in this profession well worth the consideration of those parents who happen to have sons that seem to have no great aptitude for anything. A man cannot get into the church without some measure both of theological and general learning. He may eat his way to the bar without difficulty and without qualification; but when admitted to the dignity of an utter barrister, he will eat no more, unless he has contrived to furnish his head with some law reading. Attorneys look out not only for a barrister, but a lawyer; and for the man who has no law there will for the most part be no briefs. An exception here and there occurs. A barrister runs about to all public meetings of all kinds,—to the courts of public companies and the gatherings of railway proprietors; and by dint of this new species of huggery exercised on possible clients instead of attorneys, he manages to pick up a few briefs recommended to his notice by tolerable fees. This, however, is a rare case, and when we find a barrister thus acting, it is quite clear that he has mistaken his vocation, and should have chosen the patriot or philanthropist line. But to return. The medical profession is not accessible to a candidate without requisite knowledge, any more than the other learned faculties. Neither the College of Surgeons nor the Worshipful Company of Apothecaries will smile on a candidate who has not acquired a moderate measure of information in the sciences connected with the healing art. But in taking up the trade of a patriot or a philanthropist, no information of any kind is necessary. It might be supposed that strong native talent would be required to supply its place; but this would be a mistake. There is no more necessity for talent than for knowledge. Two qualities, and but two, are required—imperturbable assurance and an utter disregard of principle. These are indispensable; if a youth be troubled with the slightest tincture of modesty, or the most delicate degree of preference for truth above falsehood, his father must not attempt to push him in this way—he will never do.

Where the natural qualifications are not wanting, there is one recommendation of the trade of which we are treating, which is peculiar to it. Success is certain to reward ambitious effort. This cannot be affirmed of any other pursuit. In every walk of life, neglected and disappointed merit encounters us. The best man, so far from attaining the best position in the line of life which he has adopted, is often obliged to put up with the worst; while those whose intellectual powers qualify them for no higher office than that of snuffing his candles, are revelling in profusion far above him. Not less in these latter days than in those of the inspired king of Israel, is it found that "the race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong; neither yet bread to the wise, nor yet riches to men of understanding, nor yet favour to men of skill." The "hope deferred" that "maketh the heart sick" consumes the deserving, while fortune runs with both her hands full to meet the blockhead and overwhelm him with her gifts. That which the wise man saw almost three thousand years ago may still be seen: "Folly is set in great dignity, and the rich (intellectually) sit in a low place." The political charlatan leaves far behind in the race for honour and emolument the able, the upright, and the high-minded; and, in proportion as he is worthless, is generally successful. He has only to be active and impudent, and he will seldom fail of his reward. That reward, as in other professions, varies; but if the adventurer at all understands his business, he may generally contrive to pick up his thousand a year, which, if not a very magnificent income, is one not to be despised as times go. In judging of its sufficiency, moreover, we must look at the circumstances of the case. To obtain it, no previous study is necessary—no expensive education—no long waiting at the portals of a profession before being admitted to it—no period of probation to allow opportunity for testing ability. A man may jump at once from the most obscure situation and the most ordinary employment to notoriety, if not to eminence. He may have passed seven, or ten, or fourteen years in measuring ribbons and tape, or weighing soap and candles and shoe-leaves (by courtesy called tea), or scooping up pennies worth of Irish butter and dividing single Gloucester into minute fractions, and he may emerge at once from the exercise of these inglorious occupations into a suit of decent clothes, the receipt of a handsome income, and the swagger of one very anxious to be thought a gentleman, but ignorant how to sustain the character. Such is the fortune on which the adventurer may confidently reckon if he will only take the trouble of fishing out a grievance; and in this world it is very hard if he cannot find one, public or private, real or imaginary. In time, when his hands have got habituated to cleanliness and gloves, he may obtain admission to a club, where he may study exclusiveness, and learn the art of cutting dead his old associates, with whom he used to get muddled over adulterated beer; while in his speeches he may be able to talk familiarly of his friends, the Lord HENRYS and the Lord CHARLESSES, who occasionally dine in the same room with him.

We have not adverted to the possibility of an adventurer meeting with some dirty constituency willing to send him to Parliament (the qualification matters not), and we have been careful to give a very moderate statement of the results which may fairly be expected to crown his honest labours. We have thus done, because we would not excite unreasonable expectations. During the memorable contest of what was called the Country party with the WALPOLE administration, there was a very clever periodical paper published, entitled Common Sense; in the opening number of which, the reader was reminded that all that was promised him by the projectors of the paper was that valuable article which gave name to it—common sense; and that if it should happen to contain any wit, he would have that into the bargain. We have dealt with the incipient political adventurer in the like manner. We promise him nothing but competency. It may be his lot to find his virtuous exertions requited with affluence. Now and then—and the instances of late are somewhat numerous—subscriptions are raised to reward extraordinary merit in this way. These are the great prizes which fall to the lot of but few; but, as a class of adventurers of a very different sort used to argue in regard to the great prize in a state lottery, "Somebody must get it, and why not I as well as another?" Every clergyman cannot be an archbishop, nor every lawyer a chancellor or a chief justice, nor every medical practitioner a royal physician; but these great prizes stimulate hope and encourage exertion. Why should not the same effect take place in the profession which we are considering? Within a few days the result of a subscription, charitably raised for the benefit of a gentleman well known in the political world, has been announced, and it appears that the amount was £76,761. 6s. 6d. We give the exact sum, because we should be loth to deprive the subscribers of even a medicum of the honour which they have earned by their liberality; and moreover, we delight in swelling out the sum to its full dimensions, and, as a distinguished law lord has it, "pondering thereon"—£76,761. 6s. 6d.! (we must be permitted to repeat it; we wish the farthings had been added). This, we think, may be regarded as a tolerable remuneration for almost any conceivable amount of service; and such is a specimen of the prizes which may lead on "aspiring young men" (to adopt the language of recruiting sergeants) to persevere in seeking their fortune in an honourable way. We think the Duke of WELLINGTON obtained from the gratitude of Parliament little more, while his illustrious brother, but for the timely liberality of the East-India Company, would have spent his old age in penury. But we are optimists—we hold that "whatever is, is right." These things, therefore, are right as well as all others.

There is one fact connected with this famous subscription which is deserving notice. Of the great sum raised by it, the county of Lancaster (the southern part we suspect) contributed no less than £46,044. 6s. We do not ask how much of fearful destitution and intense suffering existed in that most miserable district while this subscription was going on—that is not our business, and clearly was not that of the subscribers either, or else they would, it may be presumed, have attended to it. But the point to which we desire to call attention is this—that while Lancashire contributed more than half the entire sum raised by the subscription, the vast, rich, and populous county of York, the most important division of which boasts of the object of the subscription as its representative, contributed no more than the paltry sum of £3,894. 15s. 9d.! The Yorkshiremen have maintained their old character for shrewdness, and held fast their money. But how came they to honour with their votes a man for whose benefit they so parsimoniously doled out their pence? There is an old spelling-book story which may give us a clue to this. In that venerable fiction, a man, not remarkable for the severity of his life, is represented as going to a friar and begging a shilling; the friar refuses it, when the applicant reduces his demand successively to sixpence, a penny, and a farthing. The friar is still obdurate, when the visitor, finding he can get nothing else, begs a blessing, which is immediately conceded, and is about to be bestowed, when the suppliant suddenly declines receiving it, on the ground that the refusal of previous applications proved that, if the gift were of the value of a single farthing, it would be withheld. By the light of this specimen of the experience of bygone days, we may arrive at a just estimation of the value of a seat in Parliament for the West Riding of Yorkshire. We will not state it either in words or figures, because we would not shock anybody; but it is pretty clear that it is not an honour greatly to be coveted, or its present possessor would never have had it.

Our countrymen in the East have a powerful passion for publicly expressing the grateful feelings of their natures. It will in time become, if it be not even now, quite dangerous for any one, however private a person he may be, to venture upon a journey to India, for no sooner will he have landed than it will be discovered that he possesses some rare merit or extraordinary accomplishment; or that he has done some remarkable deed, and forthwith meetings will be called, harangues made, and thanks voted. At home we indulge in these harmless amusements "pretty considerably," as brother Johnathan says, but we fall far short of our countrymen in India; to them town-halls are the Elysian Fields, and the summum bonum of life a vote of thanks. In that country there are some men whom it seems impossible for their friends to thank enough wherever they go they find an assembly summoned to their honour, whatever they do is rewarded with public gratitude. The expression of congratulations is so much a part of the nature of the Anglo-Indian public, that such persons are absolutely necessary to the social welfare. They are to society what waste-pipes are to cisterns, and serve to carry off the superfluous gratitude which would otherwise overflow to the danger of the whole community, and the result in such a case would probably be the passing of a vote of thanks all round, thus, "I thank everybody else; everybody else thanks me. 'I'm proud of everybody else, everybody else is proud of me;—in short, we are all proud of each other.' SNOOKS takes the chair at the meeting in honour of POPKINS, and POPKINS takes the chair at the meeting in honour of SNOOKS. Now we do not quarrel with the habit of voting public thanks on fitting occasions, far from it; we object only to the extent to which it is carried. It may be very well that Lord THIS and the Marquis THAT should receive such a compliment, but why offer the same to Mr. JONES or Mr. WATSON on his retirement from the office of junior assistant-clerk in the Tughlickabad Tract Distributing Society or the Burygunge Book Club? In England, not long since, there was a perfect mania for such exhibitions; to such a height was it carried, that one gentleman, who by successful speculation in a peculiar kind of investment had realized an immense private fortune, was thanked for the same, and the public approbation was expressed in the subscription of a very large sum—some 50,000*l.* if we recollect rightly—as a reward for his industry in enriching himself. The clergy, too, were in great danger at one time of being thanked to death. It positively was not safe for them to do anything, and even in idleness there was peril. The Rev. Mr. BROWN, vicar of Smothen-cum-Pooreby, was appointed to a better living in the next parish. The vestry immediately voted him thanks, the District Visiting Society gave him a gown, the Dorcas Society presented him with bands and a white cambric handkerchief, the parish at large gave him a reading-desk, and he was lucky if he escaped a silver tea-service, salver, and inkstand. In those days, a clergyman advanced in years might have opened a bazaar or silversmith's shop with the proceeds of public meetings and public gratitude. The schoolmaster who left his school was thanked by the pupils who had felt the weight of his rod. In this case, indeed, the intention of the testimonial was doubtful, and it might be construed as evincing either sorrow or joy on the part of the givers. The actor was thanked, the doctor was thanked, the lawyer was thanked; thanks were given to the learned, the ignorant, the handsome, the ugly, the rich, the poor—no, not the poor, they escaped the infliction, and received what is more expressively than politely designated as “monkey allowance,—more kials than halfpence;” but for all besides there were thanks. Why should his state of things be? Why should we turn our country, or any country, into one great great public meeting in honour of everybody? What right has TIMKINS to a testimonial for barely doing his duty? And why should Sir JOHN Nobody be thanked for sitting in an easy chair and listening to dull speeches for an hour or two? though in this latter case we must confess some recompense is but reasonable, and he who presides over a public meeting, (excepting such a one as the late city meeting, where sense and eloquence formed the staple of the speeches,) may justly claim some compensation for his sufferings. But still the thanks mania is a great nuisance, and ought to be “put down,” as a great city authority has it. At present, as we have said, it rages with frightful violence in our Eastern possessions, sparing neither sex nor age. Old men on the verge of the grave are afflicted by it, children in their nurses' arms suffer from it; the ladies escape not; in fact, it attacks everybody. A man can't beautify his own house in Calcutta or Bombay without the gratitude of the public being excited; and even the Benighted are becoming infected with the complaint. As soon as SNOOKS arrives in India, he is thanked. Wherever his duty calls him away, the same fate attends him. His “evil spirit,” a public meeting, is constantly at his side, and when about to leave the country, “for good and all,” a monster assembly is aggregated, and he quits the shores of India with shouts of applause ringing in his ears, a vote of thanks in his pocket, a silver service in his trunk; and ere the land is out of sight, he sees a column in course of erection to his glorification, recording his good deeds, and stating that the monument was subscribed for at a public meeting in honour of SNOOKS. India has been declared by a modern writer to be “no longer the land of romance.” True, it is no longer the land of romance, it is the land of gratitude. Should the mania again visit this country with half the virulence that characterises it in India, we may expect to be thanked for eating our own breakfasts, or enjoying ourselves by visiting the Chiswick fete, or listening to ALBONI's voice and COSTA's hand. Now this profusion of gratitude is very ridiculous. Can't we be content to think well of a man without hiring a room to make orations in his praise, or subscribing our guinea to give him—appropriate gift—a dozen silver spoons? It is now an honour not to be thanked; and not to be able to shew public testimonials must be considered a state of supreme felicity. The Indian papers rarely appear without reports of two or three meetings in honour of two or three different people; the disease is, if possible, on the increase; and therefore we call public attention to the alarming fact. In a short time, every one having been a recipient of public gratitude, there will be no one left to be thanked; and then what will become of us? We tremble at the very thought. Nobody to be thanked in such a thankful age! The only thing to be done is to begin afresh, and congratulate everybody a second time.

PARLIAMENTARY PROCEEDINGS.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MAY 11.—Conveyance of Indian Mails.—The EARL of ELLENBOROUGH having called the attention of the Postmaster-General to the conveyance of mails to Alexandria,

The MARQUIS of CLANRICARDE said the matter was under the control of the Admiralty and Treasury, and not of the Post Office. The noble lord complained that only a month's notice had been given of the renewal of the contract for the conveyance of the mails to Alexandria, but the Government were not precluded from advertising again should no beneficial offer be made in that time.

—Defalcation in the Accounts of Officers of the Supreme Court.—The EARL of ELLENBOROUGH, adverting to the cases of two officers of the Supreme Court who had recently become defaulters, hoped that the Government would take measures to guard against a repetition of such disgraceful occurrences.

The MARQUIS of LANSDOWNE said, steps had already been taken to correct the evil.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MAY 5.—Se Custom Duties in India.—In reply to a question from Mr. Ricardo, SIR JOHN HOBHOUSE said, that by an act of the Governor-General in Council, passed in obedience to the directions of the Home Authorities, the differential duties between British and foreign ships had been done away with. The Act should be laid on the table. The Act itself, and the grounds on which it was passed, had already been laid before the committee on Indian cotton.

LORD G. BANTINCK said, that Singapore was a free port, and the Act in question was so framed that goods could be landed in that island and thence shipped to India duty free.

SIR JOHN HOBHOUSE said, the omission was accidental and should be looked to.

— Discontinuance of the Southampton Mail.—In reply to a question from Mr. Macgregor, Mr. WARD stated, that the Indian Mail from Southampton had been suspended from the 3rd of May, in consequence of the French railway system having greatly reduced the time occupied in a journey from London to Marseilles.

MAY 16.—The Indian Mails.—In reply to a question from an hon. member, Mr. WARD stated that an officer appointed by Government would be allowed to inspect the books of the parties contracting to carry the Indian mails, to ascertain whether the terms were fair. The gentleman so appointed would be Captain Ellice, controller of the steam navy. The Government gave notice that fresh tenders would be periodically required, and this was considered the best method of reducing the charges on the mail conveyance by existing competition.

MAY 26.—The late ex-Raja of Sattara.—The adjourned debate on this subject standing for to-day.

Mr. GEORGE THOMPSON was willing to postpone it if Government would promise him another day for its discussion, and would in the meanwhile afford him an assurance that no appropriation of the Sattara revenues should take place.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER could not give the hon. member any other day for the discussion of the subject, nor any such assurance as he desired respecting the revenues of Sattara.

Notwithstanding the unfavourable nature of the reply, the hon. member declined to proceed with the discussion that evening, and the motion is consequently adjourned sine die.

LEGAL PROCEEDINGS.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MAY 18.—Jervis's Divorce Case.—Captain Jervis, an officer in the Company's service, came to England on leave in 1838 a widower. Before returning to his duties, he married at St. Pancras church on the 20th December, 1838, Miss Mary Amelia Dobbie, a young lady of a highly respectable Essex family; in the following year they sailed for India. In November, 1839, Captain Jervis left his wife to attend to his duties with the army in Afghanistan, and remained absent from her till December, 1842. From this time they cohabited till 1844, during which period two children were born. Up to this time they were living at Landour, but in March, 1844, Captain Jervis having been appointed Indian pension paymaster at Barrackpore, removed thither, leaving his wife at Landour on account of her health. From March, 1844, the husband and wife never met. In the following May Mrs. Jervis commenced an illicit intercourse with Mr. Henry Vansittart, superintendent of the Deyrah Dhoon, and in March, 1845, she was delivered of a child, the result of that connexion. In the April succeeding she wrote to her husband confessing her fall, and thereupon Captain Jervis commenced proceedings against Mr. Vansittart, and recovered 8000 rupees damages. A decree having been obtained in favour of Captain Jervis from the Ecclesiastical Court in England, the case now came before the House of Lords for final adjudication. After the recital of the evidence, which was ordered to be printed, judgment was postponed.

Counsel, Messrs. Crowder and Bigg.

ADMIRALTY COURT.

MAY 27.—The Ripon—Collision.—On the 8th February last a Swedish brig, the Oscar, was moored off the Blackwall buoy; the P. and O. C.'s steamer Ripon, which had been making an experimental trip, struck the Oscar on the starboard-bow and damaged her considerably. The Court pronounced for the damages.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

MAY 16.—Hughesdon and Mackay.—(Before Mr. Commissioner Fane.)—The bankrupts were East Indian merchants, formerly of Chanderanagore and last of Calcutta, where they traded in co-partnership under the firm of Hughesdon, Brothers. Debts were proved to the amount of 12,000*l.*, and Mr. C. Deane, of Old Jewry Chambers, and Mr. W. Kirkman, of St. Dunstan's Hill, were chosen assignees.

MISCELLANEOUS.

STOPPAGE OF INDIAN HOUSES.—On the 25th ult. the firm of Messrs. Gouger and Stewart suspended payments. The liabilities are stated at 80,000*l.*, of which, however, not more than 30,000*l.* is uncovered by securities. The cause of stoppage was the constant receipt for some time past of remittances on insolvent firms. The business was of a wholly legitimate character. The firm of Alfred Gouger & Co., at Calcutta, is a distinct concern, and will not therefore, it is hoped, be materially affected. On the following day Messrs. Roberts, Mitchell & Co. stopped. Liabilities, 74,000*l.*; acceptances, 16,000*l.*; assets, 85,000*l.* The cause of suspension was the stoppage of Carr, Tagore and Co.

STEAMERS ON THE INDIAN STATION.—A fine new steamer has just been built by Messrs. Tod, McGregor and Co., of Greenock, for the Peninsular and Oriental Company. She is to run between Canton and Hong Kong, and is named after the former place. She is of 550 tons burden, and 175-horse power, and when full freighted will draw but seven and a half feet water. The boilers are tubular, and made of brass; they are fitted with a self-acting blow-off apparatus for emitting the bime. The Canton will carry two 32-pounders; she is also fitted with Lambe's patent life-boat. The following is a list of the P. and O. steamers on the Indian station:—

Name.	Tons.	Horse power.

The following steamers are in course of completion for the same company, to be placed on the Indian station,—the Malta, Vectis, Ganges, and Bombay.

"Horse-guards, February 22, 1848. My Lord,—The judge-advocate-general having notified in the usual manner to the Commander-in-Chief the proceedings of the general court-martial, held at Fort St. George, Madras, on the 30th day of September, 1847, and subsequent days, whereby Lieut. Her Majesty having been graciously pleased to approve thereof, his grace desires that Her Majesty's pleasure may be made known to the army under your lordship's command, in the same public manner as were the finding and sentence of the court martial before which Mr. Campbell was tried. I have, &c., Fitz Roy Somerset.—General Lord Gough, G.C.B., &c., &c., &c."—By order of the Right Honourable the Commander-in-Chief, C. R. Curzon, Col., Adj. Gen. H.M.'s forces in India.

LITERARY NOTICES.

The Philosophy of a Future State. By THOMAS DICK, LL.D., Author of "The Christian Philosopher," "The Philosophy of Religion," "Diffusion of Knowledge," "Moral Improvement," "Celestial Scenery," etc. London and Glasgow. Collins.

This volume exhibits abundant evidence of a pious and benevolent mind. It may be read by all with interest and by many with profit. The natural indications of a future state are collected with care and arranged with skill; but after all we are by no means convinced that it is not the safest as well as the most conclusive way to rest the doctrine upon the plain declarations of the scriptures. If they be admitted as true, the point is established. If they be rejected, no evidence will carry conviction. The author of this work is an admirer of that greatly over-rated man Dr. Chalmers, and he appears to have imbibed much of the spirit and taste of his idol. Swedenborg saw the inhabitants of the world beyond the grave employed much in the same way as they had been in this. Very similar seems to be the view of the author before us. We cannot pretend to dispute with him as to the occupations of that state of bliss reserved for the faithful. We are content to rest in the Apostolic declaration, "It doth not yet appear what we shall be." But were it wise or lawful to speculate on such matters, we should find some difficulty in taking the word of our author on the subject, and believing that the pursuits of the blessed will embrace arithmetic, trigonometry, conic sections, anatomy, physiology, chemistry, and hydrostatics. Those who are the greatest proficients in these studies on earth, are certainly not always among the best Christians. Differing from Dr. Dick as to the propriety and value, not of his conjectures merely, but of all conjectures on subjects which must be classed among the "secret things" that "belong unto God," and desiring to discourage all attempts in theology to become "wise above that which is written," we feel that it would be unjust to dismiss his book without again bearing testimony to the amiable feeling and devotional spirit by which it is marked.

A Letter to the Shareholders of the East India Railway, and to the Commercial Capitalists of England and India. By TRANSIT. London, 1848. Smith, Elder, and Co.

The writer of this letter is of opinion, that a great trunk line between Calcutta and the opening of the Gangetic Valley should be completed before any attempt is made to form lines or portions of lines in any other direction; and he maintains his opinion with the energy of a man convinced of its truth. We are sorry, to meet with such specimens of Benthamitish slang as "The broad principle of the greatest benefit to the greatest number;" but some of his views are very just; and as an illustration, we may quote the following passage:—

"You have been selling too much; you have been cramming your cottons and twist on them [the people of India] without increasing their means of taking it. In a long-continued trade with any country, the benefit must be mutual, or will cease from one party being bankrupt (unless he cleverly shut shop in time). This is the case, and your cottons are a drug in the market. You have ruined their trade in Dacca muslin, of which last year not a single piece was exported; you have reduced their sale of raw cotton to nil, and what have you done to improve their manufactures or means of conveyance? You must begin by buying, or, in other words, by improving their ability to sell."

Poems and Songs. By E. H. B. London, 1848. Pickering.

The contents of this beautifully printed little volume evince a delicacy of taste and a degree of poetic sensibility rarely met with "in these degenerate days," when so many attend the court of the Muses who, it is obvious, were never properly introduced. The pieces are mostly short, and appear, in many instances, to have been struck off under the influence of overpowering feeling. They have, consequently, a vivid impression of reality which mere spinners of syllables can never attain. The collection is appropriately inscribed to Sergeant Thibault, by whose elegant mind it cannot fail to be duly appreciated.

Our readers will not be displeased with a specimen.
TO THE BIRD OF PARADISE.

I.
Sweet bird of beauty! whence thy flight;
Oh! say—do climes of orient light
Gladden thine Iris wings?
Art thou from the haunts of the Hours fair,
Laden with hope as a spirit of air,
When a message from Heaven it brings?

II.
Alas! this world is no place for thee,
Nay has a cage, and a snare for the free—
And thy wing it may find no rest.
Thy once loved home is a lonely waste,
And the flowers which proffer'd their dew to thy taste,
Earth has folded them all on her breast.

III.
Then why linger here, bright bird of the skies?
Go bathe thy glad wings where the rivers arise,
Abandoning with bliss for ever.
O'er the far off mountains—thy home is there,
Where the eye may not reach—the tongue declare,
And where death never enters—never.

IV.
I will gaze on thy flight—I will track thy way—
My soul mounting up from this prison of clay,
Search out for thy beauty above.
With thee my rest and my treasure shall be,
When the spirit may spurn all control, and be free—
As the light o'er the altar of love.

A Word or two on Port Wine! addressed to the British Public generally, but particularly to private gentlemen; showing how, and why, it is adulterated, and affording some means of detecting its adulterations. By JOSEPH JAMES FORRESTER, Author of "Map of the Wine-Districts of the Alto-Douro," "Survey of the River Douro, from the Spanish Frontier to the Atlantic," &c. &c. Together with "Strictures" on a "Word of Truth on Port-wine." (Intended to be a reply to the Pamphlet so called,) by T. WHITTAKER, the Younger. London, 1848. Richardson, Ollivier, Royston, and Brown.

THE subject of this pamphlet is one that comes home to the business and bosom of an Englishman. Here John Bull may learn what sort of brewing is carried on to prepare his favourite stimulant, and what is the precise character of much that he drinks under the delusive name of fine old Port. The landlord's test seems to be pretty generally adopted both by purveyors and consumers. When his customers complained that his wine was not good, Boniface exclaimed, with a mixed feeling of indignation and surprise, "Not good! why isn't it black, and doesn't it make you drunk? What would you have?" The readers of this pamphlet (the value of which seems to be appreciated since it is in its fourth edition), will learn from it that blackness and power of intoxicating are not really the characteristics of first-rate port wines; but that other qualities are necessary—qualities rendering the article more beneficial to health, as well as more grateful to the cultivated taste. Further they will be taught (see pp. 25, 26) to discriminate unerringly between wine and that which passes under its name, without any lawful title so to do. We think we need hardly say more to recommend this tract.

Travels in Ceylon and Continental India, including Nepal and other parts of the Himalayas, to the Borders of Tibet, with some Notices of the Overland Route. Appendices: I. Addressed to Baron Von Humboldt, on the Geographical Distribution of Coniferæ on the Himalayan Mountains. II. On the Vegetation of the Himalayan Mountains. III. The Birds of the Himalayan Mountains. By Dr. W. HOFFMEISTER, Travelling Physician to His Royal Highness Prince Waldemar of Prussia. Translated from the German. Edinburgh, 1848: W. P. Kennedy, London: Hamilton, Adams, and Co.

ONE would scarcely have supposed that it was possible to have produced an account of travels in India that should possess any originality, so exhausted has the subject already been, yet such a work has been accomplished by the author whose name stands at the head of this notice. It is true that Dr. Hoffmeister possessed some advantages in his travels. He was entirely a foreigner to every thing in the land which he visited, and therefore all he saw was novel, whereas an Englishman travelling in India has most probably been previously well acquainted with the country and inhabitants by means of the manifold descriptions which we possess. Another circumstance in favour of Dr. Hoffmeister was the situation he occupied in the retinue of Prince Waldemar. Whatever the cause, however, the book before us is a most entertaining one, and one which will repay perusal, not only by those who read merely for amusement but also by the naturalist. The sketch of the Greek court, which the author visited on his route, is most amusing; and few will fail to smile, at least, at the waits and Scotch reel being danced side by side with the Pyrrhic dances, or at the idea of the ladies of the court refreshing themselves after a long and tedious gallop, with a quiet game of blind man's buff or la grace; the Queen, who was foremost among the horsewomen, taking the lead, also, in the lighter recreations! The account of Greece and the Greek court is, indeed, one of the most interesting portions of the book. After visiting Calao and the pyramids, the royal party proceeded to Ceylon, where they met with various adventures, some comical, some serious, but none which we have time or space to dilate on.

Madras next claimed the attention of the Prince: and, after a short stay there, he departed for Calcutta. From Calcutta the Royal party went to Nepal and Oude. In the latter kingdom the Nabob entertained his visitors with great state and pomp. After various wanderings the Prince and his suite arrived at Simla, where they were regally entertained with dinners, balls, &c. From this point they set forward to the banks of the Sutlej, and were present during the sanguinary war in that quarter. There, Dr. Hoffmeister found his grave. On the 21st of December, while the battle of Ferozeshah was raging, Lord Hardinge and Prince Waldemar, the latter accompanied by Dr. Hoffmeister, rode along the lines, when a grape-shot struck the doctor in his forehead, and he fell from his horse dead. He was buried in the burial-ground of Ferozepoor, and a monument to his memory was erected by the Prince.

That the book is not free from errors, will naturally be supposed. It was scarcely possible, indeed, for a foreigner to avoid some mistakes, and therefore we are not much surprised to find the author erroneously account for the brilliancy of a ball at Simla by supposing it to result from the magnificent presents which the Company's officers must, as he imagines, receive from the princes at whose court they are employed.

Not possessing the original work, we cannot, of course, say in how far the translation is faithful; but we may observe that it reads fluently, in some places elegantly, and nowhere like a literal translation.

One word, and our task is done. The duty of a literary critic is, at times, far from agreeable. However much he may wish to give unqualified praise, stern truth demands that he should not overlook the faults of those whose works he judges. In this spirit we refer to one passage of the book before us. At page 280 the author indulges in a very foolish sneer at the English church service, which he was induced to attend while at Simla. Considering the source from which the far greater part of that service is taken, we do not think it redounds much to the author's credit to avow that he "never carried away much of edification from it." So sensible was the translator of the bad judgment displayed by the author that he attempts a lame apology and palliation, by reminding the reader that the writer was listening to a foreign language. If, by this seemingly unnecessary piece of information, the translator meant to say that his author did not understand English, we may simply ask, how then could he make the statement which he does, that every thing in that service which failed to edify him, is repeated two or three times over?—the veracity of which observation is equal to the good taste which prompted the whole passage. The author further informs us that at the end of the Epistle and Gospel "a few remarks were appended instead of a sermon." If such were the case, we can only say that they manage these things differently in India to what they do at home, and that it behoves the Lord Bishop of Calcutta to look to it.

A Present for an Apprentice. To which is added, Franklin's Way to Wealth. By the late THOMAS TEGG, Esq. London, 1848. William Tegg and Co.

THIS little book is every way adapted to the purpose for which it was written. It contains a great deal of good advice, that if acted on cannot fail to be beneficial. When the author of the volume wrote it, he had passed through a long life spent among the busiest scenes of men, and no doubt the advice he offers to the youthful apprentice is the result of close and personal observation.

Tales of the Munster Festivals, containing Caid Drawing, The Half-Six, and The Coimar. By GERALD GRIFFIN. London and Belfast, 1848. Sims and McIntosh.

ANOTHER volume of the incomparably cheap series of works of fiction published under the title of "The Parlour Library." The merits of the collection are now so well known, and the reputation of Gerald Griffin so well established, that nothing further is necessary than to announce the appearance of this volume to ensure a demand for it.

HOSIERY and OUTFITTING WAREHOUSE, 146,

Strand, near Somerset House.—Mrs. WHITE begs most respectfully to recommend to her friends (more particularly those resident in India) her most beautiful make of Lisle Thread Hose and Half Hose for Ladies' and Gentlemen's wear; their lightness, durability, and comfort can only be appreciated by those who have tried them. She also strongly recommends a beautiful description of Merino Vest and Drawers adapted for the East and West Indies.

Mrs. W. takes this opportunity to thank her friends and the public for the liberal support she has received for the last six years, and begs to assure them that as she devotes the whole of her time and attention to her business, that the best attention will be paid to all orders she may be favoured with for either ladies or gentlemen, enclosing an order for payment on a bank or any house of known responsibility in London, will meet with immediate attention.

H. & T. PEAT, SADDLERS, HARNESS-MAKERS, &c., No. 167, PICCADILLY, LONDON, avail themselves of the present opportunity gratefully to acknowledge the patronage which they have received for so many years from their numerous connections in India, and to solicit a continuance of that preference which it has ever been their endeavour to deserve. At the same time, they beg to state that, from their very severe losses, they are compelled to decline the execution of any orders unless accompanied by an order for payment (when shipped) upon some agent or mercantile house in London.

It is also necessary that the name of an agent at the presidency should be given, to whom the goods are to be consigned, as the utmost despatch will be used in the shipments from London.

H. and T. PEAT feel bound, in justice to themselves, to make it known that large quantities of saddlery, &c., bearing their name and address, which are not of their make, are sent out to India, and elsewhere, by other parties, and are of very inferior qualities. Gentlemen should, therefore, send their orders direct to H. and T. P. to ensure articles of their manufacture.

All military orders, whether Cavalry, Infantry, Staff, Artillery, or Engineer, will be executed according to the latest regulation, and a discount of 5 per cent. allowed for cash payments.

N.B.—H. and T. P. beg to recommend for durability their 10, 11, and 12 lb. saddles, in preference to the lighter ones of 7, 8, and 9 lbs., at present so much in demand for India; and likewise to observe that, in all cases where the goods are not insured, H. and T. P. cannot be accountable for any damage the same may receive after shipment.

WORKS ON INDIA, &c.

PUBLISHED BY WILLIAM H. ALLEN AND CO., 7, LEADENHALL STREET.

A DICTIONARY, HINDUSTANI-ENGLISH, AND ENGLISH-HINDUSTANI. By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D. Royal 8vo. £2. 12s. 6d. cloth.

* * * This work has been undertaken in order to meet the exigency of our day—viz. a copious and portable Hindustani Dictionary at a moderate cost. It has been the compiler's aim to accomplish this object, not by the omission or abridgment of any words and phrases, but by the adoption of a small, distinct, and economical type, whereby he is enabled to lay before the public, in one volume royal octavo, of about 1,000 pages, the most complete Hindustani Dictionary yet offered for sale. The first part—Hindustani and English—may now be procured. It contains more words (by some thousands) than have ever been previously collected in one work by former compilers. The second part—English and Hindustani—is also by far the most copious of the kind that has yet appeared. The author having devoted the greater portion of his life to the study of the Oriental languages, and upwards of twenty years to instructing others therein, has had every advantage in the compilation of this laborious book, which he trusts will not be deemed unworthy of extensive patronage.

THE LATE SIR CHARLES D'OYLY'S VIEWS OF CALCUTTA.

These beautiful and elaborate Drawings are on view at Messrs. DICKINSON'S, 114, New Bond Street.

LADIES TRAVELLING, or otherwise exposed to the scorching rays of the sun and heated particles of dust, will find ROWLANDS' KALYDOR a most refreshing preparation for the complexion, dispelling the cloud of languor and relaxation, allaying all heat and irritability, and immediately affording the pleasing sensation attending restored elasticity of the Skin. The numerous varieties of Cutaneous Eruptions, Sunburn, Freckles, Tan, and Discolorations, are pleasingly eradicated by the Kalydor, and the Skin rendered delicately soft and clear. Its purifying and refreshing properties have obtained its exclusive selection by the Queen, the Court and the Royal Family of Great Britain, and the several Courts of Europe; together with the "élite" of the Aristocracy, from the sultry climes of India and the drawing-rooms of Calcutta and Madras to the frozen realms of the Cas and the saloons of St. Petersburg and Moscow.—Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle.

Beware of spurious "KALYDORS," containing mineral astringents utterly ruinous to the complexion, and which, by their repellent action, endanger health.

ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL.—The unprecedented success of this discovery in restoring, improving, and beautifying the Human Hair, is too well known and appreciated to need comment. The special patronage of the Queen, the Court, and the Royal Family of Great Britain, and of every Court of the civilised world; and the high esteem in which it is universally held, together with numerous testimonials constantly received of its efficacy, afford the best and surest proofs of its merits.—Price 3s. 6d.; 7s.; family bottles (equal to 4 small), 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s. per bottle.

ROWLANDS' ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, a white Powder compounded of the choicest and most recherché ingredients of the Oriental Herbal, of inestimable value in preserving and beautifying the Teeth, strengthening the Gums, and in rendering the Breath sweet and pure. Its truly efficient and fragrant aromatic properties have obtained its selection by the Queen, the Court and Royal Family of Great Britain, and the Sovereigns and Nobility throughout Europe.—Price 2s. 9d. per box.

* BEWARE OF SPURIOUS IMITATIONS—some are offered under the implied sanction of Royalty and the Government Departments, with similar attempts at deception. The only genuine of each bears the name of "ROWLANDS" preceding that of the article on the wrapper or label. Sold by them at 20, Hatton Garden, London, and by all Chemists and Perfumers.

A DISEASED ELBOW CURED by HOLLOWAY'S

OINTMENT and PILLS.—Mrs. Dunham, of Strubby, near Alford, was dreadfully afflicted with an enlargement of the elbow joint. For several months she lost the use of her arm, during which period she was under the treatment of the Faculty in Lincoln, Nottingham, and other places, but obtained no relief, and from the intense pain she constantly endured it was decided that nothing but amputation or death could relieve her sufferings. In this state, Holloway's Ointment and Pills were resorted to, and these truly valuable medicines soon effected a permanent cure, and restored the complete use of her arm. Mr. Hurton, Bookseller, Louth, will testify to this.

Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

PALE BITTER ALE, from the Union Brewery, Lambeth Walk, warranted to keep, in casks of 9 and 18 gallons, at 7s. 6d. and 15s., for the use of private families; a superior quality, in same sized casks, at 9s. and 18s. CHAPMAN and Co.'s drays take the West-end on Mondays and Fridays, the Surrey side on Tuesdays, the North-end on Wednesdays, and the East-end on Thursdays.

AGENTS IN INDIA.

Calcutta Messrs. Robinson, Balfour, & Co.
Madras Messrs. Lane & Co.
Bombay Messrs. Ritchie, Stewart, & Co.
Ceylon Messrs. Acland, Boyd, & Co.

The following peculiar advantages are offered by this Company:—

1. Their policies cover the risk of living and voyaging over a far larger portion of the globe than do those issued by any other Company in existence. They allow the assured to reside in the Australasian and North American colonies, and at the Cape of Good Hope. They also allow to the assured for the whole of life one passage out and home to any of those colonies. For British India a very moderate extra premium is charged, and the premium is reduced to the English scale on the return of the assured life to England for permanent residence.
2. Premiums may be paid, and claims settled at Sydney, where there is a Board of Directors and Trustees; and at Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, where there are Agents.
3. A third of the premiums may remain unpaid for five years; nor is it necessary for the maintenance of the Assurance to pay up the premium at the end of that time, but the unpaid thirds may remain as a debt against the policy, if the interest be regularly paid upon them as the renewal premiums fall due.

ANNUITIES.

The Annuities offered by the Company are on a more favourable scale than those offered by any other Companies, having been calculated with reference to the rates of interest obtainable on Colonial Investments. Annuitants also participate in the profits.

ECONOMY! ECONOMY!

STEPHENS' DYES for STAINING WOOD, as a SUBSTITUTE for PAINT. For Decorating Churches, Large Public Rooms, and Theatres, as well as Private Dwellings.

When economy in expenditure of material and time is of importance, these Dyes will be found of the greatest advantage, as they give a rich colour to plain woods, while they reflect all the beauty of the natural graining, which is so superior to imitations by art, and, at the same time, avoid the disagreeable small and deleterious consequences of paint.

The Dyes or stains are in bottles of 6d. and 1s. each, and at 10s. per gallon. The Oak Colour may be obtained in powder at 6s. per lb., which dissolves in water to form the liquid, and 1lb. will make one gallon of stain.—N.B. The trade supplied. Also.

STEPHENS' CONCENTRATED and SOLUBLE INK POWDERS, which contain the chief elementary parts, in a dry state, of his various well-known inks or writing fluids, yet so readily soluble in the water, that by putting the contents of a paper packet into a bottle, and adding to it the quantity of water indicated on the directions, it is ready for immediate use. The economy of this article in carriage, from its reduced bulk, may be estimated when it is considered that one part of the powders will make twenty times its weight and bulk of liquid ink.

Samples of the smaller packets can be sent by post to those who may wish to make a trial of them.

THRESHER'S INDIA GAUZE WAISTCOATS.

THESE really important articles of under clothing, although manufactured expressly for India, are equally valuable in all tropical climates, and are strongly recommended by all medical men as the most effectual preventative of the many diseases arising from check of perspiration to which the residents in warm climates are so particularly liable. This manufacture possesses all the advantages, without the inconvenience, of flannel waistcoats; the texture is light, soft, and delicate, perfectly free from all irritating or disagreeable qualities, and a very superior absorbent, consequently the very best description of under-waistcoat that can be worn in India, or in any warm climate. The valuable qualities of THRESHER'S INDIA GAUZE WAISTCOATS are well known and have been long tested in India, and the very general approval and consequent demand for them has given rise to many inferior imitations, which, with a view to deceive, have been variously marked India Gauze, Oriental Gauze, Gauze Victoria, &c. Messrs. THRESHER and GLENNY, therefore, beg most particularly to impress upon all parties the necessity of applying direct to their establishment, 159, STRAND, LONDON, for any they may require, and also most especially to caution the public against purchasing any article of the kind except those which are marked THRESHER'S INDIA GAUZE, as none others can be depended upon.

These waistcoats are made both for ladies and gentlemen, and Messrs. Thresher and Glenni undertake to forward them in dozens or half-dozen to every part of England and the principal towns of Ireland and Scotland, carriage free, at the following prices:—Gentlemen's, 7s. per dozen, and Ladies', 6s. per dozen; and also to pack and forward them, free of expense, to any agent in India, by the overland route, at the following additional rates, viz. 12s. per dozen to Calcutta, Madras, and Ceylon, and 15s. per dozen to Bombay.

OUTFITS TO INDIA, BY SHIP AND OVERLAND.

Every particular connected with outfits to India, both for ladies and gentlemen, including detailed lists of requisite clothing, uniforms, &c. &c. for every appointment, with the necessary variations for the outfits of

CIVILIANS, CADETS, ASSISTANT-SURGEONS, &c. together with every information respecting passage by ship and by the overland route, baggage, packing, &c.; will be forwarded on application to Messrs. Thresher and Glenni, as above.

TRANSIT THROUGH EGYPT,

From Alexandria to Suez, under direction of the Egyptian Transit Company, only 3 cwt. of baggage is allowed without extra charge, and no package or trunk should exceed 80 lb. weight.

THE REGULATION OVERLAND TRUNKS & CASES, Manufactured by Thresher and Glenni especially for the TRANSIT THROUGH EGYPT, and for the cabins of the Peninsular and Oriental Company's steam-ships to MALTA, ALEXANDRIA, and INDIA, can only be procured at their East-India Outfit Warehouse, 159, Strand, London.

All communications addressed to Messrs. THRESHER and GLENNY, 159, STRAND, LONDON, will have immediate attention.

S. W. SILVER and CO. CLOTHIERS, NAVAL, MILITARY, and GENERAL OUTFITTERS and CONTRACTORS, respectfully acquaint the public, that they have completed the alterations at their warehouses, 66 and 67, CORNHILL, which enables them to concentrate and exhibit all the requirements of an OUTFIT. Being the manufacturers (with experienced managers) of the chief and most expensive portions of OUTFITS, they are enabled to produce and render them at WHOLESALE PRICES; thus preventing MILITARY and NAVAL OFFICERS, CADETS, and PASSENGERS generally sacrificing the usual intermediate profit. LADIES' OUTFITS (which are under the management of Females) on similar terms.

SILVER and Co. having a correspondent in nearly every ENGLISH COLONY, their customers may at all times avail themselves of their assistance. SILVER and Co. pack and ship their customers' outfits, clear and warehouse their baggage homewards, procure and give SHIP-SAILING information, outwards or homewards, without receiving a commission for such business. Moreover, they do not allow the too usual commission to persons who introduce customers to them, that purchasers may derive every advantage. For example, individuals who are about to leave for India are generally inundated with applications and lists from Outfitters, who obtain the name and address of the party going abroad from persons to whom they pay (if they supply the Outfit) so large a commission for the information, as to materially increase the amount of the Outfit. Now, SILVER and Co. never forward a list of necessities to any one, unless directed to do so by the party (or friend) going abroad. Thus SILVER and Co.'s prices are not burdened with commission, because all recommendations to apply to them are pure and disinterested.

THE OUTFITTING WHOLESALE and RETAIL CLOTHING DEPARTMENTS, &c., are at 66 and 67, CORNHILL, and at LIVERPOOL. THE SHIRT DEPARTMENT for home use is at No. 16, CORNHILL. THE WORKSHOPS for Clothing, at 41, Bishopsgate-street Within; for SHIRTS and CABIN FURNITURE, at 33 and 34, Nassau-place, Commercial-road; and for SHIRTS, STAYS, BRACES, &c., at LANDPORT, near PORTSMOUTH.

THE HAND-BEDSTEAD FOR CADETS, weight 17 lbs.

BESMERES and SONS, CLOTHIERS, OUTFITTERS, and Ready-made Linen Warehousemen, invite overland travellers to India to inspect this PORTABLE BEDSTEAD, price 12s. 6d., invented and made only by them. Although so light, it is strong, compact, of full size, and may be used without a mattress; it passes readily into a bag 6 inches in diameter, 24 long. Bedstead, bedding, blankets, sheets, quilt, &c., packed in one of these Waterproof Regulation Overland Trunks, weigh under 30 lbs. Overland Trunks, One Guinea each. Lists of Outfit for Cadets and Assistant-Surgeons, estimates and information of every expense of the passage and journey, forwarded by post. Lists of Linen, priced, may also be had.—Outfitting Warehouses, Nos. 51 to 64, Houndsditch, London.

SUMMARY & REVIEW OF EASTERN NEWS.

AGAIN we have the note of war sounded in the PUNJAB. Treachery and massacre are again in the ascendant, and the British authorities are once more compelled to have recourse to arms. The locality of the late outrages is MOOLTAN, the capital of a district consisting of a large tract between the left bank of the Indus and the right bank of the Sutlej, and extending down to the junction of those two rivers. The city has been always reputed a place of great strength. After various unsuccessful attempts, extending over many years, it was taken by storm by RUNJEET SINGH, but with immense loss. It was committed by its conqueror to the care of a subordinate governor, who administered its affairs as a renter, and dependant of the Sikh State. The ruler who exercised authority in Mooltan at the period of the death of RUNJEET SINGH subsequently perished in a durbar affray. His eldest son, DEWAN MOOLRAJ, assumed the charge held by his father, but not without opposition. LALL SINGH quarrelled with him, and wrested from him one of his districts. Subsequently the Dewan was summoned to Lahore to settle his accounts; settlements in the East being never made, so long as it is possible to postpone them. He went under British guarantee, settled in some sort and returned to the seat of his government. Latterly negotiations have been carried on between the Dewan, and the ruling powers in the Punjab, the nature of which is not very clearly known. According to one report they originated, in a desire entertained by those who exercised paramount authority in the Punjab, to bring the entire dominions of the infant Maharajah under one mode of settlement; and with this view it was proposed to get rid of the Dewans. According to another report, the Dewan himself wished to be relieved from his charge, but this seems scarcely probable. These negotiations having to all appearance been conducted to a successful issue, Mr. VANS AGNEW, a Bengal civil servant and assistant to the Resident at Lahore, and Lieutenant ANDERSON, of the Bombay Fusiliers, were deputed to proceed with the intended governor, SIRDAR KHAN SINGH, and instal him in his new authority. They were accompanied by a very small force, if indeed by any thing deserving the name of a force, for it does not seem clearly understood whether their escort attended them from Lahore, or was formed from troops at Mooltan. All is involved in confusion, and possibly future accounts may render necessary very large corrections of those now furnished. The two officers, however, arrived at Mooltan about the 16th or 17th of April, and the place was formally transferred by DEWAN MOOLRAJ. On the following day the work of assassination commenced. While employed in inspecting the fortress, Mr. AGNEW was murderously attacked by two men and cut down. He was rescued by the new governor, KHAN SINGH, who mounted the wounded man on an elephant, and conveyed him to a fort outside the town. In the mean time Lieut. ANDERSON had been also attacked, and was found lying wounded and bleeding by the road-side; the DEWAN MOOLRAJ who was riding with him having disappeared. Lieutenant ANDERSON, like his companion, was borne to the little fort, upon which a fire was opened from MOOLTAN, but, the distance being too great, without much effect. Three days after the attempted assassination, the Mooltanese troops moved out to attack the fort in which the British officers lay. Their numbers were great, but the refugees felt confident in being able to defend themselves until relieved. Probably this might have been practicable. The BHALPORA chief had been applied to for assistance, and it might have arrived in time, but the Sikh troops within the little port opened the gates, and to a man joined the assailants. What followed may be readily anticipated. Lieutenant ANDERSON was dying from the wounds which he had previously received. Mr. AGNEW, though suffering greatly, was yet able, not indeed to defend himself effectually, but at least to make an effort at resistance. On a party of the assailants approaching him, he presented a pistol, but it missed fire. He then drew his sword and wounded several of the enemy, manfully struggling until he received a gun-shot wound, the effect of which was instant death. KHAN SINGH, according to the present belief, remained faithful, fighting by the side of the gallant Englishman, and being himself wounded. It will be most gratifying to find this confirmed. MOOLTAN is now in a state of complete revolt, and the dismembered limbs of our unhappy countrymen are exposed on its walls. Besides the two officers whose names are thus unhappily brought forward, there was another European victim in the person of a medical practitioner, named WILKINSON, stated to have been well known and much esteemed.

The CHIEF OF BHALPORA, on receiving news of the first attack, despatched a force to the relief of the British officers, and, as the distance is only thirty-five miles, they might have averted the catastrophe which has taken place, had the garrison maintained their fidelity. On hearing of the completion of the bloody tragedy they halted, to await further orders. A large force, which had been ordered by the authorities at Lahore to be in readiness to march for MOOLTAN, received counter orders, on its being ascertained that the British officers were beyond the reach of succour. What steps will ultimately be taken to avenge the death of our countrymen, and vindicate our insulted authority, remains to be seen. It is to be hoped that they will be decisive, and as prompt as prudence will admit.

Looking to the circumstances attending the sacrifice of the brave men murdered at MOOLTAN, it is impossible not to see that they were the victims of undue confidence. The parade of magnanimity has often been our bane, and a fresh illustration of the awful consequences of trusting those who are not trustworthy has now been afforded. Those gentlemen should not have been sent to MOOLTAN without a strong escort, and moreover one to be depended on. It is very fine to be magnanimous—it is part of the cant of the day. But the loss of valuable lives, the necessity for renewed military operations at a vast expense, and other evils and inconveniences which are the fruits of magnanimity, are poorly compensated by the reputation or the self-gratulation which flows from the indulgence of this swaggering sentiment. Make fast your bolts and bars, and then treat the enemy without as magnanimously as you please. Arm yourself to the teeth, and then shew all possible confidence towards the robber that dogs your path. These are the dictates of common sense, if not of magnanimity. Be prudent in the first instance, and then play the confiding hero if you will. Take care that the insidious foe is deprived of the power to hurt you, and then trust him without further restraint.

There was a rumour, but whether resting on any foundation or not seems uncertain, that our friend YARR MAHOMED from Herat, and KOHUNDIL KHAN from Candahar, assisted from other quarters, were to pour down upon SCINDE, and turn us out of possession there. For the confirmation or dispersion of this rumour we must wait further advices. It seems to be discredited.

At CALCUTTA, the UNION BANK continues still the topic. Another meeting has been held, a report of which appears in our Selections.

The commercial world appear to be alarmed by the state of affairs in Europe, and the Insurance General Committee of Calcutta have recommenced covering war risks on shipments made for Europe.

Government has put forth a notification announcing that it will in future be optional with shippers of goods under its advances to insure either in India or in England; and that in the latter case the Court of Directors will be ready to effect the insurance on being guaranteed the repayment of the premium.

From MADRAS there is no intelligence of interest, except what is contained in the following extract relating to GOOMSOOR, which is highly gratifying:—

"Of affairs in Goomsoor we are happy to be able to speak both positively and favourably. A recent letter from that quarter, on which the utmost reliance can be placed, informs us that the operations of the present agency have proved most successful. Both in hills and plains peace has been established. 'The country,' says this correspondent, 'has been drained of Meriahs; the total number rescued and sent to Nowgam being 235.' The Choosand chiefs who were so resolute in maintaining a hostile attitude have surrendered unconditionally to Capt. M'Vicar, and all the influential men have pledged themselves in the most solemn and binding manner not to resume the sacrifices. This intelligence is most gratifying, and reflects great credit on the ability, judgment, and perseverance of the Goomsoor political."

BOMBAY is not more lively than Madras. The assumption of his functions by the new Governor, and the departure of the old one form the most important items of intelligence.

CEYLON partakes in the commercial storm, as the following paragraph from the Colombo Observer indicates:—

"It is with great regret we announce the suspension of one of the oldest and most important mercantile firms in Colombo—that of Messrs. Acland, Boyd, and Co. This firm may be said to have led the way in coffee planting, and its members are connected, either as proprietors or agents, with a vast number of properties. Mr. Acland has resigned his offices of Legislative Councillor and Chairman of the Chamber of Commerce. The circular issued by Messrs. Acland, Boyd, and Co. adduces the fall of their London friends, Messrs. Boyd, Thomas, and Co. as the cause of theirs. Statements are to be prepared, and a meeting held in a few days."

The news from CHINA, though not lengthy, is rather interesting, but we must refer our readers to the proper place for it.

BENGAL.

SUPREME COURT, APRIL 27.

In the matter of William Anderson.—Mr. CLARKE applied for a habeas corpus, on the affidavit of Mr. Anderson, from which it appeared that he had preferred a complaint before Mr. Stratford, one of the deputy superintendents of police, against his bearer, Mudden, for theft, and Mr. Stratford, at his complaint, entered the complaint to be heard before Mr. Patton, the chief magistrate; but that in Mr. Patton's absence Mr. Hume proceeded to hear and determine the cases which ought to have come before Mr. Patton, and whilst Anderson was in waiting Mr. Hume sent a peon to require his attendance; that Anderson had before this presented a petition to the Government of Bengal against Mr. Hume, of which Mr. Hume was aware, and he therefore, not wishing the present case to be heard by Mr. Hume, and he (Anderson) therefore, whilst sitting in the ante-room, wrote the following letter to Mr. Hume.

TO J. HUME, ESQ., MAGISTRATE.

Sir,—With due respect for Her Majesty's court and laws, I have to request you will let the chief magistrate try my cause, as I think you mix up your private feelings with your judicial duties.

I am, Sir, yours obediently,

W. ANDERSON.

April 22nd, 1848.

That Mr. Hume, on the receipt of this, sent for him again, and on his going there, Mr. Hume produced the note, stating that he possessed the powers of fining and imprisonment; told him that if he would withdraw the note and apologize, he would not punish him; and that, upon his refusal, Mr. Hume delivered him into custody and issued the following warrant of commitment.

TO THE SHERIFF OF THE TOWN OF CALCUTTA, &c.

Receive into your custody the body of William Anderson, for that he, the said William Anderson, on the 22nd of April, 1848, at the police office in Calcutta, did contemptuously neglect and refuse to prosecute one Muddooly, him the said William Anderson charged with a felony before me, asserting as his reason for so refusing that I, as one of Her Majesty's justices of the peace for the town of Calcutta, allowed my private feelings to influence my judicial duties, and that thereby he, the said William Anderson, was unable to obtain justice, and him detain until the 7th day of May next, at which time you will bring up the said William Anderson before Her Majesty's justices of the peace.

JAMES HUME,
Justice of the Peace.

Mr. CLARKE said that he intended to treat it as a mere question of dry law. The committal was for contemptuously neglecting and refusing to proceed, and the order was to bring him up in fifteen days. Now, this was wrong and informal, as the committal ought to be "until he comply and perform the thing required." In 1 Burns, 780, it was laid down that if the commitment be not for an offence so indictable, or being rather of a civil than criminal nature, as for contumacy in refusing to do something which he ought to do, the conclusion ought to be "until he comply and perform the thing required." Now this is exactly the contumacy mentioned in Burns. I know of no act which gives a magistrate power to punish for that offence; he has only power to commit until he do what is required, in order to enforce his authority; but here is a positive term of fifteen days given.

The CHIEF JUSTICE.—We think that you are entitled to your rule on the form of the warrant, though we think at the same time that it was a highly improper and contemptuous letter, and the assertion appears to have been wholly unfounded. It is a question, however, whether it would not have been better and more dignified to treat the letter with the contempt it deserved as a ridiculous production. Had he used proper and respectful terms, we are not aware that he would have been compelled to prosecute before a particular magistrate. Where he has the right to prefer his complaint before one or two or more coordinate tribunals, I see no right that a magistrate has to compel him to prefer that complaint before himself. Notice must be served on Mr. Hume.

Rule granted.

APRIL 28.—Anderson was brought up this morning on the Habeas Corpus.—The gaoler's return was simply that he held him under that warrant, and to which no objection was taken.

The ADVOCATE-GENERAL observed that the committal was not for contumacy, and therefore, not within the authority cited by Mr. Clarke yesterday in 1 Burns, and on which the Court gave their decision; but for a contempt, and was therefore perfectly correct according to King v. James, in 5 Barn. & Ald. 894, where it is laid down that a commitment for a contempt being a commitment for punishment must be for a time certain. The warrant could not therefore be otherwise than it was.

The CHIEF JUSTICE.—I now see that it was not solely for contumacy, but for contemptuous manner also; and therefore would have been correct in being for a time certain according to the case cited; but this warrant is not only for the fifteen days; but at the end of that period "to bring him again before him," which is quite novel, being for an indefinite period and in excess of his authority.

The ADVOCATE-GENERAL.—I have an affidavit; but in the view that your lordship takes it will be unnecessary to put it in.

The CHIEF JUSTICE.—No, Mr. Advocate; our decision is founded only on the informality apparent on the face of the commitment. We do not express any opinion as to whether or not a magistrate has power to commit for a contempt. There is no doubt that a magistrate being a court of oyer and terminer, having power to try and determine felonies, has equal powers with the justices sitting in sessions. Whether they have that power was discussed, but not decided, in the King v. James. Act 21 of 1839, sect. 8, provides that if a witness summoned by a justice shall refuse to attend as a witness or to give evidence, he shall be liable to be punished by her Majesty's Supreme Court, and it is doubtful whether this was not by implication a denial of his power to punish himself for contumacy. The letter is undoubtedly highly improper and offensive, and even if it were not cognizable by the magistrate the state could punish by indictment. I believe the imputation to have been uncalled for and unjust; but at all events imputations of that kind ought never to be made in that manner. In all cases of judicial misbehaviour there is a proper course by which it can be corrected. It would be impossible to preserve social order if magistrates sitting in open court were liable to be insulted by imputations of this kind. Had this been a regular conviction, with a punishment for a time certain, we would not have attended to an affidavit against the facts stated in the conviction.

Mr. CLARKE.—In that case I should have pursued a different course, and removed the proceedings into this court for revision by certiorari.

The prisoner was then discharged.

THE UNION BANK IN LIQUIDATION.

THE adjourned monthly meeting of the Union Bank in liquidation took place on Saturday last, at two o'clock in the afternoon. The gathering of the shareholders was as large as any that the previous discussions of the affairs of this unfortunate institution had brought together; and, besides those who usually take a part in the proceedings of similar assemblies, we observed Sir Robert Barlow, Mr. Mytton, Mr. H. M. Elliott, and others. Mr. Elliott was asked to preside, but declined for a reason that, he said, would be obvious. Mr. JAMES SUTHERLAND was then voted into the chair; and the secretary read the minutes of the last meeting.

Mr. O'HANLON remarked that the resolutions embodied in these minutes had not been published in the newspapers as resolutions authenticated by the chairman and the secretary—which was a grave omission, considering how important they were in their nature. He desired to know if any steps had been taken in pursuance of the resolutions?

The CHAIRMAN did not see that Mr. O'Hanlon could, at this moment, advance anything that could prevent the adoption of the minutes. They consisted of resolutions already passed at the foregoing meeting, and required no vote of approval on this occasion.

Mr. O'HANLON confessed there was no occasion to take the opinion of the meeting upon them to-day, for they had already been sanctioned by a previous one exercising equal authority with the present; but still, the question was, could the minutes be passed before they had been published? (A laugh.)

Mr. T. C. MORTON now read the general report of the operations of the executive committee during the past month, which we subjoin:—

"General Report of the Committee for April.

"The committee have to commence their present report by earnestly calling the attention of shareholders to the present position of the bank, and the imminent danger which threatens all parties involved in its liabilities. With 20 lacs of rupees at command, the committee believe that a large portion of the claims might be compounded, and the rest put into train for gradual and favourable adjustment. When the committee first undertook the task of managing the affairs of the bank in liquidation, they distinctly intimated the necessity of the raising of such a sum by contributions within a reasonable time, and the unanimity with which a report founded on that basis was received, led your committee to expect that a sum not far short of the amount mentioned would be forthcoming. This expectation has proved utterly fallacious, and the result is, that the assets of the bank are threatened with the sacrifice which must ensue from executions and sheriff's sales. Several seizures have already been made; and although the utmost forbearance has been shown by the holder of the first judgment (the agent of Messrs. Glyn and Co.), it is impossible that much further indulgence can be hoped for.

"The following minute has been recorded by the creditors' committee:—

"That the shareholders be informed that the committees have no alternative, with reference to the numerous writs against the bank, but to place the entire assets under the seal of the sheriff, to be dealt with as the Supreme Court may decide.

"That, at the lowest computation, the assets of the bank amount to 40 lacs and upwards; and it is therefore obviously the policy of the shareholders at once to come forward with a fund to satisfy creditors and protect the property."

"Your committee yesterday received an official communication from the sheriff, stating that he had been called upon by a judgment creditor to proceed in the seizure and sale of the bank's property, and requiring to be furnished with a schedule of the assets, but intimating a readiness to act in conjunction with the executive committee so far as his duty will allow. It appears to the committee that the required schedule ought not to be withheld, and that the sheriff's offer to act in co-operation with the committee should be availed of as far as possible.

"Since the last meeting, the decision of the Supreme Court has been pronounced against the bank in regard to post-bills in the hands of bond-fide holders, without reference to the question whether the bank received consideration or not. The counsel for the bank have advised an appeal to England, but your committee in communication with the creditors' committee have resolved to appeal no post claim, the holder of which is willing to act in unison with the two committees.

"Your Committee have had under consideration several schemes for the liquidation of the bank, and they entertain some hopes that one of them may be successfully carried out. The great difficulty is to induce shareholders of wealth and influence cordially to co-operate, which hitherto they have not done. This backwardness in paying up the calls has been attributed by many of the shareholders themselves to the insufficient security which your committee are able to offer against future molestation, many parties who have refused to contribute are willing to come forward, and others who have paid declare themselves willing to pay more, on the condition of being released from further claims. An absolute release it is not in the power of your committee or the creditors' committee to procure for any one until all valid claims are satisfied; but your committee are ready to adopt a course which will sufficiently provide that the money of contributors shall not be parted with until they are amply guaranteed against all further liability. If none of the proposed schemes can be carried out their contributions may be demanded back. It is scarcely necessary to add that the success of every plan of liquidation is dependent upon the raising of a very considerable sum in cash or Company's paper.

"That many even of the past shareholders are actuated by a sincere willingness to bear their fair share of the common burden, the committee have strong ground for believing, and in illustration of this opinion they have much pleasure in publishing the following extract from a letter from Mr. F. J. Halliday, who has paid the full amount of his contribution, although as a past shareholder he stands in the second rank of liability.

"But in the present circumstances of the actual shareholders, many of whom are my greatly respected friends, I should not feel satisfied if I were thus to shelter myself even for a time under the protection of the technical advantages of my situation; I sympathize deeply with many of those present shareholders who stand at this moment in a condition of serious peril, and I admire and respect the efforts which are making by your committee and by those who have come to your assistance, honestly and manfully to meet the difficulties with which the shareholders are threatened, and to satisfy as fairly as you may be able, the just demands of the creditors. I feel also for the situation of many of the creditors themselves, who have suffered greatly by the bank's failure, and I cannot satisfy myself that they who were shareholders when these debts were incurred by the bank, are released by the subsequent sale of their shares from a certain degree of moral obligation, to contribute as early as possible to the fund which you are endeavouring to raise for the general satisfaction of our liabilities.

"For these reasons I have determined to contribute the sum of Company's Rs. 20,000 as requested; and I shall place the amount in your hands in the course of the day, or as soon as I can make the necessary arrangements.

"I remain, Sir, yours faithfully,

"FRED. JAS. HALLIDAY."

"Other past shareholders declare their readiness to contribute, but urge (and with much reason) that they can scarcely be expected to pay while so many shareholders hang back.

"By the last mail from European official letter, dated 7th March, was received from the Committee in England, in which they were pleased to express their confidence in the management to whom the liquidation of the bank had been entrusted. By private advices from shareholders, it is stated that a general readiness exists on the part of those who are able to meet the call. No official communication had been received by English shareholders on the subject of the call, as this was only dispatched from hence by the February steamer.

"The committee have prepared and annexed to this report lists showing which of the shareholders have paid up in full, and which of them have paid in part. It will be seen by comparison of these lists with the general list of shareholders, that many of the most opulent have hitherto held back. And it is probably already known to the meeting that two influential and wealthy native shareholders have taken legal proceedings, having for their object the temporary protection of themselves from personal liability. The committee have no right to condemn the conduct of parties in taking such steps as they may deem expedient or advisable for their own individual protection, but they cannot help deploring the want of unanimity which is thus evidenced.

"With reference to the bank's debtors, it appears to the committee that a great deal of misapprehension prevails. The committee have been charged with having exhibited undue indulgence towards them, whilst shareholders were being pressed for their contributions. To this charge the committee can only reply by a solemn assurance that in abstaining from actual suit they had in view the interest of the banks not indulgence towards the debtors themselves. The best mode of recovering or making the most of a debt is not necessarily to sue for it. The question whether a suit is necessary or expedient must depend upon a variety of considerations. The minute and letter book will show that your committee and the secretary have turned their attention from the first to the realization of the bank's dues. A few have been realized, some have been compounded for and are in train of adjustment, but by far the greater portion of the uncovered debts are either bad altogether or such as require considerable time for getting in even in part. The creditors' committee have long since had the list submitted to them, and, after careful examination, only pointed out five names to be proceeded against. Actions have been commenced against eight parties, and are now pending. The judgments will be obtained your committee do not doubt. How much may be realised under them is another question.

"The question of the expediency of publishing the names of the bank's debtors has been much discussed, and your committee learn that they have been blamed for withholding their list from the public. In their own justification your committee have only to point to clause 41 of the deed, which is, at all events, binding until revoked. Your committee have resolved that they will not take upon themselves to violate an express clause of the deed. If it is thought advisable by the general body of proprietors to publish such list, a formal resolution ought to be passed to that effect, and the committee will then certainly throw no difficulties in the way.

"Carefully revised statements of the liabilities and assets of the bank have been prepared, and any shareholder assigning a satisfactory reason can have access to the same on application to the secretary. Annexed is an abstract of these statements.

Considerable progress has been made in the reduction of liabilities to the extent in all, since the last meeting, of Rs. 3,12,714, and it is expected that within a short time they will be brought into a much narrower compass, and the number of creditors be rendered comparatively small, and with the view of effecting the very desirable object of extinguishing 825 accounts out of 931, it is the wish of the Committee to pay all claims under Rs. 1,000 immediately. This proposition, however, has as yet met with only the qualified assent of the Creditors' Committee.

"It will surprise not a few to learn that the debts due to the bank, although they appear in the committee's report to be worth not more than a single lac, stand on the books of the bank at thirty lacs.

"The amount of actual claims upon insolvent estates, besides, is seventy lacs; and this, added to the aggregate value of the returned bills, gives a total of a crore."

BABOO PRUSUNNO COOMAR TAGORE moved,—

"That the report of the executive committee, just read, be received."

Mr. MOLLOY seconded the motion of the Baboo, and it was carried unanimously.

Mr. O'HANLON now moved for a list of the debtors of the bank, giving the amount due by each individual, and the security, if any, by which it was covered.

Mr. CLARKE said he had seen a proposition which Sir Robert Barlow intended to bring forward, and he would ask Mr. O'Hanlon to allow it to be put to the meeting first, as it not only embraced his own suggestion, but went much further besides.

Sir ROBERT BARLOW, in submitting his proposition, begged to disclaim any intention of imputing the slightest partiality or blame to the executive committee. The shareholders were now involved in a predicament which must be utter ruin to most, and a heavy misfortune to all; and it was incumbent upon each individual to come forward at such a crisis, to labour for the alleviation of the general distress, not only by money, but also by advice. Sir Robert now proceeded to read his motion, which was as follows:—

"We are in a most difficult position, such as, I fear, involves most of us in ruin. We must, notwithstanding, look at our difficulties boldly. We must unanimously come forward, and honestly acknowledge our liabilities, and express our determination to meet the demands against us in the fullest extent of our power. In order to effect this, I beg to propose that the creditors' committee, whose full concurrence and co-operation must be sought, be requested to act with the shareholders' committee in the nomination of trustees, to be appointed for the benefit and security of all concerned. That all the bank's accounts be made public, and that the operations of the bank in liquidation be published in detail from time to time. That shareholders be called upon to state, in good faith, the amount he is able and willing to subscribe, for the general good of those concerned. That a list of the subscriptions in furtherance of the above proposal be circulated, and that it be referred to the trustees. This measure I strongly urge, because every man's means are, or may be, to a certain extent, known; and the joint trustees, having the knowledge, would be the best authority to fix the amount which should equitably be demanded from each shareholder with reference to any other property he may have, the whole of which is at stake, and will be made responsible for the bank's debts. That all sums which may be realised, be deposited in the names of the trustees appointed in the Bank of Bengal. That the creditors be solicited to stay further execution of judgment, and to grant time, say —, to the trustees, to dispose of the bank's property and to wind up its affairs."

Mr. CLARKE seconded the above motion.

The CHAIRMAN put the motion to the meeting.

Before the votes could be received upon it, Mr. BURKINYOUNG proposed as an amendment—

"That the various methods and suggestions that had been offered for the general and prompt liquidation of the bank's affairs, should be referred to a new committee for careful consideration, with a request that they draw up, or select from them, one for recommendation to the shareholders that should best unite and protect the interests both of the proprietary body and the creditors at large."

This committee, Mr. BURKINYOUNG proposed, should consist of Mr. Elliott, Mr. Mytton, Mr. Morton, Mr. S. L. D. Campbell, Mr. Charles Hogg, Mr. John Jenkins, Mr. Sutherland, Baboo Anahootosh Dey, and Baboo Prusunno Coommar Tagore.

Sir ROBERT BARLOW remarked that the nomination of trustees, which he had proposed, would secure precisely the mature reflection on the merits of his scheme that Mr. Burkinyoung desired. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. CLARKE was of the same opinion, and strongly recommended Mr. Burkinyoung to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. HOMFRAY rose to vindicate himself, as a member of one of the special committees that were recently appointed, from the imputation that all, except the executive committee, had been nearly inoperative.

Mr. CLARKE replied, he knew of the appointment of an indigo committee, but did not remember to have seen any report emanate from that body. He was perfectly willing, however, to take Mr. Homfray's word upon the matter, and to say that his remark did not apply to his pet committee. (A laugh.)

After much discussion and some confusion, Mr. ELLIOTT moved:—

"That all claims not exceeding Rs. 1,000 be at once paid off in conformity with the resolution passed at previous meetings."

Mr. MYTTON seconded Mr. Elliott's motion in a few words, but with great warmth of feeling.

The CHAIRMAN put Mr. Elliott's motion to the vote, which was carried unanimously.

Mr. MORTON now read the report of the executive committee upon the report of the special committee, submitted on a previous occasion, in regard to the post-bill transaction in which Mr. W. P. Grant was concerned. The annexed is a copy of the document:—

Separate Report of the Executive Committee of Management of the Union Bank in Liquidation, Calcutta, 29th April, 1848.

"In the report of the committee made to the last general meeting of shareholders on the 25th ult., it was stated that the inquiry in respect to the post-bill granted to Mr. W. P. Grant in June and July, 1846, could not be brought to a close, in consequence of that gentleman's unavoidable absence from Calcutta. The committee have since last meeting made further inquiries into the matter, and have received communications on the subject, one from Mr. Grant and one from Mr. J. C. Stewart, copies of both which letters are appended to this report, and the only conclusion at which the committee can arrive after full investigation is, that so far as the holders of the bills in question are concerned, full consideration appears to have been given for them, but that Mr. Grant's floating account with the bank was largely overdrawn, certainly to the extent of Rs. 50,000, which overdrawing was undoubtedly in some degree connected with the transaction referred to.

"In accordance with a resolution passed at the last general meeting, 'That the executive committee be requested to inquire and report to the next general meeting of shareholders, if any, and what authority from the Directors (at any time) exists allowing certain parties to overdraw their floating account in opposition to No. 7 of the printed rules of the bank,' the committee have made inquiries, and find that the actual authority under which cheques were passed in such cases, was the signature of the secretary marked 'Pay Exp.' as will be seen from a cheque appended to this report; and although it must doubtless have been under the implied or assumed authority of some or all of the directors, yet no record of such authority can be traced.

Correspondence relating to the Bank Post Bill and Bill of Exchange transactions referred to the Executive Committee, by the Proprietors of the Bank, at an adjourned Meeting held at the Bank on the 26th February, 1848.

"10th March, 1848.

"J. L. RUSSELL, Esq., Secretary Union Bank.

"SIR,—As you are aware, I have attended at the bank once or twice this week, in order to comply with the wish of the executive committee that I should collate the varying statements of account relating to the bank post bill and bill of exchange transactions which have been lately under discussion. The bank's own books and vouchers, however, are all that have been laid before me.

"The result presented by these is distinct enough. It appears that in June and July, 1846, certain bills of Exchange on London were sold by the bank to Mr. W. P. Grant, to the value of Rs. 209,708 11 8
And bank post bills were also granted him on the security of his promissory notes for 201,000 0 0

Total Rs. 410,708 11 8

The total amount of cash which Mr. Grant has paid into the bank, either for these bills of exchange or those post-bills, is 347,041 4 8

Falling short of the obligations by Rs. 63,667 7 0

"But it appears that the whole amount of this Rs. 347,041 4s. 8a. was improperly credited to the bill of exchange account only; which therefore exhibited, for nearly a year afterwards, a balance at its credit of (at length) no less than Rs. 1,26,280 10c.—while no cash at all was received in redemption of Mr. Grant's promissory notes for the post-bills.

"At length in August, 1847, the anomaly of so heavy a balance outstanding at credit of the bill of exchange account, while the post-bills were altogether neglected, appears to have been adverted to. But, strange to say, instead of any part of that large balance being then applied (as far as it would go) to relieving the long outstanding post-bills granted as above, the whole amount of it was bodily transferred to credit of Mr. Grant's floating or private account in the bank's books, which indeed greatly needed relief, being at that time in arrear no less than Rs. 1,92,562 12a. No satisfactory result can, in my opinion, be come to in this inquiry without an investigation into this last-mentioned account.

"The purchase of the bills on England for 22,500l. by Mr. Grant was an exchange operation on his own, and partly Mr. Holroyd's account—promising them a very handsome profit by a return at 1s. 11d. perhaps even at 1s. 10d. of bills bought as high as 2s. 14d. only three months before; and in point of fact, the profit on this operation was ultimately paid over to Mr. Grant on the 6th August, 1847, being part of the above balance of Rs. 1,92,562 12a.—the transferred to credit of his private account. The advantage to the bank in all this was the hope of a speedier replenishment of its coffers through Mr. Grant's assistance.

"In a note which I wrote to Mr. Grant myself, on the 16th of July, 1846, I called his earnest attention to the fact that his private account with the bank was then in arrear some Rs. 90,000, and that only Rs. 50,000 had as yet been received by the bank towards payment of the 10,000l. bill of exchange which had last been sold to him, and that in consequence of this delay on his part in paying for that bill, it would be necessary now to revise and abate the two favourable rates at which the bank had at first agreed to sell it to to him.

"The bank's selling its bills of exchange on London—on deposit of a mere security, like a promissory note—was a thing unheard of. Mr. Grant's promissory notes now in the bank unredeemed, were given, as their tenor shews, for post bills, and are held until the post bills which they secure are provided for.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
(Signed) J. C. STEWART.

"Calcutta, 25th March, 1848.

"J. L. RUSSELL, Esq., Secretary Union Bank.

"Dear Sir,—I beg to acknowledge your communication of the 11th inst., whereby I am informed that Mr. J. C. Stewart states that it appears from his examination of the bank's books and vouchers, that in June and July, 1846, certain bills of exchange on London were given by the bank to the value of Rs. 209,700 11 8 And certain bank post bills to the amount of .. 201,000 0 0

Together 4,10,708 11 8
Towards which I paid into the bank in cash. 3,47,041 4 8

Falling short of the obligations by Rs. 64,607 7 0

"I have to state that the amount of cash which appears by Mr. Stewart's examination of the books to have been paid in by me exactly tallies with that which I gave to the meeting of shareholders and to the Executive Committee, as to the amount of cash paid by me into the bank on these two transactions, viz. :—
Cash Rs. 50,000, Rs. 50,000, and Rs. 20,000 Rs. 20,000 0 0
Court of Directors' bills 127,252 15 3
Ditto ditto ditto 101,967 2 8

Rs. 348,220 1 11

Less discount on Directors' bills 1314 15 2
and 863 11 1 2,178 13 3

Leaving net cash paid in Rs. 347,041 4 8

precisely the amount stated by Mr. Stewart as appearing from the examination of the bank's books and vouchers.

"In addition, I paid into the Bank Company's paper to the amount of Sicca Rs. 78,000. So that my former assertion is completely proved, viz., that I paid into the Bank more than the full value of what I got from it on those occasions.

I am, dear Sir, yours faithfully,
(Signed) "W. P. GRANT."

After some further discussion, Mr. MOLLOY moved—

"That the separate report of the executive committee in regard to the post-bill transaction in which Mr. W. P. Grant was concerned, be received."

Mr. JENKINS moved as an amendment, that the original report of the select committee be read. But Mr. Molloy's motion being seconded, was carried almost unanimously against the amendment.

Mr. ELLIOTT now brought forward the question of publishing a list of the debtors of the bank, observing that, although it was included in Sir Robert Barlow's resolution, it would be as well to entertain it as a specific proposition. He would move—

"That the committee be instructed to publish immediately the names of the bank's debtors, the amount of their debts, the security, if any, on which they were advanced, and the nature and present condition of that security at the present time."

Mr. CLARKE rose to second Mr. Elliott's proposition—

Mr. Elliott's motion was put and carried unanimously. He next proposed—

"That the shareholders pass a vote of thanks to the executive committee for their exertions during the past month.

Sir ROBERT BARLOW seconded Mr. Elliott's motion, which was carried unanimously.

Sir Robert Barlow's first motion, which had been postponed for the resolution respecting the petty debts of the bank, was now brought forward again.

Mr. BURKINYOUNG moved his amendment upon upon it, in his turn. The amendment was lost, and the original motion carried unanimously.

The meeting now proceeded to elect the trustees under Sir Robert Barlow's resolution.

Sir ROBERT himself proposed that Mr. Robert Castle Jenkins should be one of the trustees appointed, as he was one whom he had known for a number of years, and in whose commercial experience and moral integrity he placed the most implicit reliance.

Mr. O'HANLON—I object to Mr. Jenkins. (A laugh.) I have met him on three different occasions since his return from England, and at each interview I have observed him acting the part of a mere partisan; I allude to his conduct here on a former occasion, to his conduct at Carr Tagore's, and to his conduct here again to-day; and, without intending to be offensive, I say he is not a fit man to be trusted with a thing of this kind. (A laugh.) Somebody behind me whispers that he is one of the old clique! [All this was spoken by the worthy gentleman with an air of great gaiety, and taken in very good part by the meeting generally, and Mr. R. C. Jenkins himself.] Mr. O'Hanlon proceeded—Mr. Jenkins is a particular friend of mine, and I disclaim any intention of giving him offence; but I really must say that his travels during the last three years that he has been away from amongst us, do no appear to have improved him at all at all. (Much laughter, in which Mr. Jenkins joined.)

Mr. R. C. JENKINS—Why, really, I am not ambitious of the appointment proposed for me by Sir Robert Barlow. I never aspired to it.

Mr. KESSELL—And it really is strange that, while one who has so liberally stepped forward to respond to the call for both contribution and loan, has proposed the appointment of Mr. Jenkins, another should get up to thwart him, whose name appears neither in the schedule of those who have advanced the loan, nor in that of those who have paid their contribution. (Hear, hear, and laughter.)

Mr. O'HANLON returned an angry reply to Mr. Kessell; but as Sir Robert Barlow's resolution left the appointment of trustees to the executive committee and the creditors' committee, and as the discussion was becoming rather personal, the meeting decided that they need not make the election.

Mr. O'HANLON now proposed—

"That the list of the bank's establishment, amounting to Rs. 3,332 a month, be referred to such trustees as may be elected by the creditors' committee and the executive committee."

Mr. MOXON observed that one of the items of this large account was the payment of Rs. 750 a month to the treasurer, to take care of—what?—of nothing that remained in the coffers! All the little money that could be realised was sent to the Bank of Bengal. What, then, did the treasurer do for his Rs. 750 a month?

Mr. O'HANLON's motion, which was seconded by Mr. MOXON, was put and carried unanimously.

A conversation here arose in reference to the proposed publication of all the accounts of the banks, in which are also understood to be included the accounts dating since the bankruptcy.

Mr. JNO. JENKINS remarked that, since January of this year, Rs. 60,000 or Rs. 70,000 had been paid for Mundulghat, which was not the property of the bank.

Mr. MORTON admitted that was so, but explained that the payment had been made to save the Talook from a revenue sale.

It was next proposed—

"That a detailed list of the cash account be open for the inspection of the shareholders at any time."

A vote of thanks was finally given to the chair, and the meeting separated.—Abridged from the Hurkaru, May 1.

LOCAL.

DEATH OF DR. BISHOP SULLY.—Dr. Bishop Cranmer Sully, formerly employed in the Company's service as a surgeon, and latterly as a teacher in the Oriental Seminary, a native institution, was found dead there on Tuesday evening; he is said to have died of apoplexy.—Friend of India, April 20.

THE TESTIMONIAL FEVER.—The rage for testimonials is descending to the rising generation, and it is beginning to be time it should cease. We are informed by the papers of the day that "In consequence of Mons. Dupuis' unwearied exertions in the training of his pupils in the elegant art of dancing, they were induced to mark their sense of it by presenting him with a piece of plate."—Ibid.

THE E. I. U. S. CLUB.—Several inquiries having been again lately made of us as to what steps are being taken for carrying out the prospectus of the "London United Service Club," we have much pleasure in mentioning that a committee for the N. W. P. has been formed at Agra. There sittings have already commenced, and, if we may judge from the names of the members, there is every prospect of the affairs of the club being put into an efficient train. A committee has also been formed at Madras, and with a third at Barrakpoor, or Calcutta, arrangements will be complete, as the Bombay gentlemen seem, as a body, disinclined to stir in the matter, for what reason it is impossible for us to say, though we should certainly like to hear one assigned, especially as many of the western presidency officers now serving in Sindh have not only joined the club, but taken much interest in its formation. We hope to receive the preliminary proceedings of the committee in a very short time, and shall meanwhile have much pleasure in continuing to register the names of such officers as may be induced to join this promising institution.—Delhi Gazette, April 21.

EXECUTION.—Yesterday morning, after an interval of eleven years, a gallows was erected on the "plain," in Calcutta, and the ferocious villain Roostom, who had been found guilty of murdering his mother-in-law, and her two children, was executed, in the midst of a vast concourse of spectators. We learn from a contemporary, that there were bets on the question, whether the judges would not at the eleventh hour let the man off.—Friend of India, April 27.

PRECAUTIONS IN REGARD TO GOVERNMENT STEAMERS.—The disastrous wreck of the troop boat Jellinghee has led to the adoption of precautions in respect to the boats of the government service, calculated to ensure their enhanced safety. The causes of the accident to that vessel, it will be remembered, arose from the circumstance of her running at night, and her bow coming in violent collision with the rudder of the steamer by which she was towed, which stove in a part of the plate, and eventually swamped the boat. There has always been a standing rule against moving vessels after night-fall, but it has been promulgated anew with increased stringency. The other measure of precaution consists in giving the forepart of the vessel a double construction, thereby increasing its strength, and rendering it better fitted to resist the consequences of a violent contact. In addition, there will be fenders provided for the same purpose. In future, also, every chest containing treasure, received on board, will have a proper buoy rope rigged on to it, so that in the event of accident its recovery may be facilitated.—Hurkaru, April 29.

THE UNION BANK.—The mandamus case was heard yesterday, as to the right to compel the directors of the Union Bank to enrol in the Supreme Court a memorial that Promothonath Dey had ceased or discontinued to be a member of the bank on the 19th of November last, and that Kalikissen Ghose had become the purchaser. The Court heard the advocate-general only on behalf of the bank, and stopping the counsel on behalf of the creditors, heard the counsel for the Deys in reply, and refused the mandamus, both on the ground of the difficulty of granting it, as under the Act they could not narrow the mandamus to the case of the Deys only, but must extend it to all persons who had transferred since the last memorial, which would cause a multiplicity of issues each differing from the other; and further, that the affidavits did not state the circumstances of the transfer with sufficient particularity, so as to enable issue to be taken as to whether the several forms required by the deed had been complied with—as for instance, whether the express assent of the directors had been first obtained. The Chief Justice also laid some stress on the fact of the bank being insolvent; and that it being wholly discretionary with the Court to grant the mandamus or not, the Court ought to do nothing to prejudice creditors. The Chief Justice further intimated that had these difficulties been met, there would have been further questions to go into. First, as to whether a mandamus was the proper remedy. Secondly, whether the Court could compel a new memorial within the twelve months; and, thirdly, whether they ought to interfere in this particular case. Mr. Prinsep, the counsel for the creditors, also stated that he was quite ready to have argued it on the merits, being prepared with sufficient affidavits.—Ibid. May 2.

NEW LIFE ASSURANCE OFFICE.—We learn from the Englishman that Mr. Curnin has advertised himself as a commission agent, and declared his intention to establish a new life assurance office, under the name of the Reliance.—Ibid.

MOFUSSIL.

CARAGOLLA SURVEY.—We understand that the survey which was ordered to be taken of the road from Caragolla to Tytaliah will soon be resumed by Captain Goldie, of the Engineers, who has been appointed to succeed Captain Whiting. The object of this survey is to construct a new road for the facility and convenience of travellers proceeding to Darjeeling from the north western provinces. Stage bungalows on that road have, we understand, been also ordered to be built, at moderate distances, for the accommodation of gentlemen proceeding to the above sanatorium to recruit their health. Captain Warner, the executive officer of the Bauleah division, has been directed to construct some bungalows of the above description on the road from Caragolla to Purneah.—Hurkaru, April 28.

MHOW.—Accident to Captain Herbert.—The Delhi Gazette states, that Captain Herbert, of the 9th Light Cavalry, having gone in pursuit of a bear near Mhow, lodged a ball in him, and then approached him under the idea that he was dead; but the animal sprung up, and so fearfully lacerated the officer's arm and leg that his life was for a time despaired of.—Friend of India, April 27.

MUSCOORIE.—Mr. Lumley.—The Mofussilite publishes a rather singular advertisement from ex-Captain J. R. Lumley, late of the Honourable Company's Service, in which, with reference to the notification of his retirement, he proclaims that from the 1st of June next he will refuse all Indian letters, and from the 1st of October all English letters, that are addressed otherwise than to "J. R. Lumley, Esq., Claremont, Mussoorie."—Hurkaru, April 28.

MYMENSING CHARITABLE INSTITUTION.—We understand that a charitable English institution has lately been established at Mymensing by its European and Native residents who have placed at the head of the school one of their students of the Dacca College.—Ibid.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

FURLOUGH TO EUROPE, &c.

Head-Quarters, Simla, April 8, 1848.—Officers proceeding to the presidency on leave of absence, with a view to submitting applications, on their arrival there, for furlough to Europe, or to retire from the service, are reminded of the necessity that such applications must receive the sanction of the Right Honourable Commander-in-chief, previous to their being laid before government. It is therefore advisable for officers intending to embark soon after reaching Calcutta, to forward their applications to army head-quarters, in sufficient time to admit to his excellency's authority being conveyed to the assistant adjutant-general at the presidency, to submit them for the orders of government.

These instructions are equally applicable to officers holding civil situations, with reference to the 2nd paragraph of government general orders of the 12th of December, 1818.

It is only in urgent cases, and on medical certificate, as announced in general orders of the 10th of January, 1833, that the assistant adjutant-general at the presidency is authorized to submit applications of the above nature to government, without first obtaining the sanction of the Commander-in-chief.

COMMERCIAL REPORT.

We are without any intelligence from Europe since the date of our last report, and the coming mail is looked for with much anxiety.

Our markets for exports have been comparatively quiet, the Indigo season drawing towards a close, and but little of the article now remains for sale. The intelligence received by the last mail has somewhat damped the ardour of speculators in this dye, and prices have given away about 5 rupees per maund on former extreme rates. The demand for Sugar has not improved, but the market is nearly bare of the finer descriptions, and the qualities available are not such as to tempt shippers. In these, prices have given way 6 to 8 annas per maund. The crops of cane in the Benares district are full ones, but the absence this season of the usual facilities for obtaining advances for manufacturing purposes has retarded the commencement of refining operations, and the new sugar is consequently later than usual in coming to market. An active demand has prevailed for Saltpetre at an advance of fully 6 annas per maund on the better qualities; the article is still wanted, but the market is nearly bare at present. Rice remains still under total neglect. Raw Silk from Native filatures is in favour, and suitable qualities, as parcels arrive, are readily placed at slightly improved prices. Silk Piece Goods have been neglected until latterly, when a languid demand arose, and several transactions have been reported at prices barely supporting previous rates.

Government have issued a notification, under date the 22nd ult. intimating that the Court of Directors have instructed them to dispense with the obligation to insure, which is imposed on parties who receive advances on the hypothecation of goods, when such a course may be deemed expedient. The hon. Court will, in such cases, effect insurance in England to the amount of the advances, the parties taking the advances binding themselves to repay the premium before the shipping documents are handed over to their agents. For the present, under the above instructions, insurances here are dispensed with at the Export Warehouse. The General Committee of Insurance office have recommended an increase of ½ per cent. premium in sugar, rice, and saltpetre, making it 3 instead of 2½ per cent. on these articles, and to charge when parties wish to cover the chances of war risk 5 per cent. extra, not returnable in the event of no war.

Our Import market continues to present the gratifying feature of a good demand for staple Manchester Goods at improving prices, and considerable transactions have taken place in these fabrics since the date of our last report. Light Glasgow Fabrics have, however, not improved. Mule Twist is in worse demand, and prices have given way. Metals are looking up, and Spelter has maintained our last quotation of 10-2 per maund.

MISCELLANEOUS.

LOCAL.

PRESENTS TO THE POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—We are glad to learn that his highness the Nabob of the Carnatic has presented the Polytechnic Institution with a fine six-foot achromatic telescope, by "Cary," mounted on an equatorial stand, and furnished with eye-pieces, &c., for astronomical observations. We are also informed that Walter Elliott, Esq. is contributing to the attractions which these rooms afford, by sending for exhibition his valuable collection of craniums, shells, stuffed birds, fishes, and other animals.—Athenæum, May 2.

DEATH OF LIEUT. J. H. WAHAB.—We regret to announce that Lieut. J. H. Wahab, of the 38th regiment N. I., died at Mirzapore on the 17th ult. This casualty promotes Ensign J. Flint to his lieutenancy.—Ibid., May 9.

COLONEL CHAMBERS.—Yesterday, a board of medical officers assembled for the purpose of reporting upon the health of Colonel Chambers, H. M. 25th K. O. B.—Ibid., May 11.

LIEUT. A. P. ROSSI.—We understand that Lieut. A. P. Rossi, of H. M. 51st K. O. L. infantry, will appear before a medical board, on the 12th inst.—Ibid.

via Perreasunder,* Guntwar Pillay.*

Madras, ditto —Jungumcottah.

* * Note.—Between Chickabalapoor and Perreasunder there is a shed at Voonacul; and one between Perreasunder and Guntwar Pillay, at Wurlcondah; but the bungalows which are at Perreasunder and Guntwar Pillay are two miles away from the road, which is a very great inconvenience to travellers.—Athenæum, May 9.

CANNANORE.—April 22.—Since my last communication, we have been visited by heavy falls of rain, accompanied by loud claps of thunder and vivid flashes of lightning—this rain has not abated the intense heat of the weather: although during the falls, and when the sky is beclouded, it has been cool and pleasant. There is every indication of more rain, when we hope to suffer less from the disagreeableness we are compelled to endure at present.

The new post office is completed, has been reported on by a committee, and is now occupied by the post department. The building has a fine appearance, and is substantially constructed. It is an acquisition to this place contrasted with the paltry hovel which has hitherto been allotted to it.

Major General Lovell, K. H., accompanied by the Brigade Major of Malabar and Canara, proceeded to Mangalore on the 1st instant, on a tour of inspection, and returned to this station on the night of the 16th instant.

The 35th Regiment N. I. was reviewed at Mangalore by the general on the 10th instant.

During his absence, the command of the garrison of Cannanore was exercised by Lieut. Colonel Coffin, of the 12th Regiment, N. I.

OOTACAMUND.—The Church.—Our present worthy Chaplain, has been fortunate in his efforts to render all connected with this sacred edifice, efficient and respectable. Since his arrival, at handsome new service of Communion plate has been received for the use of the congregation, besides other minor improvements; and recently an elegant new bell has been hung up in the belfry, the old one having unfortunately been so much injured, as to render it unfit for use.—Ibid., April, 28.

THE NEW GOVERNOR AND HIS STAFF.—The Right Honorable Lord Falkland was sworn into office at Parell at four o'clock on Monday, the 1st May, and assumed the reins of government. The whole of the troops in garrison—consisting of a detachment of artillery, left wing H. M. 8th foot, 24th N. I., marine battalion, wing 29th N. I., and the 26th N. I.,—were paraded the same evening to hear the proclamation read appointing Lord Falkland governor, after which a salute of nineteen guns and a feu-de-joie were fired by the troops. We are glad to learn that his lordship was so far recovered that he was able to attend council on Wednesday; he has since Monday been able to drive out with his family. His staff arrangements are the following:—Colonel Ashburnham and Captain Carey, military and private secretaries; Lieutenant McMahon, extra A. D. C., and assistant private secretary; Lieutenant Henry, A. D. C. The Honourable Captain Jocelyn retires from the staff, and Captain D'Arcy, we believe, returns to Europe on leave.—Times, May 11.

MILITARY APPOINTMENTS.—Major-general S.B. Ashmuty, C.B., appointed to the divisional staff of the Bombay army, vice Sir Charles Napier, arrived at Bombay on the 6th instant by the steamer Achar, and has been posted to the Poona division. Brigadier-general Munson has been consequently directed to assume command of the northern division, which will cause the present commandant, Brigadier James, to be for the present thrown out of divisional staff employ.—The appointments in the adjutant-general's department, consequent on the retirement of Col. Hagart, have been promulgated. They are as follow:—Lieut. Col. H. Hancock, from deputy to be head of the department; Major T. Donnelly, from assistant to be deputy; Capt. T. Stacks, from deputy-assistant to be assistant; and Capt. T. Tapp, from acting deputy-assistant to be deputy-assistant.—Ibid.

REMOURED MILITARY CHANGES.—A rumour is now in circulation to the effect that three companies of artillery and four native regiments are to be ordered to the presidency to form part of its garrison for some time to come; and that a Queen's corps from Bengal is likely to be transferred to Bombay for a like purpose—the regiment selected to be the one first for home. We do not vouch for either of the above reports, and leave our readers to place what faith in them they think fit.—Ibid.

GRANT BUILDINGS, COLABA.—We understand a committee, consisting of a brigadier, the deputy quartermaster-general, the superintending-surgeon, the brigade-major Queen's troops, and the garrison engineer, will shortly be assembled at the Grant Buildings, Colaba, for the purpose of examining them and reporting on their eligibility as barracks for European troops. Should their report prove satisfactory, we believe it is the intention of government to purchase the buildings from the Colaba Company should they be disposed to sell them.—Ibid.

INQUEST ON MR. HARRISON.—An inquest has been held on the late Mr. Harrison, deputy storekeeper and purser of the Indian Navy. The jury returned a verdict to the effect that the deceased died by his own hands, but that there was no satisfactory evidence of the state of his mind. Mr. Harrison destroyed himself by poison. He had got into pecuniary difficulties, which preyed on his spirits; and the Gazette of the preceding Thursday contained the announcement that he was suspended the service for neglect of duty. We believe that the charge against him was in the very words of the Gazette, and that it was made on the grounds of his having visited some of the stores under his charge less frequently than he ought. We desire to be thus specific, to clear the memory of one who has rushed unbidden before his Maker, of an imputation apparently deducible from some portions of the evidence on the inquest; beyond what has just been stated, no further blame was laid to his charge—no suspicion of any sort whatever attached to his integrity. Mr. Harrison has long been well known in Bombay; a few hours before the terrible act which terminated his existence was committed, he had been seen in church by many of his acquaintances and friends; and his removal has occasioned a deep shock to the community.—Ibid.

RETURN OF MR. CLERK.—The Hon. Mr. Clerk returned from the hills on Sunday afternoon; he arrived from Nagotana by the steamer Matua, about four o'clock. Sir R. Oliver, Commander Jenkins, and a few other gentlemen, went out some way to meet him. H.M.'s ship Vernon and the war-steamers in the harbour manned their yards, and the Hastings fired a salute as he passed. Mr. Clerk proceeded direct to Malabar Point, where he resides until his final departure.—Ibid., May 8.

LIEUT. GRAY.—Lieut. W. R. Gray, 26th N.I., a member of the committee of examination in the oriental languages at the presidency, is we believe to succeed Lieut. C. W. Walker, of the 5th L.I., as quarter-master and interpreter of the marine battalion, the adjutancy of which corps will shortly become vacant from a cause elsewhere explained.—Ibid., May 6.

VALEDICTORY ADDRESS TO THE LATE GOVERNOR.—Last night a very numerous party of gentlemen, accompanied by Sir Erskine Perry, chairman of the meeting on the occasion, proceeded to Malabar Point to present the Hon. the Governor with the valedictory address of the inhabitants of Bombay on his departure from India. The whole of the proceedings were excellently conducted, and every thing "went off" as well as could have been desired.—Ibid.

RACEDOWN BANERA.—This notorious bandit underwent the last penalty of the law at Tanna, on the 2nd instant. His fate seemed to excite no sympathy or commiseration. He was a bold and successful outlaw most assuredly, but his nefarious enterprises had nothing to sanctify them: he and his gang plundered as a profession and for their bread, and their extinction was felt to be a riddance for the common good.—Ibid.

FIRE.—An alarming fire broke out last Wednesday evening, at about nine o'clock, in a place called Mandavie, opposite the Muejed bund. The alarm was immediately sounded through the Fort, and the fire-engines were not long reaching the spot. Want of water was on this occasion severely felt; in fact, the natives, by whom the street was perfectly blocked, did not at all seem inclined to render any assistance. Mr. King, of the fire-engine office, who richly merits praise for his indefatigable exertions, was almost the first man on the spot, and directed the engines to be played on the burning houses, he exposing himself to personal danger. Notwithstanding their endeavours to smother the flame, the devouring element soon made its way from house to house. The breeze was freshening, but was not of long duration; had it continued, as was anticipated, the fire would not have been extinguished so soon as it was. Captain Parr, and several other officers, with detachments of native regiments, were early in their arrival. Captain Jenkins, with a party of seamen, was seen busily engaged in pulling down a building in order to check the fury of the flame. At about eleven o'clock the fire had made very great progress, and was at its highest pitch. Not a single native appeared collected; every thing was in "confusion worse confounded." Great difficulty was experienced in getting them to do a single thing. It appears that the fire originated from a "ghee-pot." It was put on the fire to undergo the boiling process in order to remove the rank smell with which it was in no small degree gifted. This ghee, being overboiled, burst into a flame, which immediately communicated with the ceiling of the house; the stand-by, being panic-struck at the sight, "took to his heels." On Thursday the whole mass of lofty buildings lay in smoking ruins, the engines playing upon them. The amount of property destroyed is estimated at about three lacs of rupees. Ten houses appear to have been levelled to the ground.—Ibid.

THE LATE GOVERNOR.—It was not till Friday evening understood that Mr. Clerk purposed leaving for nearly a week to come; when the community were taken by surprise by the intimation that he was to take farewell of us next evening. By five o'clock, accordingly, a large cavalcade of mounted officers in full dress assembled as an escort; Mr. Clerk had declined the honour of having the troops called out, in consideration of the trouble it would occasion. The cortege proceeded round by Hyetulla, to avoid the long, narrow, and crowded road by Girgaum. On the way it was joined by the Honourable Mr. Reid, late governor, and now senior member of council (the Honourable Mr. Willoughby is at present suffering from family affliction, and was absent in consequence; and the commander-in-chief is at the hills); Sir Erskine Perry, chief justice; Sir W. Yardley, puisne justice; Messrs. Bell and Hutt, judges of the Sudder Adawlut; Mr. G. Grant, chief magistrate; Messrs. Danvers and Rivett, second and third magistrates; Colonel Jarvis, chief engineer; Brigadier Derinzy, commandant of the garrison; Drs. Glen, Wight, Tawse, and Scott, of the Medical Board; Dr. McLennan, superintending surgeon; Colonel Moore, auditor-general; Mr. Lumsden, secretary to government, general department; Colonel Melvill, military secretary to government; the right reverend the Lord Bishop; the venerable the Archdeacon; Sir R. Oliver; Captain Lynch, I. N.; Colonel Woodburn and Le Messurier; Majors Swanson and Jameson; the Rev. Mr. Keys; Messrs. Ravenscroft, Blowers, and Spens, C. S.; Captain Christopher, I. N.; Drs. Taylor, Boyd, Arbuckle, Carter, Giraud, and Peele; and the greater part of the civil and military officers at the presidency; Messrs. Howard, Holland, Dickkison, and Wallace, barristers at law; Messrs. Forbes, Cornac, Latham, &c. &c., merchants; Jugonnath Samkarsett, Cursetjee Janisejee, Framjee Cowasjee, Minmohundass Davidass, esquires, and a large concourse of native gentlemen. The cavalcade proceeded rapidly along the Esplanade, and stopped about two-thirds down the Apollo Pier, when Mr. Clerk, leaving his carriage, was accompanied on foot by the gentlemen who had escorted him to the place of embarkation. Here a guard of honour—a flank company and the regimental colours of the 26th N.I.—and the governor's band were drawn up. Mr. Clerk looked pale and much affected, and having shaken hands with his friends more immediately around him, took his place in a man-of-war's barge, and was escorted by a train of other boats down to the Semiramis, anchored nearly two miles off. The wind and tide were both strong and favourable, and the party were quickly alongside. The battery fired a salute of nineteen guns on his leaving the pier; the yards of H.M.'s ship Vernon and of the war-steamers of the Indian Navy had been manned on his reaching the bund, and conti-used so until he was on board, when the Hastings and Vernon saluted him with their guns. The steamer got under weigh almost immediately afterwards, and passed down the harbour in dim twilight. The Snake steamer was sent down to tow the boats into port, a strong tide setting dead against them and the wind being unfavourable for their return. Though we have seen little of Mr. Clerk since he left for Scinde on the 10th of February, and nothing whatever since he quitted for the hills on the 18th of March, he was so much of a favourite that the community felt a blank and seemed lonelier on his departure, as if some near and kind relative had left us for ever.—Ibid., May 10.

COMMITTEE ON MARINE STORES.—Consequent on the report of the special committee appointed to examine into the state of the marine stores, and the circumstances which gave rise to the tremendous swindling from which government have for many years suffered, another committee has been appointed to take an inventory of the stores and see to their arrangement—operations which have not, we believe, been thought of for many a year past! The committee consists of Commander Kempthorne, Lieutenant Hayman, a purser or clerk to be named by Sir R. Oliver, Commander Robinson and Captain Pepper, and we believe it would be difficult to find a task more laborious, tedious, or irksome than that imposed on them.—Ibid.

SECRETARY TO THE GOVERNOR.—Capt. the Honourable Byron Carey, R.N. has been appointed secretary to the Honourable the Governor of Bombay.

MARKETS.

From the 1st to 11th May inclusive.

Thursday Afternoon, May 11, 1848.—The somewhat improved tone we noticed in our last report as then existing, has continued to the present moment, and there has been quite as much activity in our import market as is usual at this period of the year. There has also been increased activity in our export market for some days past, and, as will be seen elsewhere, considerable business has been done. In money matters, too, we are happy to be able to notice an improved tone; the bank has reduced its rates of discount an additional one per cent. and there is now a feeling of confidence which we doubt not will continue to increase.

COTTON PIECE GOODS.—The inquiry we stated in our last as existing for low Grey goods, especially for Madapollams and Jaconets, still continues, and some large sales of the former have been made. The market is quite bare of these descriptions of goods, and they are readily bought up as received by importers. For the foregoing goods, in a bleached state, the inquiry has not been so active. Grey Shirtings continue in fair demand for low makes, but middling and finer kinds are not in much favour. The same remark applies to these goods in a bleached state. Grey Domestic, of all kinds, are at present quite neglected. In Dyed and Fancy Goods we have not much to notice. Turkey Red Plain Cloth continues in limited inquiry at low prices. In Tweeled Cloth, and Turkey Red Prints, we hear of nothing doing.

COTTON YARN.—Owing to our market having been relieved by further shipments to Calcutta, holders have become firmer, and endeavour to obtain an advance on the low rates so long prevailing. This the buyers are not yet disposed to give, and consequently the business done since our last has been trifling, the only sales reported being as follow:—

70 Bales, 300 lbs. each, Mule Twist—No. 40 at 7 ans. per lb.; No. 52 at 8½ ans. per lb.
50 Bales, 200 lbs. each, Mule Twist—No. 20 at 6½ ans. per lb.; No. 30 at 6½ ans. per lb.; No. 40 at 7 ans. per lb.; No. 50 at 8 ans. per lb.

50 Bales, 200 lbs. each; Water Twist—No. 20 at 6½ ans. per lb.; No. 30 at 7½ ans. per lb.; No. 40 at 8 ans. per lb.; No. 50 at 10 ans. per lb.

DYED YAKINS.—Orange continues in good enquiry, while Turkey Red is still more depressed.

COCHINHAL.—We have had heavy arrivals since the date of our last, and a decline has taken place. We hear of a sale of 2,000 lbs. at Rs. 3½ per lb., which we quote as the price of the day.

OPIUM.—We have no new feature to notice in this drug since the date of our last report. Holders are firm, and the price of the day is Rs. 1,050 per chest, at which we hear of business being done.

RECENT PROCEEDINGS AT SHANGHAI.

British Consulate Office, Shanghai, March 28, 1848.

RESTRAINTS.

Her Majesty's Consul has much pleasure in stating, for the information of the British community, that the coercive measures he saw himself compelled to adopt fifteen days ago have been followed by complete success. The ten ringleaders in the outrage at Tsingpoo, demanded on the 13th instant, have this day been produced by the neetae, or provincial judge of the province: two of the most vicious and dangerous were at once distinctly identified by the parties who had suffered from their violence, and several of the remainder were recognized as having been among their assailants.

These ten offenders, in the presence of Her Majesty's Consul, the injured parties, all the local authorities, and a large number of assistants, were put in the cage on the spot, to which punishment they are sentenced for one month, prior to any further proceedings against them; and they will be exposed every day during that period in the public thoroughfares, as a warning to all who are in like manner evil disposed. The fullest satisfaction and redress having thus been afforded, it only remains for Her Majesty's Consul to announce that the embargo on the grain junks has been removed, and that from this date all duties will be paid as heretofore.

In reference to those remaining due for ships already cleared, communications will be made from the consulate to the parties interested in due time.

The peaceful, and in every sense happy, termination of difficulties which at one time threatened to compromise British interests at the port is most satisfactory. Her Majesty's consul, remembering the unanimity and cheerfulness with which the community signified their readiness to meet any inconvenience the necessity for coercive measures might entail, rejoices that the end has been attained without loss or sacrifice; and the cordial support received from the consular representatives of foreign powers at Shanghai, who at once identified themselves with the measures taken as for a common cause, has not, it may safely be assumed, failed in its effect.

How much is due to the judgment and decision with which a partial blockade of peculiar difficulty has been maintained during fifteen days by Captain Pitman, of H. M.'s brig Chidlers, must be known to the whole community, who have daily witnessed the unwearied vigilance and good temper evinced by the officers and men under his command. This task has been accomplished, not only without injury to the large Chinese traffic on the river, but without hostile collision or any bad feeling having been excited—a result on which they may well be congratulated.

Security to life and property, which for a moment seemed endangered, it is hoped is now more firmly established than before the outrage; and with prudence and forbearance such as his countrymen have already manifested, and which he fully counts upon whenever their excursions may lead them to a distance from Shanghai, her Majesty's consul is sanguine that they will no longer be exposed to dangers or molestation from those whom impunity might otherwise have emboldened.

RUTHERFORD ALCOCK,
H. B. M. Consul.

LOSS OF THE SCHOONER PARADOX.—SEVEN PERSONS DROWNED.—On Saturday last, as the small schooner Paradox, on her way from Canton with passengers, was entering the harbour from the Cap-sing-moon passage, she was caught in a heavy squall, and having all sail set, was capsized, and went down, stern foremost. Dr. and Mrs. James were below in their cabin at the time, and sunk with her. Mr. Ash, nephew of Mr. Sword, of Canton, three Chinamen, and a Chinese female servant, were also drowned. The remaining three passengers and the crew were picked up by the lorch Canton, and a boat belonging to the schooner Zephyr, which fortunately chanced to be close to the Paradox at the time. Efforts have since been made, hitherto unsuccessfully, to raise the schooner, which is said to have contained property belonging to one of the passengers to a considerable amount.

DEPARTURE OF SIR JOHN DAVIS.—Sir John Davis sailed for England to-day in the Pekin. About one o'clock the garrison was drawn out, and lined the road from Government-House to the wharf, where a guard of honour was stationed. Sir John passed down the line, in company with the governor, the secretaries, and other officials, and was met on the Queen's Road by the general and staff, and members of the several departments. He embarked under a salute from the field-pieces on the wharf, the governor and principal officials accompanying him on board. As the steamer passed down the harbour a salute of 17 guns was fired by the Melampus.—China Mail, March 30.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

LONDON.

THURSDAY, June 22, 1848.

THIS evening the great battle in the House of Commons between truth and falsehood, humanity and common sense, humanity and cruelty, good faith and treachery, honesty and fraud, is to be resumed, perhaps decided. The question whether we shall adhere to the solemn renunciation of slavery and the slave-trade, which stands recorded against us, or rush again into the enjoyment of its profits, is at issue: and a momentous question it is. The miserable semblance of temporary protection to free labour sugar offered by those who administer the affairs of the country is a mockery. It will not retard the ruin of the West-India colonies one hour: it will not cause a single additional beegah of cane to be planted in India. If the ministerial measure be carried, the colonies, East and West, are doomed to barrenness; the miserable inhabitants of Africa are doomed to a multiplication of the horrors under which they have long groaned, to an extent exceeding the power of imagination to conceive; and the character of the people of England is doomed to eternal infamy. Shall we retrace our steps, and let loose the demons whom we have partially chained, or not? This is the question. Let us, before we reply in the affirmative, at least know what we are about; and for this purpose let us turn to the evidence lately taken before the Parliamentary Committee on Sugar and Coffee. A witness born in the United States, but naturalized in Brazil, and who appears to have been nearly all his life conversant with the subject on which he was called to give evidence, thus describes the mode of conveying slaves from Africa to those countries which are to furnish us with cheap sugar:—"They" (the slaves) "are generally boys from ten to twelve years of age; they are put upon their side, and if they do not lie parallel upon their side, a plank is put upon them, and a sailor will get upon it and jam them down, so as to make them fit compact." Being asked, "At what distance apart are the different decks?" the witness answers, "That is left arbitrarily with the captain. Some of the American vessels are about seven to eight feet between the decks; some are only seventy-two inches between the beams. They have generally three tiers, one on the ground and two above." The witness hereupon being asked—"Do you mean that in the height of seventy-two inches, that is to say six feet, there are three tiers of slaves?" he answers "Generally!" In answer to a remark from one of the committee—"You have frequently seen this with your own eyes?" he replied, "Yes! Anybody may see it in Brazil." Thus much for the lodging of these wretched beings. Now for the extent to which provision is made for alleviating the agony of tropical thirst aggravated as it must be to an almost unbearable degree by the frightful mode of package adopted. The witness says on this point—"They get a drink of water once a day. In a state of inactivity you may exist upon that for twenty days, perhaps, as I know from my own experience; but not much longer than twenty days, because the system fails rapidly after that. It is too horrible to describe the effect of the want of water; no person can have an idea of it without feeling it." The dens in which the slaves are stowed are never cleansed during the voyage, and the reason is thus given by the witness whom we have quoted: "You dare not bring many of them upon the deck; because, seeing the water, many of them would be tempted to jump overboard, and even to drink salt water." In one instance, out of a cargo of 160 slaves, only ten were saved; this fearful mortality arising from the want of water. "It was said, both by the captain and the owner of those slaves, that there was only water sufficient for a drink once in three days," hence this mortality! This was an extraordinary case; but in ordinary ones the mortality is frightful. And what of those who survive? What is their condition? Let the witness speak again: and first of the ten who retained life while 150 of their brother sufferers perished. The owner, when he went to look at them, said, "They look so miserable, that I am ashamed to have anything to do with them. If any one will give me 300 milreas (which would be about 37l.) I will sell them." And he did sell them for this price. Ten human beings—ten rational creatures destined to exist through eternity—were sold for 37l.; that is, for 3l. 14s. each! But passing from this to the ordinary run of cases, what do we find? The witness was asked, "What is the condition?"—that is, the usual condition—"of the slaves when they are landed?" And he describes it thus: "There are some with more iron constitutions than others; but to see them, they look horrible. The bones of the knees stand out, and look like large knobs: the calf of the leg has disappeared; it looks more like the leg of a monkey than any thing else, and you can count all the bones. The abdomen is very much bloated, and there is an imbecility in the eye; in fact, nature is reduced to the lowest point." Such are the effects of the traffic which English ministers, if supported by an English Parliament, are prepared to uphold, to perpetuate and to extend! We, we, the people of England, if we insist on cheap sugar, are accountable for all these atrocities. What says the witness above referred to,—a naturalized Brazilian, be it remembered?—"Since you have crushed the West-India islands, SUGAR PLANTATIONS IN BRAZIL HAVE RISEN UP TO A LARGE EXTENT." Nor will their owners ever want slaves. The profits of this execrable trade are enormous. "One cargo of slaves is worth ten cargoes of dry goods," says the witness. Heavy losses are sometimes sustained, but profits are often realized of 600 per cent. or more! While the chance of such profits exists, Africa will continue to pour forth her myriad hordes of wretches to raise cheap sugar for the enrichment of the Brazilian cultivator and the gratification of the English love of sweets.

And where are the great opponents of slavery? We ask not where are the unprincipled tongue-jobbers who spouted at a given price per hour on the abominations of the slave system. They are easily accounted for; there is no more money to be got by abusing slavery, so they have tuned their venal voices to some other pitch. But we do ask, where are those anti-slavery champions who, in charity, might be supposed to have some portion of honesty? A few are yet in the field; but where are the rest? Fighting under the banners of free trade in defence of slavery! thus proclaiming themselves shameless hypocrites, and nothing else. It is almost disgraceful to descend to argue with such persons; else we might ask, what has the sugar question to do with free trade? The British sugar growers and manufacturers ask for a differential duty—not to protect them against fair competition; not because their lands are less fertile or less favourably situated; not because of any natural disadvantages to which they are subjected, but because of a disadvantage which is the creation of the British Legislature. They have been compelled to discontinue the employment of slave labour; this is well; but can you expect them, then, to compete with those who still employ it? Yes, says the thorough-paced free-trader, who, however, forgot his free trade when he consented to shackle the British planter by refusing to allow him to hold slaves. How monstrous is this! You say to a shopkeeper, you may exercise your industry and use your capital to the best advantage, so as to undersell your neighbours if you can, provided you buy and sell honestly; but you must not resort to fraud or theft. Nothing can be fairer. But if you allow their competitors to steal, and countenance and aid them in stealing, is this fair? But what if those who laid down these good rules against fraud and theft should forthwith betake themselves to the purchase of stolen goods because they were cheaper—would not the shopkeeper be justified in denouncing them as hypocrites and cheats? It would be no answer to say, we do not steal, we would not steal for the world; we only buy these goods, because they are cheap, and we must buy in the cheapest market, or we shall be excommunicated by the RICARDO Club. Of a truth, the encouragement of slave-grown commodities, after declaring the toleration of slavery to be a national sin, is the grossest instance of hypocrisy which the annals of the world can furnish.

We have heard it said that the degree of difference claimed for the free producers is not enough; and this is true. They do not ask it as all that they are entitled to, but all they are likely to get. An honest creditor ought to receive twenty shillings in the pound, but he cannot always get it. If his creditor be a rogue, or an insolvent, he must be content with a composition. Such is the situation of the British East and West India Sugar interests. They are dealing with insolvents—in principle, with bankrupts—in character, and they are struggling not for their due—obtaining that is out of the question—but for as large a dividend as they can lay hold of. Where is the modern statesman who does not bear on his front the brand of apostasy? We do not, in dealing with such men, appeal to their sense of justice. We do not think of urging them to consistency, any more than we think of exhorting a fallen woman to preserve her innocence. We may conjure her to pause in her career, and sin no more. And thus we may urge the Legislature, who, having abolished slavery in the British possessions, have repented them of the good deed, and thrown themselves into the embrace of foreign slaveholders, in like manner to pause. Stop, we cry, before a heavier weight of bloodguiltiness rests upon our country and upon you. Let not your hatred of those who are subjects of the same sovereign with yourselves, nor your love for all the world beside, lead you further on a road where crime is the guide, ruin the termination, and everlasting infamy the portion of those who pursue it.

PARLIAMENTARY PROCEEDINGS.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

JUNE 1.—The Defalcations of Sir Thomas Turton.—Lord Jocklyn asked whether it was true that a deficiency of £100,000 had been discovered in the accounts of the Ecclesiastical Registrar of the Supreme Court, whether it was proposed that such deficiency should be made up by the Government at home or by the East-India Company, and whether any steps would be taken to prevent the recurrence of such cases. — Sir JOHN HOBHOUSE said it was true a deficiency was discovered in the accounts of the ecclesiastical registrar, though not to the extent the noble lord supposed. The sureties, to the amount of £10,000, would go but a small way towards liquidating the amount, even supposing that they were good. The East-India Company would protest against the deficiency being charged on the revenues of India, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer would, he apprehended, equally protest against it being charged to the revenues of England. It had not been deemed advisable to take measures against Sir Thomas Turton, but the Government of India were preparing a bill to prevent for the future the occurrence of such deficiencies.

JUNE 15.—Sugar Duties.—Mr. MASTERMAN presented a petition from the East-India Company, praying for protection to sugar, the produce of British colonies.

The Reports of the Public Examiner and the Lieutenant-Governor were read by Mr. T. R. Clarke. The former stated that, in submitting only six names for the service of the artillery, he was limited by the wants of the service. He spoke also of a degree of diligence alike creditable to the cadets and the professors; alluded to the assurance he had received of attention paid to Hindustani, and to the competition for the chemical prize. The latter Report bore testimony to the excellent conduct of the gentlemen cadets, and to the exemplary attention paid by the corporal cadets to their important duties.

At the conclusion of the distribution of prizes, the CHAIRMAN addressed the cadets as follows:—"Gentlemen Cadets, I must express to you the gratification it has afforded me and my colleagues in the Direction here present to learn by the Report of the Public Examiner that you have been diligent in your studies, and that the progress you have made has been very creditable. It is also satisfactory to find that the Lieutenant-Governor has been enabled to report your general good conduct and regularity during the term. For these favourable results we are indebted to the zeal and energy of the Lieutenant-Governor, ably assisted as he has been by the exertions of the several professors and officers of the institution, and who are justly entitled to our best thanks. To the Public Examiner, also, for the interest which he has manifested in the welfare of the institution, and the discriminating judgment which he has shewn in estimating the proficiency of the pupils, our warmest thanks are due. Gentlemen, to such of you as are now about proceeding to India, I am induced by the interest I feel for your prosperity and welfare, and by the hope that the advantages you have derived from your education here may enable you to perform good service to your country, to offer a word of friendly advice, which will not, I trust, be less acceptable to you as proceeding from one who upwards of half a century since started like yourselves a cadet in the service of the East-India Company. (Cheers.) There is one qualification absolutely necessary for the due and efficient discharge of your public duty, and in which your personal interest is also most materially concerned. It is a competent knowledge of the language of the troops you will have under your command. The foundation of that knowledge has been laid here; cultivate it with assiduity; you will be rewarded by the comfort and ease with which you will be able to perform your duty, and be assured that, without that knowledge, you will never be advanced or promoted to any staff appointment, either regimental or general. (Hear, hear.) I am anxious to impress upon you that it is by no means difficult to secure the attachment and respect of the sepoy. His fidelity does him honour; his gallantry is unquestionable. Treat him, therefore, with a generous confidence; be forbearing and indulgent as regards his customs and prejudices; be mindful of his comforts, and convince him by your conduct that you have his real welfare at heart, and thus you will command his gratitude and devotion. (Cheers.) Ten years have passed since I addressed from this chair the cadets then leaving this institution, and to you I offer advice in nearly similar terms, being persuaded that, if you attend to it, it will prove greatly to your advantage. (Cheers.) Be punctual, cheerful, obedient, and active in the performance of your military duty, and you will gain the approbation and confidence of your superiors. (Cheers.) Be courteous and gentlemanly in your demeanour to all,—neither apt to give nor take offence, but always acting in a manner becoming the high-minded officer and gentleman,—and you will secure the respect and regard of your equals. (Cheers.) Be temperate in your manner of living, and prudent in your expenditure. This, with a firm reliance on the mercy and beneficence of God, will afford you the best hope of returning to your native country in health and independence, and thus reaping the just reward of a long and honourable course of public service. (Cheers.) You will, I am sure, remember this day, not only because it is, as it were, the commencement of your career in the honourable profession on which you are entering, but because it is graced by the presence of some illustrious members of that profession whose bright examples are well calculated to afford you stimulus and encouragement. (Great cheering.) One of these is the late Governor-General of India, Viscount Hardinge—(much applause)—alike distinguished in the field and at the council board, honoured by the approbation and favour of his sovereign, and enjoying the full confidence of the East-India Company. (Cheers.) The proceedings of this day are also honoured by the presence of Sir George Pollock. (Cheers.) Of him I will only repeat to you the inscription engraven on the Pollock Medal, which I have this day had the very great gratification to present to Cadet Williams, in the name of the inhabitants of Calcutta. It was established by them as a testimony of their high sense of the great and successful military services of Major-general Sir George Pollock, and as a means of stimulating young Indian soldiers to follow the bright example of that distinguished officer. The inscription is this:—"To commemorate eminent services. Cabul, 1842. Treachery avenged. British honour vindicated. Disasters retrieved. British captives delivered. Khyber Pass forced. Jelalabad relieved. Victories of Mamoo Khail, Jugdulluck, Tezeen, and Istaliff. Military Seminary, Addiscombe. Presented by the British inhabitants of Calcutta, and awarded by the Court of Directors of the East-India Company to the most distinguished cadet of the season." To you, Gentlemen Cadets, who will return here after the vacation, one word at parting. I will encourage the hope that what you have witnessed here this day will stimulate you to increased exertions, and that when I next meet you I shall have abundant proofs that such has been your determination." (Loud cheers.)

After the Chairman had concluded his speech,

Viscount HARDING rose and requested the Chairman's permission to say a few words. His Lordship, who was enthusiastically received by the whole company, said:—"It is not my intention to make any addition to the able and friendly advice which has been given by the Chairman, but I will say that, having had great experience during the last four years of the military service of the Indian army, I can most conscientiously affirm that in no country is the engineer and artillery part of that service excelled. (Applause.) In the examinations which have taken place to-day, I have witnessed with great satisfaction the manner in which the cadets destined for these services have acquitted themselves. (Hear, hear.) It has also given me great pleasure to see Lieut.-col. Abbott, of the Indian service, present on this occasion, when I remember how greatly he distinguished himself as superintendent engineer on the north-western frontier. (Applause.) In the field I found him gallant, and skilled in the operations of war. By his aid we passed the Sutlej on a bridge of boats, and he conducted himself on the field in such a manner as to contribute very essentially to the victory of Sobraon. (Cheers.) After the battle he threw a bridge across the Sutlej, and that very night 10,000 men crossed into the Punjab. (Applause.) Now we owe that to the skill of an officer who, a few years ago, was a cadet at this College. Sir Charles Pasley told me that, 25 years ago, he saw him busily engaged in laying down a pontoon bridge, like that constructed to-day, at Chatham. (Applause.) But this is not all. I have seen Col. Forbes, of the Bengal presidency, who was also educated at this Seminary, sent for to this country to introduce at the Royal Mint the superior machinery which he had succeeded in constructing at Calcutta. I will mention another instance, to show the young men before me the benefit which they may derive in pursuing with diligence the studies necessary to qualify them for the department of engineers. The example I allude to is that of an officer who, after performing most valuable services in the dockyards at Calcutta, retired to this country, and on his return home was at once employed by the Admiralty, on account of his extraordinary skill. (Hear, hear.) But it is not only the department of engineers in the Indian army that has distinguished itself; the artillery also have served their country nobly. (Applause.) You have one great living instance of that in Sir George Pollock. (Loud applause.) We owe to him some of the most important services that have ever been rendered in India: the Khyber Pass was forced by him; the vindication of the honour of our arms was, with other exploits, most ably accomplished by my gallant friend. (Great cheering.) There was another instance of brilliant success achieved by an artillery officer, in the case of Sir Henry Lawrence. (Applause.) That officer, after being actively employed in the Burmese war, was engaged at Rangoon when I sent for him to supply the post vacant by the death of the gallant Major Broadfoot. I sent for him to come to the frontier; and, after the victory of Sobraon, I selected him to govern a kingdom containing three millions of subjects. (Hear, hear.) Having acted in that capacity, he has since been honoured by her Majesty, who has conferred on him the order of the Bath, and raised him to the brevet rank of lieutenant-colonel. (Loud applause.) Having said so much of the engineer and artillery departments, I must now be permitted to claim some merits on behalf of the infantry and cavalry services. I belong to the former service myself, and to the latter belongs my gallant friend, Sir James Lubbock (cheers), who now for the third time fills the office of Chairman of the Court of Directors (cheers), and who has been placed in that position solely from the high respect and esteem in which he is held. (Loud cheers.) My gallant friend, General Galloway, whom I see here, has led two forlorn hopes, and was desperately wounded at Bhurtpore. (Cheers.) And I could quote many other names of the highest distinction in these branches of the service. (Applause.) There is no service which presents higher rewards to fidelity and end then that of the East-India Company. (Hear, hear.) When, therefore, war is necessary, and you have to draw your sword, I doubt not that you will wield the weapon with the same firm and dauntless courage as your predecessors, and that through life you will conduct yourselves like men of honour, and deserve the approbation of your country. (Loud applause.)

At the close of the proceedings, the Directors and their friends partook of a very elegant déjeuner, which was prepared for the occasion in the Lieutenant-Governor's residence.

Mathematical Department.—The mathematical examination was according to the following course, by the Rev. Jonathan Cape, A.M. For the Engineers:—Hydrostatics and hydrodynamics; theory of curved lines and conic sections, chaps. 1 to 7; the 2nd and 3rd parts of algebra, chaps. 10 to 14, and chap. 16 comprehending the theory of equations and expansion of series; differential calculus, chaps. 1 to 4; ditto chap. 5, and integral calculus, chaps. 1, 3, and 4; spherical trigonometry; astronomy, chaps. 1 to 3. For the Artillery:—Geometry, chaps. 4 and 5; application of algebra to geometry; trigonometry (analytical), part 2, chap. 3; statics, chaps. 1, 3, and 4; dynamics, to the end of projectiles, chap. 5. For the Infantry:—Geometry, chaps. 1 to 3, and problems (not including those on the ground); logarithms; trigonometry, part 1; mensuration.

The Public Examiner, Major-General Sir Charles Pasley, K.C.B., reported favourably of the manner in which the cadets severally acquitted themselves in the above tests.

Fortification Department.—In the fortification department, the proceedings commenced as usual at the cold-stream, where a barrel-bridge was formed across this piece of water, over which a gun, timbered up, was passed, and the cadets passed three deep. Other bridges had been previously constructed. The usual submarine explosion by the Voltaic battery was then exhibited, and the Chairman proceeded to the field-work, where the attack of Vauban's first system, modelled in sand, was explained by Cadets Boulnois and Yeoman. The company then proceeded to the sand modelling hall, which was full of models, beautifully executed in sand. One, representing the circular system of the late Professor Bordwine, was explained by Cadets Williams and Lucas. The crown work of Lodi was explained by Cadet Smalpage. A proposed redoubt, by Capt. Bainbridge, of the Royal Engineers, was explained by Cadet Basevi; and a front of the German system was explained by Cadets Goddard and Salkeld. All the above were on the scale of a quarter of an inch to a foot. Emaumgurrh (a fort in Scinde) was explained by Cadet Gillespie. There was also a tower, modelled after a plan proposed by Capt. Nelson, of the Royal Engineers. These were constructed on a scale of half an inch to a foot. The Chairman then proceeded to the examination hall, where other cadets were examined in the subject of fortification. The plans and drawings exhibited in this department were of the usual character.

An important improvement has been introduced during last term, by requiring the vertical etching, or shading, hitherto usual in military drawing, to be disused, and the system of contouring, or of horizontal etching, to be exclusively adopted, as has been done for some years in the trigonometrical survey of Great Britain by Major-general Colby, with whom this improvement originated. Mr. E. B. Metcalf, the very able instructor of the cadets in military drawing, has carried this system into effect with much success, of which the above drawings afford a proof.

Landscape Drawing Department.—Many of the drawings in this department are very brilliant, and exceedingly well finished, especially those by Gentlemen Cadets A. Boulnois, G. Goddard, P. Salkeld, H. Maxwell, F. Lambert, E. Williams, T. Smalpage, and several others of the first class. The prize in this class was given to Gentleman Cadet A. Boulnois. In the second class, the prize for the best landscape was awarded to Gentleman Cadet A. Ballard; but the various drawings shown by Gentlemen Cadets J. McN. Innes, T. Harward, T. E. Gahagan, E. T. Chesney, T. H. McLeod, and A. Bogle, are, like those of the first class, very effectively wrought out, and beautifully clear in the colouring.

DEBATES AT THE EAST-INDIA HOUSE.

On Wednesday, the 14th inst., a Special General Court of Proprietors of East-India Stock was held at 12 o'clock, at the request of nine proprietors, and for the purpose expressed in the following requisition:—

"To the Hon. the Chairman and Directors of the Hon. the East-India Company.

"Gentlemen,—We, the undersigned Proprietors of East-India Stock, request that you will have the goodness to convene a General Court of Proprietors, on the earliest day that may be convenient, for the purpose of laying before them the following resolution:—

"That, adverting to the present depressed state of the sugar-trade, and to the evidence by which it has been proved to a committee of the House of Commons that, without a further time of preparation, the sugar-growers of British India are not in a fit position to compete with the slave-owners of the Brazils and Cuba,—to the duty incumbent on Great Britain to give a fair trial, at least, to free labour, as opposed to the inhuman system of slavery,—and to the vast importance to the manufactures of this country, as well as to the Government and people of India, that encouragement should be given to the increased exportation of raw produce, both as affording returns to the British merchants and as facilitating the enormous remittances which are annually required from India on public and private accounts,—a petition be presented to Parliament, praying that they will, in consideration of these circumstances, adopt the recommendation of the committee of the House of Commons aforesaid, by imposing a differential duty of 10s. per cwt. in favour of the produce of British possessions for the period of six years."

(Signed)

"ARIEL SMITH,
DAVID CHARLES GUTHRIE,
ALEX. GRANT,
WM. ALBERT HANKEY,
EDWARD HENRY CHAPMAN,

J. DEACON,
JOHN A. ARBUTHNOT,
THOS. SMITH,
FREDERICK GREEN."

The minutes of the last general Court having been read,—

The CHAIRMAN (Lieut.-gen. Sir JAMES LAW LUSHINGTON, G.C.B.) said, the Court had been specially summoned at the request of nine proprietors, which requisition would be read.

The above letter having been read,—

Mr. ARBUTHNOT rose to move the resolution contained therein. He should but briefly state the case to the Court, leaving to others more able than himself to enlarge thereon. There was no doubt that the East-India trade had for some time past been declining, and he did not hesitate to say that it arose in a great measure, if not entirely, from the depression in the home market. The price of sugar at home now was so low, that it could not be raised in India at the price for which it was sold in this country. (Hear.) There could be no hope but in a protective duty on the produce of our colonies. At present, it was utterly impossible that we could compete with slave grown sugar. The cost of production of sugar per cwt. was, in India, 22s.; in Cuba, 8s.; in Porto Rico, 8s. 6d.; and in the Brazils, perhaps, 10s. It was useless, then, for our colonies to attempt competing with the slave-holders. Various reasons might be assigned for the above fact, with respect to prices. The slaveholder had unlimited power over his slaves; he could make them work eighteen hours a day, and on Sunday; and, with the aid of the lash, he could get a great deal more labour, and at a much lower price, out of his workmen, than one who employed free labourers. When slavery was permitted in the West Indies, the cost per cwt. of the production of sugar was 6s. 6d.; since the abolition of slavery, however, the price had risen to 19s. 6d. per cwt. This clearly evidenced the inutility of opposing free labour to that which was compulsory. (Hear, hear.) Even America, where slavery was partially permitted, could not compete with the slave-grown sugar of Cuba. Unless protection were afforded to our own colonies, the production and exportation of sugar must cease in India! In 1851, all differences in the duty on foreign and colonial sugar would cease, and on that cessation the extinction of colonial sugar-growing must take place. (Hear.) When Parliament determined that colonial sugar should have a protective duty, many parties in this country, on the faith of Government, embarked large sums in the sugar-trade of India. In a very short period, the exportation of sugar from Bengal was raised from 8,000 tons per annum to 66,000. (Hear.) He would leave the Court to reflect on those facts. It was a dictum of free-traders, that if you took care of the imports, the exports would take care of themselves; but he would ask the men of Manchester if they thought it likely that they would be enabled to export their goods to India while we took nothing in return from that country. Specie could not always be brought from India; we must take part of our remittance in produce, otherwise it was impossible for the country to withstand the drain of gold. (Hear.) The value of exports from India in 1815, from June to November, was upwards of one million; for the same period in 1847, it was £600,000. Here was a falling off in two years; and that decline would yearly become greater. (Hear, hear.) He would say one word with reference to the latter part of the resolution, relating to the effect on the revenue of India. About £3,700,000 was annually required to be drawn from India to meet the expenses of the Indian Government in this country. Now to take this sum all in specie, and without taking any of the produce of the country, must have a very serious effect on the prosperity of India. It was not just to our good subjects, the natives of that country, to take so large an amount of capital annually from them, and give them none in return. What return could we make to them for depriving them of the export trade? In 1816, the value of Indian imports into this country was estimated at £1,000,000; at the present time it was next to nothing. How impossible was it, then, that India should continue her prosperity when so large a market for exports was cut off. He, therefore, on those grounds, urged the adoption of the resolution, that a petition be presented to Parliament in favour of the differential duty of 10s. per cwt., as recommended by the committee of the House on this subject. The opinion of that committee, he might observe, was entitled to great consideration, emanating, as it did, from a body composed nearly equally of two great and antagonistic parties. He sincerely hoped the Legislature would listen to the prayer of their petition, and do justice to the British colonies. (The hon. proprietor resumed his seat amid loud cheers.)

Mr. HANKEY seconded the resolution, though he was well aware there were many others more capable of following the details of the question than he. In all that the hon. proprietor who had just sat down had said he entirely concurred; but he confessed it was not the commercial, nor yet the financial view of the case that had most weight with him. He regarded it in a much higher light. He looked at the moral and religious character of the question. When he remembered the period of the slavery abolition, and the ardour with which that question was discussed, and supported not only by every class of religionists, but by the country at large, and the strong desire that then existed to suppress the abominable traffic in slavery, he could not but be sorry to find that, notwithstanding the abhorrence of the nation, those feelings had latterly been disregarded, and our countenance, it might be indirectly, but yet very surely, had been given to the accursed slave-trade. (Cheers.) He was a free-trader, but under certain limitations; he was a friend to unshackled commerce, but only to a certain extent. (Hear.) Free-trade, fully carried out, was, he was afraid, but like the Trojan horse, and carried in its entrails a principle abhorrent to justice and religion. (Hear, hear.) To free-trade he would observe, "hitherto shall thou go, but no further;" and its principles he would adopt only so far as they did not interfere with his higher duties. (Hear.) Our colonial interests were sacrificed to obtain the freedom of the slave; the British legislature had manfully stepped forward to set him free and to raise him to a higher station, but now all the hopes of the friend of the slave had been disappointed, and the slave-trade was carried on with the indirect sanction of the British Parliament. (Cheers.) The measure of 1846 had the effect, undesigned, perhaps, though it were, of taking away from our colonial planters the power of cultivating their estates. (Hear.) When slavery was abolished, the planters were recommended to improve the method of culture, and by machinery to effect the labour of the slaves. They attended to this advice. They expended fortunes in the erection of costly machinery and in carrying out great improvements, but now all this was turned to their disadvantage; for if they increase the quantity of sugar, they only increased their own loss, and hastened their final ruin. (Cheers.) The consequence was, that estates were abandoned, or else the planter returned to the former imperfect mode of cultivation. (Hear.) He wished the country would take the question as he did. Important as it was in a financial and commercial point of view, it was of vastly more importance in the light in which he regarded it, and he hoped and trusted the country would be roused to a due sense of their obligations to God and man. (Cheers.) He would, in concluding, only observe that the act by which slavery was enured, raged to the destruction of our colonies was a direct violation of a solemn engagement previously made. The abolition of the slave-trade was a compact between this country and its God, like the compacts in the days of Israel, and therefore the destruction of that compact must be most awful. In most cordially seconding the motion, he trusted that the country at large would not be backward on this important occasion. (Cheers.)

The CHAIRMAN.—Gentlemen, I hope the Court will excuse me rising thus early to address you, but I thought it my duty to inform you at once that the Court of Directors entirely approved and most cordially support the resolution of the hon. proprietor Mr. Arbuthnot. (Loud cheers.) The hon. proprietor observed in his speech how important it was that the resources of India should be developed to their fullest extent. In that I entirely agree, but if this petition be not adopted, one of India's greatest resources will be cut off. (Hear, hear.) It will not only be a great hardship to that country and this Company, but also to many of the commercial world who have sent over their capital to India, and perhaps embarked all their fortune in the cultivation of sugar in that country. (Hear, hear.) How important to India the continuance of her sugar cultivation is it is not necessary for me to say. It has been so extensively cultivated, that while in 1835-6 the quantity grown was only 184,000 tons, in a few years after it amounted to upwards of 1,000,000 tons. (Hear.) The effect, then, of its discontinuance may be easily imagined. (Hear, hear.) In regard to revenue, it is of great importance that this article should not be thrown out of cultivation. The amount annually remitted to this country from India is somewhere about £3,600,000; of this sum about £1,500,000 has been hitherto remitted in sugar. (Hear.) But should sugar be thrown out of cultivation, and there seems a great probability of its being so unless something be done to assist us, there will be the greatest difficulty in receiving from India the necessary amount of revenue. It is of the utmost importance, then, that we should receive some assistance, and I think we cannot better facilitate this object than by presenting a petition to Parliament. (Cheers.) A clearer case, I think, was never made out than that we have heard to-day. (Hear, hear.) One thing is quite clear, that India cannot cultivate sugar at such a price as successfully to compete with slave-grown produce (hear, hear); and it seems to me to be a great dereliction of duty, after the enormous sacrifices we have made to obtain the suppression of slavery, to give a new impetus to that trade. (Hear, hear.) I do not know that I need trouble the Court further than again to observe, that the Court of Directors entirely concur in the resolution. (Loud cheers.)

Mr. WEEDING said this was not the first time this question had been brought before the Court. His hon. friend Mr. Tucker had, in 1823, seconded a motion of similar import to this, and in 1835 he (Mr. Tucker) presented a petition to the General Court, for its approbation, to the same effect. In 1833 and 1836 he (Mr. Weeding) had the honour to introduce similar petitions. (Hear, hear.) The distress of the sugar planters in India had been principally caused by the Act of 1846 (hear, hear), which graduated the difference of duty between slave and free-labour sugar till in 1851 all distinctive duties would cease. (Hear, hear.) On examining the evidence taken before the late committee on coffee and sugar planting, it was impossible to come to any other conclusion than that at which the committee had arrived, namely, that a differential duty of 10s. per cwt. should be imposed in favour of our colonial produce. (Cheers.) That amount of protection the gentlemen who called the present Court had also asked; but he would not conceal his opinion, that this duty was not enough. (Hear, hear.) It was clear that free-labour sugar could not compete with slave-produced sugar, and therefore the former must be protected, otherwise the sugar factories of India would be abandoned, and British India would cease to produce sugar for exportation. (Hear.) The manufacturers in the country were interested in this question, for they had displaced the exports of India as regarded cottons and woollens, and even supplanted the home trade to the extent of 3,000,000 or 4,000,000 a year. This would, of course, be increased if the produce of the land in India were encouraged (hear, hear), otherwise it would decline. Sugar was a favourite article of produce in India, and that country could supply us with sufficient, if justice were done to her ryots. (Hear, hear.) But they could not contend against the slave-grown produce; they must have protection. (Cheers.) By improving the resources of the land of India, we should not only improve the condition of the people, but also render their means of prosperity more easy. India, besides paying all her own expenses, remitted a large revenue to this country annually, and in addition we had the advantage of her commerce. On these grounds she was entitled to great consideration at our hands, and her claim to justice ought not to be disregarded. (Cheers.) As regarded the slave question, a protective duty ought to be imposed on free-labour produce, and then slavery would be cut up by the roots. (Hear, hear.) For these reasons we ought to give protection to free labour. That was the measure now sought for, and he sincerely trusted it would be successful. (Loud cheers.)

Mr. FIELDER thought it a very harsh and cruel thing that England, after obtaining a footing in India, should treat it in the manner she had. (Hear.) India remitted annually nearly four millions to this country, and in return we had only increased her debt most enormously. (Hear.) That country supported its own army, navy, and civil service; gave honourable and profitable employment to thousands of our countrymen, besides sending over annually the sum he had just alluded to, and therefore we ought not to suffer her just claims on us to be disregarded. (Hear, hear.) On the score of religion and morality, too, it was our duty to retrace our steps in this case, and it was to both our own and India's interest that we should adopt the course proposed. (Cheers.)

Mr. STRACHAN said we stood under such great obligations to India, that all must regret the loss in her staple article of produce, cotton, though they might hope that when a more liberal colonial policy was adopted she might by other articles repair the damage done her. (Hear, hear.) Sugar-planting had of late years been greatly attended to in India, and very largely developed. A periodical devoted to the interests of India said, "In 1836 we exported sugar to the value of £165,000, and last year (1847) the value amounted to upwards of £1,600,000." He believed there was no instance of such rapid increase in any previous period. (Hear.) Last year, India supplied England with more than half the amount of sugar required, and there could be no doubt of her ability to furnish enough for the entire consumption of the country. (Hear, hear.) It could be easily proved to the Manchester manufacturers that it was of great importance to them for us to take a large and regular supply of sugar from India, as opening a wide field for the sale of their articles.

(Hear, hear.) The sugar-planting in India had been gradually ceasing. In the valuable evidence of Mr. Kemshead before the committee, he stated that "in 1841 we made no profit." In 1844 the loss was about £4,000 or £5,000, and in 1847 the total loss to the company, of which Mr. Kemshead was chairman, was £70,000. The company had now suspended operations, as the losses had more than balanced all former profits. (Hear, hear.) Now those facts deserved great attention, and it was the business of the Court to see if something could not be done to remedy the state of things. (Hear, hear.) It was absolutely necessary that Government should protect our colonial interest by a differential duty. (Hear.) Those who had expended capital in our colonies had a right to look for some protection. (Hear, hear.) The equalization of the duties, coupled with the emancipation of the slaves, had been the ruin of the West-Indian colonies. (Hear, hear.) There was no question that a great market for our manufactures could be opened in India; but could the Havannah and Brazils ever afford such a market. (Hear, hear.) On higher grounds, too, the subject deserved our attention. There could be no doubt that the bill of 1846 had given a great impetus to the slave-trade, and that the atrocities of that trade were as great as ever, if not greater. (Hear, hear.) In illustration of this fact, he would only read a short extract from a report of two native missionaries, who had advanced seventy miles up the country, perhaps further than any had gone before. While the missionaries were at this place, a neighbouring town was sold entire as slaves. "Another town," they wrote, "has been swept from off the face of the earth, in order that the slaveholders of Brazil may be the richer. The whole land is filled with sighs and tears." (Cheers.) The slave-trade, previously to the Act of 1846, had been gradually declining, but since then it had greatly revived. (Hear.) It only remained for him to say that he most heartily concurred in the resolution. (Cheers.)

Mr. SALOMANS said, a special case had been most clearly made out that day for the interference of Government, and he most cordially supported the resolution proposed. (Hear.) He believed that, with protection, free labour would in a few years be able to compete with slave labour on equal terms. (Hear.) He was glad Mr. Strachan had referred to the valuable evidence of Mr. Kemshead, which he recommended to the earnest attention of the Court. There could be no doubt that, from the abolition of slavery, the colonies had been most cruelly treated. (Hear.) Was it fair to manacle a man, and then bid him compete with a free man? (Cheers.) By our conduct we were jeopardizing the advantages of our colonies. (Hear.) We had encouraged the growth of sugar in India, but we could not compete with the produce of slave labour. (Hear.) He considered a complete case had been made out, and therefore he supported the resolution. (Cheers.)

Mr. GUTHRIE commenced by reading a protest against the Act of 1846 by several noble lords, including Lord Stanhope. The warnings of the protest had been completely fulfilled, and the effect then predicted had come to pass. (Hear, hear.) The hon. proprietor, who was very indistinctly heard, then went on to deprecate the Bill of 1846, whereby all distinctive duties between free-labour sugar and sugar produced by slavery gradually ceased. (Hear.) We had used our colonies shamefully. Let us take example by the manner in which France behaved to her colonies. She afforded a very large protection to the Mauritius planter, and America protected her native produce; but to the British planter there was to be no protection. (Hear, hear.) Now the protest he had just read was the opinion of certain peers; but their opinions might change. A few years might shew a very great difference in a man's sentiments. They would all admit that; and, indeed, a person lately very high in her Majesty's councils had, on more than one occasion, furnished an example of this change of opinion. (Laughter, and cheers.) But to shew that Lord Stanhope did not change his opinion on the subject, he might state that a letter was written a few days since by the noble lord, in which he reiterated the sentiments expressed in the protest. (Loud cheers.) The committee had awarded 10s. as a protective duty to the colonial producer, though that, perhaps, was not enough. (Hear, hear.) Sir Robert Peel had supported the measure of 1846, and it remained to be seen whether that consistent, good, and constitutional man would give his support to the present measure. The settlement of the question was of vast importance to India. The sugar-trade of that country, after a rapid and extraordinary rise, had now fallen, and was still declining frightfully. (Cheers.) They now saw the ruin predicted by those peers whose protest he had read. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. PRINSEP felt that he had some interest in this question, as he was in India when sugar-planting was beginning to be attended to, and he had participated in its commencement and progress. That a protective duty was necessary, was now amply proved, and it was required on the grounds of justice and public prosperity, religion and morality. (Hear, hear.) In India, when the impulse was given to the sugar-trade, the price rose from sixty to a hundred per cent., speculation was afloat, companies were formed, the staple articles of the country were in danger of being overlooked, and even indigo was in some degree supplanted; but now all was impending ruin. (Hear, hear.) Within a short time this promising prospect was overcast, and the seeds of ultimate disaster sown. In regard to the great increase of the slave-trade, there could be no doubt it resulted from the abolition of the distinctive duties. Yet the free-trader said, "You can't prevent the slave-trade, so let's enjoy its fruits in cheap sugar. Are we to have no cakes and ale because we are virtuous?" But we could prevent it,—in part, at least,—by not offering such encouragement to slave produce. (Cheers.) A deliberate compact entered into with the West-India proprietors had been wilfully broken. Suppose he were to employ a baker on condition that he should not bake on Sunday, should he be justified if he employed another baker who did bake on that day? Most assuredly not. Yet this was just the case between the Government and the West-India proprietors. (Cheers.) Away with such hypocrisy! (Loud cheers.) The free-trader says we must have the things that are cheapest, looking not to the manner in which those articles were produced. (Hear, hear.) Free trade excluded free labour from the market. (Hear, hear.) The slaveholder bought his labour, and used it as he would any other article of merchandise. He made his slaves work when he liked, how long he liked, and in every thing they were compelled to do his will. The whip of the taskmasters secured that compliance. (Cheers.) Yet the free-trader said we could not help it. But they could help it; and those who consoled themselves with that reflection were only endeavouring to throw the culpability from their own shoulders to those of another. (Hear.) Could it be expected that a man who was compelled to regulate the hours of work of his labourers according to law, to educate the young, provide medical treatment, and be in every respect bound by the law,—could it be expected that such a man could work as cheap as another who was bound by no laws whatever? (Cheers.) He maintained that protection was absolutely necessary, and ought to be afforded to all colonial and home produce, because foreign articles were not produced under such stringent laws as our own. (Hear.)

The resolution was then carried almost unanimously, but one hand out of a fully-attended Court being held up against it.

The following petition was then, after a few verbal amendments, adopted:—

To the Honourable the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland in Parliament assembled.

The Humble Petition of the East-India Company Sheweth,—

That your Petitioners, impressed with a deep sense of the danger which at present threatens the existence of the growth of Sugar, as an article of export from India to Great Britain, are desirous of making known to your Honourable House, the grounds of these apprehensions, and the probable consequences which may be expected to result from their realisation.

That it appears from a vast mass of evidence which has been laid before a Committee of your Honourable House, to be clearly established, that India cannot export Sugar to England in any quantity, except at a price much higher than that at which it is produced in those countries where slavery is permitted.

That, therefore, unless the produce of India be protected by an adequate differential duty, the growth of Sugar in that country for export must gradually diminish, and, finally, become altogether extinct.

That prior to the year 1846, while protection was afforded, a rapid increase in the export of sugar had been taking place, the supply from Bengal alone having been raised, within a period of ten years, from 7,184 tons to 67,379; while the export from Madras rose in five years from 177 tons to 8,673; but that owing to the check to cultivation, which has been experienced since the passing of the Act of 1846. Your Petitioners are credibly informed that many factories have ceased to work, and that the returns for the year ensuing, will exhibit a greatly reduced export.

That the exportation of goods from Great Britain to India has, until lately, amounted in value to upwards of four millions sterling, the amount of the home charges of the East-India Company, which have to be provided for by drafts on, or remittances from, India, to 3,700,000*l.* and the private tribute to about 500,000*l.* more.

That with a view to provide a medium of remittance for those large amounts, the continuation of the cultivation of Sugar in India is of vital importance, both as respects the welfare of the inhabitants of India, and the ~~success~~ of the East-India Company.

That already the Court of Directors of the East-India Company have found themselves compelled to order home large remittances in bullion, and that private merchants are adopting the same mode of getting home the returns for their shipments of merchandise, to their own great detriment, and to the manifest injury to the resources of India.

That the natives of India have strong claims on the consideration of this country, for that while they have lost, since the year 1816 by the competition of the British manufacturer, the exportation of manufactured goods to this country to the value of 1,669,488*l.* per annum, their home consumption has been superseded by upwards of three millions sterling in value of cotton goods which are now exported to India, and which are admitted at a duty of only five per cent. while the duty on the importation of British manufactures into Cuba is about 30 per cent.

That your petitioners having been informed that the Committee of your Honourable House above referred to have recommended a differential duty of 10*s.* per cwt. in favour of the produce of British possessions.

Your petitioners respectfully pray that your Honourable House will confirm and adopt that recommendation.

And your petitioners will ever pray.

The CHAIRMAN moved that Mr. Masterman be requested to present the petition to Parliament.

This motion being carried amid cheers,

Mr. MASTERMAN said he should have the greatest pleasure in presenting the petition. The Bill of 1846 he considered most unjust and impolitic. (Loud cheers.)

The Court on the motion then adjourned.

[See Parliamentary Proceedings, House of Commons, June 15th.]

Yesterday a Quarterly General Court of Proprietors of East-India Stock was held at 12 o'clock. The minutes of the last General Court having been read,

SUGAR DUTIES.

The CHAIRMAN (Lieutenant-General Sir JAMES LAW LUSHINGTON, G.C.B.) said, I have to acquaint the court that the seal of the Company has been affixed to the petition to the House of Commons, praying the House to adopt the recommendation of the committee appointed to inquire into sugar and coffee planting, namely, that a duty of 10*s.* per cwt. be imposed in favour of sugar, the produce of British possessions; and that the petition was presented to the House by Mr. Masterman, agreeably to the court's resolution.

RETURNS.

The CHAIRMAN laid on the table certain returns to orders of Parliament, accounts of superannuation, &c, granted since the last court.

DIVIDENDS.

The CHAIRMAN acquainted the court that the warrants for the payment of dividends would be ready for delivery on the 6th of July.

BY-LAWS.

The report of the committee of by-laws was brought up and read. It stated that the by-laws had been duly observed during the past year. The following gentlemen were re-elected members of the committee:—R. Twining, J. Hodgson, A. W. Roberts, W. G. Paxton, E. Goldsmid, T. Weeding, Esqrs.; Sir R. P. Glyn, Bart.; T. Fielder, Esq.; Sir C. Hopkinson, C. B.; H. S. Græme, H. F. Sandeman, W. Fox, J. Ewing, Esqrs. M. Clark and W. S. Jones, Esqrs., were elected in place of B. Barnard, Esq., and Lieutenant-Colonel R. Barnewell, both deceased.

SATTARA.

In answer to a question from Mr. Sullivan,

The CHAIRMAN stated that no instruction had yet been sent to India from the home authorities with respect to the disposition of the territories of Sattara.

IDOLATRY IN INDIA.

Mr. POYNDEE presented two petitions from Baptist congregations at Louth and Burton-on-Trent, praying for the cessation of all connection between the British Government and idolatrous temples in India. The hon. proprietor then gave notice of a motion on the subject for the next court.

THE LATE RAJA OF SATTARA.

Mr. LEWIS said, the hon. Chairman had stated that no instructions had been sent out to India with respect to the disposal of the territories of Sattara, but would he promise to lay any correspondence that might take place on the subject before the proprietors?

The CHAIRMAN could not undertake to make such a promise.

Mr. GEORGE THOMPSON said, that Appa Sahib, the Raja of Sattara, had died on the 5th of April last, and the court of Directors had received the intelligence of it more than a month ago. He complained of dilatoriness on the part of the court in not sending out instructions before now, although he believed the subject had been brought before the notice of the chairman and deputy-chairman.

The CHAIRMAN wished to state, that the subject had not been brought before the notice of the court, otherwise than in the simple announcement in a despatch from Bombay of the decease of the Rajah. In reply to that despatch, the court said, "We have to observe in reply to your letter of the 5th April, respecting Sattara, that we cannot say what course we shall take on this subject till we are made acquainted with the views of the Governor-General relating thereto."—(Hear, hear.)

INDIAN RAILWAYS.

Mr. SULLIVAN said, every one connected with India was anxious to know what course the directors intended to pursue in respect of the important subject of railways in India. A year since he drew the court's attention to the subject, and since that time two companies had expired through the withering neglect of the authorities, and he believed another was in the agonies of death.

The CHAIRMAN said it was true that two companies had expired, but if the honourable proprietor had seen the Times of that day, he must have observed that the request of the Bombay line for extension of time had been acceded to. He wished it distinctly to be understood, because an impression to the contrary seemed to prevail, that no member of that court could be more anxious to give India the advantages of railway communication than was the Court of Directors. (Hear, hear, and cheers.) The court was not idle in this matter, and the subject seriously engaged the attention both of them and of the Board also. (Hear, hear.)

Mr WARDRO denied the assertion of the hon. proprietor (Mr. Sullivan) that conveyance for produce and not protective duties was the want of India.

Mr. SULLIVAN said if the hon. gentleman alluded to the sugar duties, he would only observe that as regarded India, it was all stuff. The sugar duties was a West India question dressed up in an East India garb.

Mr. GEORGE THOMPSON said the necessity and advantage of railways to India were admitted by every one; and he hoped that if other companies were formed, they would be subjected to terms and conditions too hard for them to bear.

Mr. TWining had heard the remarks of the chairman with great satisfaction, and he believed that the court would agree with him in his appreciation of the agreeable information communicated by him. (Hear, hear.) He must say that the Court of Directors had always paid the utmost attention to the railway interest of India, and had treated every thing connected with the subject with the greatest consideration. (Hear, hear.)

In reply to a question of Mr. Sullivan,

The CHAIRMAN stated that there was no correspondence connected with Indian railways of sufficient importance to lay before the proprietors.

The Court then, on the motion, adjourned.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE LATE SIR ROBERT DICK, K.C.B., K.C.H.—A monument to the memory of this distinguished officer has just been completed by Mr. Lough. It is to be placed in the church of the gallant soldier's birth-place in Perthshire. In the upper portion a group of war trophies, flags, trumpets, &c. surround a laurel crown, within which are written the names of some of the battles and localities in which Sir Robert Dick was engaged, namely, "Maida, Egypt, Bassaco, Fuentes D'Onor, Salamanca, Waterloo." Beneath this is the following inscription: "Sacred to the memory of Major-General Sir Robert Henry Dick, K.C.B., K.C.H., who, after distinguished services in the Peninsula, in the command of a light battalion, at Waterloo, with the 42nd Royal Highland regiment, fell mortally wounded whilst leading the third division of the army of the Sutledge to the attack on the Sikh entrenched camp at Sohraon, on the 10th February, 1846. The officers who had the honour of serving under him in his last battle, and others, his friends, in her Majesty's and the Hon. East-India Company's service, in Bengal, have caused the monument to be placed in his parish church, in testimony of their respect and affection for a generous and considerate commander, a gallant and devoted soldier." In the lowest compartment of the monument is an elaborate and highly-finished composition, representing Sir Robert Dick receiving the fatal shot whilst at the head of his troops.

GREAT INDIAN PENINSULAR RAILWAY.—A meeting of the shareholders in this concern was held on the 9th instant, at which a letter from Mr. Melvill was read and adopted. It stated the terms with the East-India Company to be the grant, on the part of the East-India Company, of the necessary land, free of charge, for ninety-nine years, terminable, on the part of Government, at twenty-five or fifty, by the payment of the market value of the railway. 2nd. A guarantee, for twenty-five years, of five per cent., on a capital not exceeding £500,000, on condition that £30,000 was paid into the East-India Company's treasury before the 5th of January, 1848. Subsequently an extension of time for the payment of the £30,000 was granted, and on the 8th instant a letter was received from Mr. Melvill, stating the willingness of the East-India Company to extend the term for one month from the 24th ult.; and that this sum should be returned, with interest at five per cent., at the expiration of a further period of one month, if it could not be shewn that a railway company was able to carry on the undertaking without delay. To this the Railway Company objected, and a correspondence on the subject ensued. The meeting adjourned for a week. The Times of the 20th instant says, "We are glad to understand that a communication from the India House has been received by the Great Indian Peninsular Railway Company, conceding the full period required by the Company for the registration of their shareholders,—namely, four months from the 24th instant."

A PAIR OF PARADOXES.—Bright, the cotton-spinning Quaker, is a professed, it might almost be said, professional philanthropist, a semi-angel in drab and smalls, a universal brother, though it must be confessed, that many who have experienced his fraternity find it infinitely more like the hug of a bear than the embrace of a brother, yet he is at the same time a strong advocate of the Sugar Bill of 1846, although that measure revived the slave-trade with tenfold horrors. Cobden, the "apostle of peace," and the representative of the seat of the anti-slavery movement, is equally vehement in supporting the measure of 1846. What is the reason of these startling paradoxes. Is it that, as every farthing of the immense fortunes of this worthy pair is stained with the blood of starved, overtaken men, women, and children, these Arcades ambo—cotton lords both—count as nothing the annual sacrifice, at the shrine of cheapness, of some few thousand blacks? Poor philanthropy stands but a small chance against pocket, and the gentle, soft-spoken Quaker, who, in his love for his fellow creatures, is so eagerly anxious for the abolition of hanging (it is to be hoped from no personal apprehension), sees nothing hateful in the deaths of innocent men, provided their complexion be darker than his own; to him the slave-trade has no horrors; but while sipping his bohea sweetened by sugar made cheap by human blood, he clasps his hands, throws up his eyes, and lays this flattering unction to his soul—"Verily, John, thou art very righteous."

MILITARY MEMORIALS.—Two very appropriate monuments to the memory of the officers and men of the 16th Lancers and 31st Foot who fell during the Sikh campaign, are about to be erected in Canterbury Cathedral. The cavalry tribute is composed of white marble. The pediment contains the regimental devices, within a wreath of laurel, with the medals, &c., on either side. The middle panel exhibits an alto-relief group of a private of the 16th Lancers discovering his officer wounded on the field, and reclining against a palm-tree. In the background is the soldier's horse. The tablet is flanked by columns which bear the names of the officers and men who fell during the campaign. The lower plinth bears the inscription. The infantry monument is somewhat plainer than its companion. The groundwork is composed of black marble, the tablet being white. The latter is surmounted by the shattered flags of the regiment. In the foreground is a representation of one of Runjeet Singh's ponderous guns, and on either side are Sikh trophies, with branches of laurels, medals, and other emblems. Adjoining, on each corner, on bronze scrolls, are the words "Moodkee, Ferozeslah, Aliwal, Sohraon."—Morning Post, June 13.

LOSS OF THE ABRIEL.—This vessel, belonging to the Peninsular and Oriental Company, has for some time past, as our readers are aware, been employed in the conveyance of the Bombay mail, under temporary contract with her Majesty's Government, between Alexandria and Malta, but that contract being ended, she was ordered home. On her return voyage, having called at Civita Vecchia, she proceeded towards Leghorn, when she struck on the dangerous rocky shoals of Maldi Vetro, on the 2nd instant. No lives were lost. We believe that the cause of the accident was the prevailing folly of "hugging the shore." The shoals lie four miles W. $\frac{1}{2}$ S. from the town of Vado, on the Tuscan coast, thirteen miles S. of Leghorn lighthouse, which is in lat. 43° 32' 50", and long. 10° 17' 45". There are only eight feet water over the shoal; the depth between the shoal and shore varies from three to eight fathoms, and outside the shoal is a most excellent road. The Ariel, at the time of the accident, was commanded by Mr. Calbeck. Within little more than a year, two first-class steam-ships belonging to this company have been lost through the insane folly of keeping too close to shore.

STOPPAGE OF INDIAN HOUSES.—[We have to announce two more failures in the East-India trade, the parties being Messrs. Kelsalls and Co., and Messrs. Speir and Co. The liabilities are not large in either case; but the houses are both very respectable, and had they failed a year or two back, the amount would have been considerable. A succession of bad remittances from India led to their stoppage; but in the case of Messrs. Kelsalls, it is understood that the resources of the firm were crippled some time ago by the failure of Alexander, Beattie, and Co., of Calcutta; while in that of Messrs. Speir and Co., the death of the senior partner is stated as the immediate cause, —Times, June 12.

AUSTRALIAN PRODUCE.—The vessel British Sovereign, arrived from Port Adelaide, South Australia, has brought 260 bags of wheat, the produce of the colony, besides nearly 300 tons weight of copper and lead ore, and a great variety of other articles of general merchandize. The vessel Winchester, from Launceston, Van Diemen's Land, has brought the large quantity of 5,000 bushels of wheat, and also upwards of 700 hams, which latter is a novel article of supply from that distant colony; and the vessel Elizabeth Buckham, likewise from Launceston, has brought 808 bushels 241 packages of wheat, also of Australian produce. These supplies from this important colony are of much interest. —Times.

ARRIVAL OF THE NERBUDDA.—This fine 16-gun brig, built at Bombay, and launched on the 5th February last, arrived at Portsmouth on the 2nd instant, having left Bombay on the 29th February, accomplishing the distance in ninety-three days. She is in charge of Capt. Edward Pierce, late of the Cruizer, whose stores and fittings were transferred to the Nerbudda. The Nerbudda is a fast sailer, and a very superior sea-going vessel; she presents a faultless appearance when in sail, and fully justifies the sanguine expectations formed of her powers by her friends at Bombay.

CONVEYANCE OF THE BOMBAY MAIIS.—The contract of the Peninsular Company with Government for the conveyance of the Bombay mails from Malta to Southampton having expired, the Company's steamers from the Black Sea and Malta will not in future bring home this mail. It is, however, considered more than probable that the contract will be renewed, for the present unsettled state of the Continent renders it inexpedient for the Government to trust entirely to the route via Marseilles for letters and despatches from India. —Times.

DEPARTURE OF TROOPS FOR INDIA.—On the 19th instant, 23 men of the 25th regt. (the King's own Borderers), 9 men of the 51st (the King's own Light Infantry), and 10 men of the 84th, were inspected previous to proceeding to Madras. The following officers accompany them: Lieuts. D. Hastings, 78th Highlanders, F. H. Garner, 84th; Ensigns W. H. Newenham, 25th, C. S. Nott, 51st, and Assist. Surg. S. Crauford, 51st. With the above embark 42 men of the 15th Hussars, with Cornets W. Bennet and T. W. Goldrop, also for Madras.

COST OF REMITTANCE OF SPECIE FROM INDIA TO ENGLAND.—At this time half a million sterling of India's public tribute is in course of importation to England in the form of rupees, and it is commonly estimated that nearly £350,000 of private tribute is in course of remittance in a similar way. Three halfpence on every rupee, or nearly five per cent., is the dead loss, amounting on these two transactions to full £40,000, arising out of this expensive mode of remittance. —Lord G. BENTINCK's proposed Report on Sugar and Coffee planting.

THE MANCHESTER MEN IN INDIA.—So late as 1816-17 India exported cotton manufactures to England to the amount of £1,659,438. The cotton manufactures of India were subsequently so overcome by British competition, that the value of her exports was not only beat down to £16,961, in 1842-43, but the native manufactures were overwhelmed by Manchester and Paisley goods, in their own market, to an extent which, in 1846, reached £4,253,796. —Ibid.

WRECK OF THE SUTLEJ.—The Sutlej, having on board two companies and part of another of the 50th, under Major Long, when off the Cape on the homeward voyage, was overtaken by a hurricane, and became a complete wreck, losing the whole of her masts and rigging, and upwards of 100 tons of cargo being obliged to be thrown overboard. In the same gale the Prince of Wales, with invalids, lost one of her boats, and had another stove in.

STEAMER BETWEEN HONG KONG AND CANTON.—The new steamer Canton of 400 tons burden, and 150 horse-power, belonging to the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, will most probably leave Southampton for Canton on Saturday next, the 24th inst., under the command of Capt. Jamieson: she is intended to be run between Canton and Hong Kong three times a week. —The Canton is well armed, having four long guns and eight swivels, in addition to small-arms.

MONUMENT TO THE MARQUIS OF HASTINGS.—Mr. Lough, the celebrated sculptor, has just completed a recumbent statue of the late Marquis of Hastings, Governor-General of India, to be placed in a mausoleum to his lordship's memory, at Malta. The expense has been defrayed by the admirers of the noble marquis in India.

SIR CHARLES NAPIER.—The gallant members of the Junior United Services Club contemplate giving a grand entertainment to Lieutenant-General Sir Charles James Napier, G.C.B., the late governor of Scinde, to celebrate the gallant general's return from the scene of his eminent services in India. —Morning Post, June 10.

THE TRANSFER BOOKS OF THE EAST-INDIA COMPANY'S Stock closed on Tuesday the 6th instant, and will open again on Thursday the 13th July.

DR. DEALTRY.—A paragraph has been going the round of the press, stating that this gentleman is about to return to India as Bishop of Agra.

QUEEN'S ADVOCATE OF CEYLON.—Henry Collingwood Selby, Esq., is appointed Queen's Advocate of Ceylon. —Observer, June 18.

BARCLAY, BROTHERS, AND CO.—A dividend of 2s. 6d. in the pound has just been declared on this estate.

ARRIVAL OF SPECIE.—The Gloriana troop ship, lately arrived, brought 200 boxes of specie for the East-India Company.

The Vulture steam frigate, Capt. John M'Dougall, from India, has just been paid off.

H. & T. PEAT, SADDLERS, HARNESS-MAKERS,

&c., No. 167, PICCADILLY, LONDON, avail themselves of the present opportunity gratefully to acknowledge the patronage which they have received for so many years from their numerous connections in India, and to solicit a continuance of that preference which it has ever been their endeavour to deserve. At the same time, they beg to state that, from their very severe losses, they are compelled to decline the execution of any orders unless accompanied by an order for payment (when shipped) upon some agent or mercantile house in London.

It is also necessary that the name of an agent at the presidency should be given, to whom the goods are to be consigned, as the utmost despatch will be used in the shipments from London.

H. and T. PEAT feel bound, in justice to themselves, to make it known that large quantities of saddlery, &c., bearing their name and address, which are not of their make, are sent out to India, and elsewhere, by other parties, and are of very inferior qualities. Gentlemen should, therefore, send their orders direct to H. and T. P. to ensure articles of their manufacture.

All military orders, whether Cavalry, Infantry, Staff, Artillery, or Engineer, will be executed according to the latest regulation, and a discount of 5 per cent. allowed for cash payments.

N.B.—H. and T. P. beg to recommend for durability their 10, 11, and 12 lb. saddles, in preference to the lighter ones of 7, 8, and 9 lb., at present so much in demand for India; and likewise to observe that, in all cases where the goods are not insured, H. and T. P. cannot be accountable for any damage the same may receive after shipment.

Ladies' Saddles, Bridles, Martingales, and Whips.
Gentlemen's Hunting and Plain Riding Saddles, &c.
Racing, Training, and Exercise Saddles, &c.
Hunting Bridles, Hunting Breast-plates, &c.

HOSIERY and OUTFITTING WAREHOUSE, 146,

Strand, near Somerset House.—Mrs. WHITE begs most respectfully to recommend to her friends (more particularly those resident in India) her most beautiful make of Lisle Thread Hose and Half Hose for Ladies' and Gentlemen's wear; their lightness, durability, and comfort can only be appreciated by those who have tried them. She also strongly recommends a beautiful description of Merino Vest and Drawers adapted for the East and West Indies.

Mrs. W. takes this opportunity to thank her friends and the public for the liberal support she has received for the last six years, and begs to assure them that as she devotes the whole of her time and attention to her business, that the best attention will be paid to all orders she may be favoured with for either ladies or gentlemen, enclosing an order for payment on a bank or any house of known responsibility in London, will meet with immediate attention.

But the sheets have been invariably laid before him during the progress of the printing, and he feels himself able to vouch for their accuracy.”

"The greatest part of 'The Dabistan' would be very interesting to a curious reader, but some of it cannot be translated. It contains more recondite learning, more entertaining history, more beautiful specimens of poetry, more ingenuity and wit, more indecency and blasphemy, than I ever saw collected in a single volume. On the whole, it is the most amusing and instructive book I ever read in Persian."—Sir William Jones.

EL-MAS'UDI'S HISTORICAL ENCYCLOPEDIA, entitled "Meadows of Gold and Mines of Gems," collected from several Arabic MSS. and translated by ALOYS SPRENGER, M.D. Vol. I. 8vo. 16s.

"This work, which was written in the beginning of the fourth century of the Hejira, evinces the intimate acquaintances of the author with the Arabic, Persian, Coptic, and Greek literature of that time; and the ancient traditions, collected by Mas'udi during his extensive travels, which it contains, have given it the reputation of being the best historic-geographical work in the Arabic language.

HISTORY of the MOHAMMEDAN DYNASTIES in SPAIN; translated from the Arabic of AL-MAKKARI, and illustrated with critical notes on the History, Geography, and Antiquities of Spain, by PASCUAL DE GAYANGOS, 2 vols. 4to. 4l. 4s.

"This work is invaluable to the enquirer into Spanish History, and refutes many statements relative to the Arabs, made by Spanish historians.

The TRAVELS of IBN BATUTA; translated from the original Arabic, with notes illustrative of the History, Geography, Botany, Antiquities, &c. occurring throughout the work, by the Rev. SAMUEL LEE. 4to. 1l. 11s. 6d.

"Sheikh Ibn Batuta performed his travels in the 14th century; he visited the following countries, &c.—Barbary, Egypt, Syria, Irak, Persia, Turkey in Asia, Arabia, Zanguebar, Roon, Tartary, Khwarezm, Kabul, Hindustan, Maldiva Islands, Ceylon, Indian Archipelago, China, and Spain.

MEMOIRS of the EMPEROR JAHANGNEIR, written by himself, and translated from the Persian. By Major DAVID PRICE. 4to. 12s.

The TRAVELS of MACARIUS, Patriarch of Antioch: written by his attendant Archdeacon, Paul of Aleppo, in Arabic, translated by F. C. BALFOUR. 2 vols. 4to. 4l.

"As a record of the early struggles of the Muscovites for empire against their natural enemies the Poles, so steadily and triumphantly maintained by the Czar Alexius, whose sword of conquest is still wielded, by his successors to the present time, the writings of the archdeacon will be found of considerable value: nor, as far as I have been able to discover, is there any document extant of equally curious authenticity, as regards the distinctive policy and prescriptive maxims of that colossal of modern history, the Russian Government."—From the Preface.

MOURNING,—COURT, FAMILY, AND COMPLIMENTARY.

THE PROPRIETOR of the LONDON GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE begs respectfully to remind families whose bereavements compel them to adopt Mourning attire, that every article (of the very best description) requisite for a complete outfit of Mourning may be had at his establishment at a moment's notice. Widow's and Family Mourning is always kept made up, and a note, descriptive of the Mourning required, will ensure every thing necessary for the occasion being sent immediately, either in town or into the country, and on the most reasonable terms. It is also to be observed that, as both milliners and dressmakers are constantly employed in making up articles in crape (at all times difficult), superiority in mode and unusual neatness may be relied on.

The LONDON GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE, 247, 249, and 251, Regent Street,—W. C. JAY, Proprietor.

SARSAPARILLA.

BRIDGE'S SARSAPARILLA continues to be carefully prepared by T. A. BRIDGE and Co., Operative Chemists, &c., 270, Regent Street, London. It is a pure Cortical Essence of Red Jamaica Sarsaparilla, and for many years has been extensively used as the best and cheapest preparation of this esteemed alternative Medicine. It has a large sale in India and the Colonies, as well as in England, and the highest testimonials are enclosed with full directions with each bottle. A dessert spoonful is a dose, equal to half a pint of Compound Decoction of Sarsaparilla, as ordered by the London College of Physicians. In bottles:—Pints, 15s.; half-pints, 8s.; and quarter pints, 4s. 6d. Messrs. Barber beg to caution the public against spurious imitations, which are now being sold, and respectfully intimate that none is genuine without having the name of T. A. BRIDGE engraved on each bottle. Also T. A. BARBER and Co.'s QUINTESENCE of JAMAICA GINGER, a celebrated remedy for Indigestion, Flatulency, Gout, Rheumatism, Spasms, Debility, and all nervous affections. The great inconvenience of taking ginger in powder is quite obviated by this preparation, which, by a chemical process, contains all the properties of the best Jamaica Ginger in the highest state of concentration, a few drops being a dose. It is recommended by the first medical men in the kingdom. During sea-sickness, and afterwards, it is most beneficial, in doses of twenty to thirty drops. Families going abroad should be careful to provide themselves with it.

DIARRHÆA, STOMACH or BOWEL COMPLAINTS, CURED BY HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—These diseases, so prevalent at this season of the year, are produced in many instances by suppressed perspiration, or by the too free use of acid fruits, by which acidity in the stomach is generated, creating a deficiency of bile and consequent illness, often of a painful and dangerous nature. To obviate these results, the irritating causes must be speedily removed. Let the sufferer, then, have immediate recourse to Holloway's Pills, as they surpass all other remedies in effecting a cure, and permanently restore the impaired tone of the complaining parts. They are equally efficacious for disordered livers and bad digestion. Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of medicines throughout the whole of the East Indies.

WORTHY OF PUBLIC ATTENTION!!!

CHAPMAN'S UNIVERSAL PILLS, a combination of the most approved virtues of the Vegetable Kingdom, blended together in such due and just proportions, as to form at length an article which, they confidently venture to affirm, will be found superior to any thing of the kind hitherto made known; they contain not a particle of Mercury, or any other pernicious ingredients, but act almost imperceptibly, but none the less surely, as a gentle purifier of the blood and invigorator of the system. Their private use has been for many years co-extensive with that of the Universal Salve, to which they will be found most valuable agents.

The Proprietors might say much in their favour, and would enlarge upon their merits, were they not anxious that they should stand upon their own, and not have the appearance of being (as is too commonly the case) puffed into notice. They will, therefore, content themselves by saying that, in all cases of Bilious Attacks, Indigestion, Constipation of the Bowels, Sick Head-ache, frequent Nausea, Chronic Rheumatism, Lumbago, violent Cold or Cough, Jaundice, and in short all Internal Diseases, their aid will be found to be invaluable.

Sold in boxes, 1s. 1d., 2s. 3d., and 4s. 6d. each. Wholesale Depot, 5, Swallow Place, Regent Street.

Be particular in asking for CHAPMAN'S UNIVERSAL PILLS. Agents:—Messrs. HANNAH and Co.; SARGENT and Co., Oxford Street; and by most of the respectable Chemists in the United Kingdom.

E. and F. JACKSON, Solicitors, Wisbech; but if dead, and any persons can give any information as to the time of his death and burial, and will communicate the same to the said Messrs. E. and F. JACKSON, they will be rewarded for their trouble.

ECONOMY! ECONOMY!

STEPHENS' DYES FOR STAINING WOOD, as a SUBSTITUTE for PAINT. For Decorating Churches, Large Public Rooms, and Theatres, as well as Private Dwellings.

When economy in expenditure of material and time is of importance, these Dyes will be found of the greatest advantage, as they give a rich colour to plain woods, while they reflect all the beauty of the natural graining, which is so superior to imitations by art, and, at the same time, avoid the disagreeable smell and deleterious consequences of paint.

The Dyes or stains, are in bottles of 6d. and 1s. each, and at 10s. per gallon. The Oak Colour may be obtained in powder at 8s. per lb., which dissolves in water to form the liquid, and 1lb. will make one gallon of stain.—N.B. The trade supplied.

STEPHENS' CONCENTRATED and SOLUBLE INK POWDERS, which contain the chief elementary parts, in a dry state, of his various well-known inks or writing fluids, yet so readily soluble in the water, that by putting the contents of a paper packet into a bottle, and adding to it the quantity of water indicated on the directions, it is ready for immediate use. The economy of this article in carriage, from its reduced bulk, may be estimated when it is considered that one part of the powders will make twenty times its weight and bulk of liquid ink.

Samples of the smaller packets can be sent by post to those who may wish to make a trial of them.

All the above prepared and sold by HENRY STEPHENS, Inventor and Proprietor of the Writing Fluids, 54, Stamford-street, Blackfriars-road, London, and by Booksellers and Stationers throughout the Kingdom.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 12th May, 1847, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums. This will be found a liberal reduction if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

SUMMARY & REVIEW OF EASTERN NEWS.

THE state of affairs at Mooltan and in the Punjab is the all-engrossing topic of the intelligence brought by the present mail. It is satisfactory to find that, although sinister rumours prevail, there is no substantial ground for believing that the assassination of the two British officers by the soldiery is connected with any extensive or organized plan of hostilities. All accounts agree in representing the outbreak as a sudden and accidental explosion, to which the Dewan or Nazim was not privy. It is no slight evidence of his want of concert that he had large sums of money deposited in the treasury at Umritsur, and at his bankers at Benares (both within our reach), and that he had actually remitted the balance of his tribute to Lahore a few days before the occurrence. At the same time, it is so difficult to fathom the depths of Asiatic policy, that we can seldom reason from presumptions which would elsewhere afford grounds for tolerably safe conclusions.

The particulars of the affair as reported by the last advices in June appear to be in the main correct. From some cause, not yet explained, whether through fear of being disbanded and sent to the plough, or from a spontaneous hatred of Europeans, the troops at Mooltan (which has been long a place of refuge for Sikh and Scindian malcontents) suddenly rose upon Mr. VANS AGNEW and Lieut. ANDERSON, who were killed; but Mr. WILKINSON, the apothecary (supposed to have fallen with them), escaped. The circumstances of his escape tend to prove that there was no sympathy between the people of the country and the assassins, for he was informed, some stages behind the mission, of what had happened, and was assisted by the villagers, who were prepared to defend him if attacked. He, the artillerymen, and some of the servants had arrived at Lahore; they reported that they had been everywhere kindly treated by the people, and saw no discontent, or desire to join in an insurrection. The outbreak will, therefore, no doubt prove to be but another of those exhibitions of insubordination and lawless violence, of which so many instances have been witnessed in the Sikh army.

That fear or ambition may incite MOOLRAJ to turn this unexpected incident to his own account is not improbable, and he appears to be in possession of means which would make him a formidable adversary. He is reported to have great wealth—rumour says, two millions sterling—an element of power everywhere, and especially in Asia; he has a large body of troops, or rather men, and his fortress is of great strength. Mr. VANS AGNEW, it is said, described the citadel as "the strongest he had seen in India;" and Mr. MASSON represents it as more regularly constructed than any fortification in India, the work of native engineers. It stands on a mound, has thick walls of burnt brick forty feet high, with thirty towers; and it has been strengthened since its capture (after a protracted resistance) in 1848 by RUNJEET SINGH. All the malcontents in that part of India, and they are many, will be attracted by desire of employment, hope of plunder, and thirst for revenge, to join him, and with elements of disturbance throughout the Punjab country (and rumours are afloat respecting the instability of affairs at Lahore, and the equivocal fidelity of Rajah GOLAUB SING), it is impossible to regard this unfortunate affair without some degree of apprehension.

On the other hand, there are strong grounds of confidence. In the first place, "throughout all parts of India profound peace prevails." Three moveable brigades, of from 3,000 to 4,000 men each, which have been always fully equipped for marching at a moment's notice, are at hand; there are 50,000 men, of whom 10,000 are Europeans, with one hundred guns, on the frontier beyond Meerut; in Scinde there is an army of 17,000 men; large trains of artillery are stationed at Sukkur and Ferozepore: these, with a Sikh army of 25,000 men, who have behaved admirably in conjunction with our troops, may suffice to dissipate all serious alarm. Accordingly, with the exception of the despatch of a small force of irregular cavalry and artillery from Loodianah to aid our ally the Khan of Bhawalpore (who has behaved nobly), and of another of artillery and irregular cavalry from Lahore to Govindghur, and the march of a detachment of Sikh troops towards Mooltan, to protect the villagers from the ravages of the ruffians collected in the fort, no military movement has been made, and none is meditated until October, previous to which period reflection may reveal to the Nazim the prudence of submission, albeit he is said to be a man of violent passions, turbulent character, and a proud independent spirit.

Private advices state that he was raising troops, and strengthening the fortifications of Mooltan; that he had sent 3,000 men to occupy Mittenkote, on the Indus, and that the Sikh troops had shewn symptoms of a disposition to join the standard of MOOLRAJ; but these statements are not confirmed by any thing which appears in the latest journal.

At Lahore matters continue quiet, but the calm does not appear to have relaxed the vigilance of our officers. The defences of the city have been strengthened, and every precaution has been adopted to guard against surprise. The political agents at out-stations have been called in; officers of corps quartered at Lahore, absent on leave, have been ordered to join without delay; and the troops all along the line of frontier have been directed to hold themselves in readiness to move at a sudden notice. The military arrangements made by Lord HARDINGE previous to his departure are acknowledged to be perfect.

In Upper and Lower Scinde, where fears were entertained of some commotion when the first tidings of the outbreak arrived, every thing remained perfectly quiet. The Boogties, in Upper Scinde, instead of joining our enemies, as some expected, were daily coming in by tens and twenties, to settle at Larkhana. The troops were in good health, as well as the natives; the canals were beginning to fill rapidly, and a most prosperous harvest was expected.

The local intelligence from the Presidencies offers but few noticeable incidents. At Calcutta, the affairs of the Union Bank still keep the community, and especially the subscribers, in a state of feverish excitement. The assets of the Bank have passed into the hands of the Sheriff; actions are still pending, and sharp and pungent strictures are published in the Calcutta and Mofussil papers regarding the conduct of parties connected with the Bank. A speech of Mr. H. M. ELLIOT, at the meeting of the 29th of April (J. M. p. 358), when he proposed the motion for publishing a list of the debtors of the Bank (which the Mofussilite states was not fully reported in the Calcutta papers), is said to have contained the following passage:—

"It would be idle to say that any deference was, at any time, paid to the deed, which was now so eagerly resorted to in support of a suppression of information which a large proportion of the shareholders demanded as a condition for the payment of the loan and contribution: for if it had, there would never have been a reckless issue of the bank post-bills, nor scoffs at the commercial morality of Calcutta, because there had not been a single execution here for eleven years, and parties had taken their departure for England, with money in both pockets, instead of being sent off to Botany Bay at the expense of the Government."

The wealthier shareholders appear, however, to perceive that there must be a settlement, and are preparing to enter upon the disagreeable duty at once.

The weather at CALCUTTA, though unusually hot, was remarkably healthy.

The MADRAS papers are equally barren of what is understood by the term "news." An awkward collision, or apprehended collision, between the Government and the Queen's Courts of Law at this presidency has arisen out of the misconduct of a native servant of the Government, a Teloo-goo translator in the Petition department, who furnished some public records from the office, relative to the Endowment Fund, to some of his countrymen, by whom they were published in a Hindu newspaper. The translator was, immediately upon detection, removed from his office, and he thereupon brought an action in the Supreme Court for an alleged libel contained in the notification of his dismissal in the Madras Official Gazette!

Nearly one hundred more Meriahs have been delivered to Colonel CAMPBELL in the Goomsoor districts, making a total of two hundred and thirty-eight of these unfortunate candidates for immolation who have been rescued by our interference. Almost every chief of Boad has submitted to the Agency.

At BOMBAY the rumours which had been current from time to time, that the proceedings of the Chamber of Commerce were becoming less satisfactory than they used to be, and that a large body of its members proposed to secede, according to the Bombay Times, had been confirmed by the report which had been published.

In the Supreme Court at Bombay the Chief Justice had decided against opening up the celebrated Opium Time-bargain Case, the same having been decided by the result of the appeal to the Privy Council. The decision of the Court in the case of RAMLALL continues to engross much attention amongst the Native community.

Lord FALKLAND, the Governor of Bombay, seems to have recovered from his temporary indisposition. His lordship held a levee on the 13th of May, and afterwards a durbar. He is represented by all accounts to have conciliated the goodwill of the inhabitants of the presidency. The Commander-in-Chief (Sir W. COTTON) had arrived there from Mahabuleshwur, on the news of the outbreak in Mooltan. Both the Governor and the Commander-in-Chief were expected to proceed to Poona in the beginning of June.

The unfavourable accounts from home by the mails of the 7th and 24th March have had the effect of checking the incipient improvement in commercial affairs at Bombay, where trade, both in exports and imports, languishes, and the money-market was again becoming what is technically termed "tight."

The monsoon had interrupted communications by sea between Bombay and Scinde.

In the native states of India, subject to British control, no occurrences invite more than a passing remark. The affairs of Oude are, as usual, in a very unsatisfactory state. A letter from Lucknow says:—"The King's troops are still fighting in the district with rebellious zemindars, and the King himself acts pretty independently."

Since the publication of Col. SLEEMAN's letter, announcing the abolition of suttee in several states under his control, there have been two instances in the Mewar state, at one of which the Rajah himself went to receive a blessing from the victim about to immolate herself, and a third took place in the adjoining state of Bijne Rughoogurh.

The foregoing notices comprise all the most prominent features of the intelligence imported by the present Mail; and it affords no slight reason for exultation and for gratitude to know that, whilst the nations of Europe are plunged in civil discord and disorder; whilst a neighbouring country is steeping its new institutions in civil blood, and whilst the most firmly-seated thrones seem shaken from their foundations by the political earthquakes of the last four months, British India enjoys tranquillity and peace, suffering only in its commercial concerns by a slight tremor from that gigantic motion which has almost convulsed the civilized world at home.

BENGAL.

THE SUPREME COURT AT MADRAS AND THE MADRAS GOVERNMENT.

ANOTHER instance of collision between the Crown Courts in India and the Government of the country has just been exhibited at Madras, and it has arisen, as usual, not from any attempt of Government to interfere with the prerogatives of the Court, but from an effort to make the Court instrumental in controlling the Government. The present case is one of general importance, inasmuch as the power which the Court is urged to assume strikes at the root of that authority which is indispensable for the due performance of the functions of Government, and for the correction of abuses in the public administration.

The appeal to the court arose out of the following circumstances. It is understood that certain of the Hindoo gentry of Madras encouraged a native servant of Government to supply them with the public records relative to the endowment funds, and these papers were sent to the Hindoo press, and published in the journal which issues from it. Government felt the necessity of protecting its records from being thus nefariously abstracted by its own servants, and instituted inquiries to detect the author of this proceeding, and it was traced to Vencataroyaloo, Telooogo translator in the Petition Department of the Government office. He was immediately removed from his appointment, and the dismissal was announced to the public in the following notification, which was published, as usual, in the Madras official Gazette:—

"M. Vencataroyaloo, recently Telooogo translator in the petition department of the government office, having shewn himself to be unworthy of trust, by the systematic abstraction of records, from the government office, and the unauthorised and clandestine communication of official information, the most noble the Governor in Council has been pleased to resolve, under date 11th January, 1848, that he be dismissed from the public service, and that he be declared disqualified from holding any office under Government for a period of seven years from this date.

By order,
(Signed) H. C. MONTGOMERY,
Offg. Chief Secretary."

The transgressor has now been set up to bring an action for libel in the Supreme Court against the secretary to Government who signed the notification. The suit has been entertained, and counsel and witnesses have been heard, and the judgment of the Court is to be delivered after the 1st of May.

The question now at issue stands upon the broad ground of public policy, and not upon the narrow technicalities of English law. The administration of this country has been confided by the supreme power in England to the East-India Company at home, and the Governments appointed by them in India. All the powers necessary for the due administration of the Government have been delegated, by the same authority, to those who have been made responsible for it, and the interference of the Crown Courts in the acts of Government has been expressly barred by Parliamentary enactment. It is indispensable for the efficient exercise of these powers that Government should maintain discipline among its official servants, by punishing delinquents, and making public the penalties inflicted on them, as a warning to others. It is essential that the Government should possess authority to protect the public interests of the country by the punishment of those who may abstract the property of the State, whether money or records, without the fear of interference by any other "power." It never was the intention of Parliament that the Government of the country should be controlled in the exercise of this authority by the courts of the Crown, and be amenable to their jurisdiction for its acts. Whenever the local authorities exhibit any symptoms of partiality, injustice, or oppression, in their proceedings, an appeal is open to the Court of Directors, and the various governors are strictly forbidden to withhold the transmission of such appeals; but the Supreme Court is not a court of appeal from the decisions of Government in its administrative capacity. It is affirmed by Vencataroyaloo, that he is not the real transgressor, and that the punishment inflicted on him is unjust. But if in every instance in which a man is dismissed for crime, and denies his guilt, the Government is under the necessity of justifying its proceedings before the Supreme Court, or of submitting to the degradation of a fine for libel, there must be an end to the independent and impartial exercise of its functions. Very few of those who have been dismissed the service of Government for misconduct, believe themselves guilty, and if they may obtain heavy damages against Government, by resorting, with this plea, to another tribunal, every man will believe himself the victim of injustice, and the supreme authority in the state will be, at once, transferred to the courts of the crown. If it be affirmed that the crime of Government consisted not in dismissing an unfaithful servant, but in publishing his crime and his punishment, it may well be asked whether it be not necessary for the due administration of public affairs that the cause of dismissal should in every instance be distinctly announced to deter others; and whether it would be compatible with the principles of justice and equity that men should be summarily expelled the service without being made acquainted with the cause of their dismissal. At this presidency instances of the dismissal of native functionaries for bribery and extortion, occur from time to time, and the grounds of expulsion are invariably notified in the official Gazette. If in every such instance the culprit is at liberty to drag the Government into the supreme court upon a charge of libel, and constrain it to enter on a justification of its proceedings, one of the most important functions of Government, that of maintaining the purity of the administration, must speedily become extinct.

It is not, however, any cause of vexation that a case like this has been entertained by the Supreme Court at Madras; still less would it be a matter of regret if the judges were to inflict a heavy fine on Government. The more these instances of interference with the functions and the proceedings of the Government of the country are multiplied, the more will the necessity be enforced of correcting the anomaly, and of restricting the Crown Courts to their own legitimate sphere. Since the last Charter Act was passed, the powers of the supreme courts have been gradually enlarged by the decisions of the judges both here and in England, till it has become extremely difficult to conduct the Government with dignity or efficiency; and a clearer definition of their respective authority is daily becoming more imperative. The supreme courts are the only irresponsible power in India. The Government has no means of resisting the interference of those courts in its administrative functions, but by an open collision which would make the remedy worse than the disease, or by an appeal to another court of law at home, which is animated by the same desire to maintain the prerogatives of the law. There is no impartial umpire to decide between the parties, and the Government finds itself under the necessity, in every instance, of submitting to its fate. In the present temper of the law-ridden Court of Directors there is little hope of any assistance from that quarter. They are apparently prepared to submit to every restriction on the authority of their Governor-General in Council by the Crown Courts, and to every indignity which may be heaped on them in the presence of the subjects they are sent out to govern. How far they thus shew themselves the trustworthy guardians of the power which has been confided to them for the public good is another question, which will be subjected to a most rigid scrutiny, when they come to render up an account of their stewardship. When that period arrives, and the whole question of the Indian administration is brought before the nation, all these proceedings in the Supreme Courts, these perpetual and too successful endeavours to enlarge their prerogatives at the expense of Government, will be thoroughly and fearlessly investigated; and the relationship between these two high powers will be placed on some more honourable and satisfactory basis than that of encroachment on the one hand and submission on the other.—Friend of India.

MEETING OF SUBSCRIBERS TO THE EAST-INDIA UNITED SERVICE CLUB.

AGRA, MAY 2.—At a meeting of subscribers to the United East-India Service Club, held at Agra, on the 11th of April, 1848, Present, Wm. Tyler, Esq., C. C. Jackson, Esq., H. B. Riddell, Esq., Capt. Harris, comt., Capt. Turner, art., Lieut. Russell, 54th regt. N.I., and Capt. Chiene, 34th regt. N.I.; and again on the 2nd of May, 1848,

Present, C. C. Jackson, Esq., C. B. Denison, Esq., Capt. Harris, comt., Capt. Chiene, 34th regt. N.I., Capt. Wardroper, 25th regt. N.I., and Lieut. Russell, 54th regt. N.I., it was proposed:—

1st. That the following gentlemen form a committee of management for the affairs of the club in the north-west provinces:—

C. C. Jackson, Esq., Civil Service.
H. B. Riddell, Esq., ditto.
C. B. Denison, Esq., ditto.
Capt. Lyons, 34th regt. N.I.
Capt. Turner, Artillery.
Capt. Harris, Commissariat Department.
Capt. Wardroper, 25th regt. N.I.
Lieut. Russell, 54th regt. N.I.

And that C. C. Jackson, Esq., be President.

Mr. Jackson having been called to the chair, it was proposed:—

2nd. That Capt. Chiene, 34th N.I. be requested to act as Honorary Secretary to the Committee, to correspond and to receive subscriptions.

3rd. The meeting having taken into consideration Mr. Neave's prospectus, herewith republished, propose that the monthly subscription of one rupee commence on the 1st July next, and that subscribers be requested to pay up six months in advance, viz. from 1st July to 31st Dec. 1848, for the purpose of furthering the immediate establishment of the club, and any sums so collected will be lodged in the Agra Bank.

4th. Proposed, that an alphabetical List of Subscribers as already published in the Madras Athenaeum and Delhi Gazette, be drawn up.

5th. Proposed, that the Committee do write to the Subscribers at Calcutta and Barrackpore to form a Committee in Bengal, and that they also communicate with the Committee already formed at Madras, to ascertain the wishes of the Subscribers on the several points necessary to decide.

6th. Proposed, that the amount of Entrance Donation be fixed hereafter, as also the annual subscription in England.

The opinion of the committee being that 5*l.* entrance donation will not form a capital sufficiently large for maintaining a club in accordance with the respectability of the Indian services, they beg leave to suggest that the entrance donation be in all 10*l.*, and that those subscribers who are in England be called on to pay this amount in full on entering the club, as they will alone immediately benefit. If the sum so contributed be found insufficient for first expenses, it is proposed that subscribers in India be there called on for an instalment of half the entrance-money—i. e. 5*l.* 0*s.* 0*d.* and the remainder 5*l.* to be paid on joining the club in London.

C. C. JACKSON, President of Committee.

PROSPECTUS OF THE UNITED EAST-INDIA SERVICE CLUB.

It is to consist of all the Company's servants, civil, clerical, medical, military, and naval, and of them exclusively, of all the presidencies.

The want of such a club has been long felt. It is desirable, not merely as a comfortable place of resort, to those who require such an abode, but also as a rallying-point for Indian interests, where measures may be devised for sustaining them. The latter is not a light consideration, when it is recollected that in a brief period the question of the renewal of the Charter will be discussed.

It is proposed that the subscription be one rupee per month from the members; and that all who retire finally to Europe shall give a donation of five pounds. Small though this sum may be, it will in a short time suffice to create as good a club as any in London.

Measures have been taken to bring the project to notice at the presidencies of Madras and Bombay.

A committee will be formed in Calcutta to receive the names of intending members, and to correspond with committees at the other Presidencies and in London.

N.B.—To meet the current expenses of the club, it is proposed that the subscribers now at Agra pay up at once the six months' advance alluded to in proposition 3rd, viz. from 1st July to 31st December, 1848.

The following have paid their subscriptions:—C. C. Jackson, Capt. Harris, Lieut. Russell, Capt. Wardroper, Capt. Chiene, C. B. Denison, Esq., A. Beale, Esq., Capt. Lyons, Dr. MacDonald, Esq., and Esq. Oyston.

Subscriptions will be received by Capt. Chiene, and receipts duly notified in the Mofussilite and Delhi Gazette.

P. J. CHIENE, Hon. Secretary.

MEETING OF THE PROPRIETORS OF THE DELHI BANK.

DELHI.—Proceedings of an extraordinary general meeting of proprietors of the Delhi Bank, held at the Bank-house on Monday, the 17th April, 1848, at noon, pursuant to notice.

Present 11 shareholders.

Mr. H. Cope having been requested to take the chair, the requisition by which the meeting was called was read, as also the printed circular of the requisitionists to the shareholders, of which the following is an extract:—

"At a meeting of shareholders of the Delhi Bank, held at Agra on Monday, the 6th March, 1848, Present—Messrs. G. P. Thompson, G. H. Smith, C. C. Jackson, W. H. Tyler, G. F. Edmondstone, A. Shakespeare. G. P. Thompson, Esq., in the chair.

The following papers were read:—

1st. A requisition addressed to the Directors of the Delhi Bank, on the subject of a junction with the Simlah Bank.

2nd. A circular letter from the directors to the proprietors of the Delhi Bank, dated 1st January, 1848, with abstract of correspondence and minutes on the same subject.

3rd. Three letters, Nos. 1, 2, 3, which appeared in the Delhi Gazette and Mofussilite, under the signature of "One Interested and a Shareholder of the Delhi Bank."

4th. The correspondence referred to by the directors of the Delhi Bank, in the 5th paragraph of their circular letter, dated 1st January.

It was resolved:—

1st. That a requisition be addressed to the directors of the Delhi Bank calling upon them, under the 66th article of the trust deed, to convene an extraordinary general meeting, to be held at Delhi, on Monday the 17th April next, at noon, for the consideration of the following matters, viz.:

1. Whether a junction shall be effected between the Delhi Bank and the Simlah and Umballa Bank.

2. If this question be carried in the affirmative, by a majority of votes, then, whether the board of direction shall be at Simlah or at Delhi.

2nd. That (with the exception of paper No. 2, which will be in the hands of the proprietary) the papers above referred to be printed, and a copy thereof sent to each shareholder of the Delhi Bank for his information, and with a request that he will give a special power to vote (as he may think fit) on the above questions, at the extraordinary general meeting to be convened on the 17th proximo, to J. Cowley, Esq., according to a form to be forwarded.

(Signed) G. P. THOMPSON,
Chairman.

The first proposition submitted by the requisitionists was brought before the meeting according to the circular. No shareholder present appearing to second it, and the votes present and by proxy being examined and tested, it appeared that the number stand

For the junction

29 shareholders, holding 637 shares—representing 85 votes.

Against the junction:

65 shareholders, holding 1,737 shares—representing 207 votes.

Majority against the junction—36 shareholders, holding 1,100 shares and representing 122 votes.

Resolved—

That it is considered unnecessary to put the question affecting the locality of head-quarters of the bank, as the proposition for the junction has been negatived.

Resolved—

That the proceedings of this meeting be published in the Mofussil and Delhi Gazette newspapers for the general information of shareholders.

Resolved—

That the thanks of the meeting be given to the chairman.

Chairman.

DECISIONS OF MOFUSSIL MAGISTRATES.

OUR attention has been called by a correspondent to the operation of the Act No. 5 of 1848, as interpreted by certain Mofussil magistrates. It is of the highest importance to planters and other residents in the Mofussil that the working of this enactment should be generally known, in order that a remedy may be speedily applied to its extreme hardship.

The intention of the Act was to enable magistrates to take penal recognizances from persons within their jurisdiction, as well from British subjects as others, to keep the peace, although the party to be bound in such recognizances may not have been guilty of any specific offence. It is obvious that the extreme limit of rational legislation is touched by this enactment, the excuse being, we suppose, the great difficulty of procuring convictions in many cases which admit of no reasonable doubt. Admitting for argument's sake this necessity, it is obvious that the law ought to be administered with the most scrupulous caution, to prevent it becoming a severe infliction upon those engaged in innocent and lawful pursuits. We shall soon see, however, that, as interpreted by certain magistrates, this law is already made the instrument of most unjustifiable oppression. A planter's assistant receives a notice to the following effect:—

"You are hereby required to appear before me on (a day named) to enter into a recognisance to keep the peace for the period of one year, under the provisions of the Act V. of 1848, in the sum of Co.'s Rs. 5,000, and you are further required to furnish two sureties in addition of 2,500 rupees each under the provisions of the said Act."

It must be observed in the first place, that the words of the Act are that the recognizances "in all such cases shall be proportionate to the condition in life of the party, and the circumstances of the case." It is obvious that this provision has not been attended to when such excessive security is required, for it must also be observed that the sureties themselves are punishable under the Act with six months' imprisonment should they be unable to pay the penalty when called upon.

But this is the least part of the hardship. It seems that, in spite of the strong expression in the Act that recognizances shall be taken in all cases wherein it may appear just and necessary to require the same, we are informed that the magistrates hold that they are not entitled to inquire into the truth of the allegation, and that the oath of a single witness is sufficient.

The consequence of such an interpretation is, that the accused must always be punished, and we are already informed that in one district especially the planters are continually harassed by being called upon for security. The distance of most factories from the magistrate's cutchery is so great, and the loss sustained by the absence of the manager and his assistants so severe, especially in the manufacturing season, that the Act thus interpreted will almost shut up a concern which has disputes with its neighbours. The facility with which false evidence is procured all over the country is such that if the deposition of any person who appears is held to be conclusive, every planter who dismisses an idle servant will be exposed to this sort of annoyance.

The planters and other Mofussil residents cannot have been aware of the operation of this Act, or they would certainly have petitioned against it, or at least requested a more definite and clear exposition of the intention of the Legislature.

That the intention of the Legislature cannot have been correctly interpreted by the magistrates we hold to be clear, since such a construction of the Act is contrary to that universally recognised principle of English law which gives every accused person a fair hearing. But we must also discover the intention of the framers of this Act by looking back to those for which it was a substitute. It sets out by repealing section 4, Regulation 4, of 1825. That Regulation recites that the previous Act 8, of 1818, requires explanation, we must therefore turn to it, and we find that it was passed "to define more exactly the powers to be exercised in future by magistrates and criminal courts, in requiring security for the good behaviour of persons of suspicious livelihood, or of notoriously bad or dangerous character." It is also to be remarked that Regulation 4, of 1825, relates to persons charged with serious affairs and convicted.

The intention of the Legislature, too, being clearly to enlarge the power of the magistrates, the interpretation put upon the Act by which they are held bound to act at the pleasure of any applicant, without exercising any discretion, is directly contrary to its spirit.

It is certain, as soon as the effect of this Act becomes generally known (and as it is only two months old to day, it has not yet had time to become popular), that it will be applied as a weapon of annoyance against every Mofussil resident who may endeavour to protect his own interests, by refusing to submit to every kind of exaction that may be attempted against him. But it is impossible that this state of things can continue. We are informed that the suffering parties have been advised to memorialize the Government, pointing out the hardship which this enactment inflicts upon them, and we cannot doubt that it will receive amendment if required, or else that the intention of the Legislature will be very differently interpreted by the Nizamut in case of appeal, and will set at rest any doubt the magistrates may now entertain of their authority in all cases of complaint to hear both sides before they inflict a punishment.—Englishman.

VERNACULAR EDUCATION.

We have much pleasure in publishing another letter from the pen of Mr. Hodgson, on the subject of Vernacular Education, which we would recommend to the especial attention of all those who take an interest in this most important of national questions. We are very happy to find that he has come forward thus distinctly to remove the suspicion of his exclusive advocacy of Vernacular instruction, and to assert that he "most earnestly desires to see the upper, wealthy, and influential classes of native society instructed in English." We can assure him that the strongest prejudices exist in the minds of those who are themselves English exclusionists against the plans he has advocated, on the ground that he was desirous of abolishing all the seminaries which have been established for English education, and to substitute for them schools for the instruction of youth in the languages of the country alone. We must confess that we have imperceptibly allowed our own minds to be influenced by these impressions; but our regret for any degree of injustice of which we have thus been guilty, is somewhat mitigated by the knowledge that it has been the occasion of enabling him to set himself right with the public on this point.

In one respect Mr. Hodgson's long residence at a distance from Calcutta has led him into an error. He asserts that the upper, wealthy, and influential classes of society have not sent one single child to our schools. To whatever extent this may be true in the interior of the country, where our English seminaries have for the most part proved failures, it is a matter of fact and experience that, in the metropolis and its neighbourhood, those classes of society have adopted the habit of invariably giving their children an English education. There are very few, if any, wealthy families to be found in Calcutta who do not now consider it as indispensable to train up their children in a knowledge of English, as their ancestors did to make them familiar with Persian. The Hindoo and the Hooghly Colleges are filled with the "children of ease," the sons of wealth, and it is considered a great deficiency for a well-born and wealthy youth to be unable to speak, however indifferently, our own language.

It is, however, a self-evident fact, that nothing farther can be expected from the efforts of the Education Committee than that at the end of twenty-five years there will probably be five thousand natives in and around the metropolis capable of understanding an English book, and conversing freely in that language; and as we may now be said to be in the twenty-fifth year of English education, this may be considered as the extreme result of half a century of exertion on the part of Government. No one can deny that it will be a great blessing to the country for so large a number of the influential class of society to be imbued, to that extent, with the science of Europe and the literature of England. But these five thousand are not the nation, nor even the five thousandth part of it. The rest of the country during this period must continue, and upon the same system the largest portion of the people must for ever continue, the prey of ignorance and superstition, and strangers to all that knowledge which elevates the mind. This is the fact we must keep constantly before our eyes, with the view of deriving from it all the instruction it is calculated to afford, for the regulation of our future proceedings. We must bear in mind that the present system, if it be successful to the extent of the most sanguine expectations of its supporters, will still leave the duty which, as a Government, we owe to the people unperformed. But there is no reason to hope that any of the funds which are now appropriated to English instruction will be diverted from that object. If we rest the increase of Vernacular education upon any such expectation, we shall be disappointed. Neither, if there was any hope of success, should we venture to recommend it. We do not wish to starve the English seminaries which are now living in clover, but to obtain due nutriment for those which are now starved; we mean the Vernacular schools. It is desirable, therefore, that Government, having now sufficiently provided for the wants of the upper classes of society by the establishment of four English colleges—the Supreme Court has deprived us of the prospect of a fifth, by annulling the will of the late Raja,—and a number of inferior seminaries, should consider its obligations to that class complete. Whatever extension of the system of education Government may hereafter vouchsafe to the country, whatever additional funds it may appropriate to this object, should be directed into the channel of indigenous instruction. This should be considered in the light of a sacred and imperative duty. As an encouragement for the performance of it, we have the gratifying reflection that the same amount of funds will go four times as far as in the English department; that is to say, the amount of real knowledge which three-fourths of the alumni in our English schools will carry away with them, when the period of study terminates, can be imparted to the scholars of the indigenous schools, through the medium of their own language, at one-fourth the expense. Mr. Hodgson has justly remarked that the homage which is paid to the necessity of Vernacular education is lip service only. These schools are considered as altogether secondary in importance. They are the step-children of the Education Committee, and receive just as much affection as can be spared from their own fondlings.—But we must correct ourselves; we question whether they have any relationship with that committee at all. They are under the control of the Revenue Board, and, like the wards of the state, are superintended by those who are employed in collecting the revenue. They have no normal school, no tutors of experience, no system of inspection, and few, if any, books. They are the step-children of the Government of Bengal.

In an article in the last number of the Calcutta Review it is stated that the number of offices under Government, varying in value from 5 rupees a month to 20 rupees, and which are filled, and will long continue to be filled, by natives totally ignorant of the English language, exceeds 40,000. If Government deems it necessary to establish seminaries at a high cost for the education of those of its servants who receive higher pay and belong to the Corinthian order of society, is it not equally important that a suitable education should be provided for the vastly more numerous class of servants who never can or will receive English instruction? Is this great body of public functionaries to remain for ever without education? Is all the influence they exert throughout the various ramifications of society to correspond for ever with their own ignorant, debased, and superstitious notions? Are all the incentives to improvement which Government possesses in this vast patronage to be lost to the cause of national civilization? Is it impossible to construct a system through which all these native servants of Government shall receive the best education they have time and opportunity for attaining, in their own language? It is not impossible, if we can once dismiss the idea that the instruction of five thousand respectable youths in English is national education; and if we set about the work of Vernacular instruction with the same earnestness and spirit of perseverance, without which we know that every plan in every department of human affairs must fail,—with the determination to succeed, rather than with the expectation of failure.—Friend of India.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ARRIVAL OF THE LONDON MAIL.—The Bombay express arrived at Calcutta on the 5th, and the Bentinck steamer at Kedgeree on the 7th May, each bringing portions of the Mail from London of the 24th March.

THE WEATHER.—The weather in Calcutta, as apparently throughout the country, has been intensely hot; notwithstanding which there has been very little sickness.

OUDE.—A letter from Oude states "I think they will be obliged to turn out the present king of Oude; nothing but fighting in the district, guns going all day long."

AUSHOTOSS DAY AND THE UNION BANK.—The Supreme Court has refused the mandamus applied for on behalf of Aushotoss Day, to compel the Union Bank to file a memorial that the Baboo had ceased to be a shareholder of the bank on the 19th November last. This decision makes the Baboo responsible with the rest of the shareholders for all the liabilities of the bank.

THE PRESS.—The proprietor of the Maulmain Free Press has been prosecuted for libel and made to pay one rupee damages for calling a military officer "superintendent of lamp-lighters."

METHOLD V. MASSEY.—In the Supreme Court on the 6th May, judgment was given in the case of Methold v. Massey and others. The action was for two policies of insurance issued by the New Oriental Life Insurance Company for the aggregate sum of Rs. 7,000. Verdict for the defendant, on the plea that the affidavit of the insured, on which the policy was given, was false; and also on another plea, that the plaintiff had no interest in the life of the deceased.

THE ANN LOCKERBY.—The shipping report of May 10, announced the arrival of the Ann Lockerby, Capt. Laing, as having put back from sea leaky, making 36 inches of water per hour.

CAWNPORE, 1st May.—"Brigadier-General Campbell, C.B. and K.H., has given over the command of the division to Brigadier Yates, C.B., the next senior officer, and left the station at 5 P. M., under the usual salute, proceeding on leave of absence to Simla."

THE SIR HOWARD DOUGLAS.—The Sir Howard Douglas which got up on Sunday evening is the vessel which, as we mentioned some time ago, suffered severe damage in a hurricane in 7° south, when she lost her rudder and mizen mast and all her sails and spars. To add to this misfortune the coals with which she was laden ignited. The hatches were battened down, and the ship, which was bound to Bombay, made for this port for which the winds were more favourable, the crew keeping on deck. We have not heard whether when the hatches were opened, as we suppose they were yesterday, the fire was found extinguished or not.—Hurkaru, May 9.

THE EAST INDIA U.S. CLUB.—A correspondent, writing from Agra, and whose letter was published in our last, told us that it is proposed, by the newly-appointed committee of the East-India U.S. Club, that all who finally retire from the service in Europe shall pay a donation of 5*l.*, remarking at the same time that the sum appeared to him too small, and recommending that every subscriber proceeding to England should pay the entrance-fee. We really cannot understand on what principle the payment of an entrance-fee could be limited to those members who retire in Europe, and do not recollect to have seen any notice to that effect in the first short prospectus published. We conceive that the subscription of one rupee per month, proposed for officers resident in India, is intended to give a right to every one paying the same to become an active member on visiting England either permanently or for a short time. That subscription is also intended to enable the committee, to be entrusted with the formation of the club in London, to carry out their plans in a manner worthy the united services of the East-India Company. But it was surely never intended by the projectors of the institution that those only who finally retired should, by the payment of a fixed sum, become entitled to participate in the advantages the club will afford. As we understand it, every subscriber in India is to become at once a member on arriving in London and signifying his intention to join; but as the privileges he will then enter on are costly, and cannot be expected to be supplied him for 1*l.* 4*s.* per annum, so we consider he will be bound to pay a reasonable entrance-fee, which ought certainly not to be less than 10*l.*, and an increased annual subscription during residence at home. On his leaving England the member will revert to his subscription of one rupee per mensem; on his return to Europe he will be again enrolled as a member, without, however, being a second time called to contribute an entrance-fee; that once paid should never be again demanded. This seems to us the plain view of the case, and we would recommend it to the consideration of the committee.—Delhi Gazette, April 29.

THE SINDH PRIZE PROPERTY.—Some three or four month ago we announced the intention of the Government of India to remove from Bombay to Calcutta, for sale by public auction, the whole of the arms, jewellery, &c., captured at Haidrabad (Sindh). This portion of the Sindh prize property had been lying in the Bombay General Treasury for upwards of three years, and repeated notices were given, if we mistake not, of the intention of the local authorities to dispose of them at the Western Presidency. We are now informed that this prize property was despatched from Bombay, on the 10th instant, by the Peninsular and Oriental Company's steamer Lady Mary Wood, by which vessel it will be conveyed as far as Point de Galle, and be there transhipped into another of the Company's steamers proceeding to Calcutta. It occupies about twenty-seven boxes, and is valued at seven lacs of rupees.—Delhi Gazette.

CAPT. HANNYNGTON'S PENSION FUND.—The Governor-General, has, we learn, returned Capt. Hannington's excellent scheme for the reconsideration of the Court of Directors, a fact that leaves very reasonable room to hope that the fund may be suffered to exist with the tacit sanction, if not with the express consent of the Court, which is all that is required of them.

IN RE EWING, AIRD, AND ANDERSON (May 6).—A rule Nisi for the appointment of Mr. Kettlewell, of the firm of Leach, Kettlewell, and Co., a co-assignee of this estate, in conformity with the recommendation of the creditors, was made absolute, without opposition.

THE MARY ANNE OF LONDON.—We only learned by accident yesterday that the Mary Anne of London has been ashore on the sand opposite Fort Point for several days. The bore, it appears, which has been very violent during the last springs, has so damaged her that she is most likely to become a total wreck. Hurkaru, May, 9.

BENARES, April 21.—A most dreadful fire broke out in the lines of the 65th regt. of native infantry, on Tuesday afternoon, about two o'clock, which destroyed the huts of the greater part of the men of that fine regiment; the bungalow of the quarter-master-sergeant had a narrow escape, owing to the circumstance of the heat deflecting the current of air during the conflagration. Had the wind continued to blow from its usual direction—the westward—the devastation would probably have reached the extremity bounding near the artillery barracks. The huts of the 6th and 7th light and rifle companies were completely destroyed, and, as the men had no time to save any of their property, they have lost all, and they are, as may be expected, quite destitute. The fire originated in the hut of a jemadar of the 6th company, absent on leave, but which was at the time in the occupation of a butcher, named Ramzan. We are told that the carelessness of this man caused the roof to take fire, and so combustible were the materials not only of this building, but of all the others contiguous to it, that the blaze was instantaneous all around it, and by the force of the wind extended rapidly further, causing so much surprise and confusion, that before the men could be prepared to direct their attention to saving their property, they found it irretrievably in the vortex of the flames. All, of course, was lost. The moment the bugle sounded the alarm of fire, we understand, the European artillerymen turned out to a man, and gave their assistance zealously and usefully. The fire was stopped. But the damage was done before their help came in aid, and now the question is what ought to be done?

MEERUT.—The season is a most extraordinary one. The days are warm but not oppressively so, and we have very little wind or dust. The nights, strange to say, are quite cold—as cold as they usually are in November or the end of February. Sickness has been very common among the natives. An epidemic, not unlike the influenza, has prevailed very generally, and we have heard of many Europeans, residents of the station, who have been very severely attacked. Ophthalmia, we hear, is also prevalent. Little or nothing is going on in the station. Those who have got leave have gone off to the Hills, and Meerut has resolved itself into as quiet a place as can be found in British India.

THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL.—It is supposed the disturbances in the Punjab will cause Lord Dalhousie to pay the Upper Provinces a visit as soon as the rains set in.

RETIREMENT.—Major Elwell, of the 40th regiment N.I., has sent in his papers to retire from the service, and we believe that the 53rd regiment N.I., will also soon gain two steps.

HAZAREEBAGH.—Mr. Williams, the government geologist, with his four assistants and camp, has just arrived here, where he intends taking up his quarters during the rains, and is actively employed in finding out the capabilities of the surrounding country in the production of iron, coal, &c., which abounds here to immense extent. The country is doubtless rich in minerals generally, judging from the appearance of the rocks and hills.

FORT OF GWALIOR.—We have heard that it is the intention of Government to dismantle the greater part of the fort of Gwalior; a company will be sufficient to take care of what is to be left. The guns, stores, &c., to be removed to Agra, as also those formerly brought into the fort from Jhansee.

INDIGO FACTORIES.—The Englishman publishes a letter from his Azimghur correspondent, containing facts which ought not to be lost sight of. We allude to the effect of the assignees' working the indigo factories of insolvent firms. He states that in one single concern the loss in the hands of the former assignee was Rs. 1,75,000. Well may he applaud the resolution of the present assignee not to meddle with indigo factories except to wind them up, and sell them at any price. All that is said about the loss to estates by prematurely disposing of factories, has been shown by experience to be

"leather and prunella." In every instance they have eventually yielded far less, when the account has been made up, than they would have done if sold immediately. It should be an invariable rule of Court that they be sold at the close of the current season for whatever they will fetch; if the house should happen to fail just at the close of the season, they should of course be sold immediately.

DECISION IN THE COURT OF REQUESTS.—The papers have commented with just severity on a late decision in the Court of Requests. Some silver had been entrusted, it seems, to the joint responsibility of two native servants, and became missing, on which the master refused to pay the wages of one of them; but on application to the petty court the commissioner decided that as the responsibility was joint, one man could not be punished for the breach of trust. Yet, in a similar case, where two individuals were conjointly responsible for two lacs of rupees, and one only had received and disposed of the money for his own benefit, Sir Lawrence Peel decided that the other assignee, who had never touched a farthing of it, should make it all good.

THE UNION BANK.—The Englishman states that the Union Bank stopped on the 10th of December, and that it is known that post bills to the amount of Co.'s Rs. 1,38,000 were issued on the 20th of that month. This certainly demands explanation; but while the shareholders are pressed by the creditors, what leisure or inclination can they have for examining into the frauds by which they have been reduced to their present deplorable condition? It is those who helped themselves to the funds of the bank, as now stated, to the amount of little less than a million sterling, who are to blame in this case, yet the very magnitude of the frauds will probably be the one chief reason for their escape. For such laborious researches there is at present no time, and if the affairs of the bank should be wound up in a year or two, the matter will have lost its interest. We regret to learn that the schedule of shareholders is not to include the number of shares. Why this mystery when the bank is rotting in its grave? The schedules should be complete—they should give as the names of the debtors, their debts, their security—the names of the shareholders, the number of their shares and the extent to which they have responded to the call; as well as the directors in each year, and more especially, the interior cabinet, the Finance Committee, who were chiefly instrumental in dissipating the funds of the bank.

ESCAPE OF MR. WILKINSON.—We are very glad to be enabled to have it in our power to state that Mr. Wilkinson, the apothecary, who was reported by several of our correspondents to have been killed at Mooltan, is still living. We have it on the most unquestionable authority that Mr. Wilkinson did not reach Mooltan; but when within three marches of the place some villagers informed him of the fate of the unfortunate political. The Mooltanees, we are told, sallied forth to attack Mr. Wilkinson, but he was most resolutely defended by the villagers who are escorting him to Lahore, where he was expected to arrive on the 1st.

The resident had resolved to reward these people handsomely; assuredly their trustworthy conduct ought to meet with a suitable return.—Mofussilite, May 5.

LANDOUR.—The weather here has hitherto been far from favourable to invalids. Hot days with chilly mornings and evenings, interspersed with keen, windy days, have, without producing any material ailment, caused a feeling of indisposition in both young and old; and the influenza is now prevalent.

PURCHASING OUT SENIOR CIVILIANS.—We publish a letter regarding the fund which it is proposed to raise for buying-out the old civilians and quickening promotion. Our correspondent says, "that promotion, both in the upper and lower provinces, is utterly at a stand-still." Of this fact there can be little doubt. The stagnation is unprecedented. It seems as if the whole service had taken a vow of poverty and a draught of immortality, for a "death step," as it is called, is almost as rare as one by retirement. We much fear, moreover, that what was slow enough before will be rendered still slower by this villainous Union Bank failure. Ten or fifteen of the civilians upon whose kindness in creating vacancies there has been considerable reliance will now be constrained to protract their exile for ten years more. Our correspondent informs us that the income of the Civil Service Fund for the past year from subscriptions of four per cent. on salaries, amounted to Rs. 3,10,000. The salaries were therefore equal to Rs. 77,50,000. Ten years ago, they stood at Rs. 89,79,000, and the aggregate diminution has therefore been Rs. 12,29,000 the year. In consequence of this decrease of allowances, and the slowness of promotion, the subscriptions towards the annuity have fallen short to a very disheartening extent. When that fund was originally established, it was expected that four per cent. on monthly salaries would in twenty-five or thirty years make up the requisite sum of Rs. 50,000, which must be paid to secure the retiring annuity of 1,000 a year. We now learn that no civilian even of seventeen years' standing has subscribed as much as Rs. 16,000. We only wonder how they can have paid up so much; for this sum implies an average income of nearly Rs. 2,000 a month, during the whole period; and how few can obtain any thing higher than a magistracy upon Rs. 900 a month, for the first fourteen years of their service. Be that as it may, it is very evident that, after the great bulk of the Service have paid at the rate of 4 per cent. on their salaries for 25 years, they will still have a sum little short of Rs. 25,000 to make up to be entitled to the annuity, and that unless some stimulant can be applied, the bitter remark made by Burke, sixty years ago, will be reversed, that the natives of India never see the face of an old man. The writer proposes that the body of the civilians should subscribe four per cent. of their salaries to the fund for buying out the old hands. He calculates this contribution—after deducting disallowances—to yield Rs. 2,85,000. It is also a part of his plan that each civilian, on his promotion, should make over the salary of a month, or a month and a half, to the fund. This united sum, he thinks, would be sufficient to secure the retirement of nine of the senior servants annually. Supposing the individual promoted to step into a post of Rs. 3,500 a month, and to give the first-fruits of it to the fund, the sum at the disposal of the committee would be Rs. 3,16,500, or about Rs. 35,000 for each retirement. The question, therefore, is, how many men can be induced to give up appointments valued at from thirty to Rs. 52,000 a year for this gratuity.—Friend of India.

COURTS-MARTIAL.

LIEUT. WILLIAM HENRY LOWTHER, 52ND N.I.

Head-Quarters, Simla, April 14, 1848.—At a general court-martial, assembled at Lahore, April 1, 1848, Lieut. W. H. Lowther, 52nd N.I., was arraigned on the following charge:—

For highly unbecoming conduct, in having, at Kuppurthula, on or about Nov. 2, 1847, ordered his servants to maltreat Ramjee Doss, khuttree, an inhabitant of that place, and caused him to be beaten with a stick, his beard, moustache, and the hair of his head to be cut off, his face blackened, and shoes to be hung round his neck, and then paraded him about the town mounted on an ass; he, Lieut. Lowther, having also himself sprinkled the blood of parots and pigeons on the face of the said Ramjee Doss.

Finding.—The Court, from the evidence before it, is of opinion that the prisoner, Lieut. W. H. Lowther, 52nd N.I., is guilty of unbecoming conduct, in having, at Kuppurthula, on or about Nov. 2, 1847, caused the beard, moustache, and hair of the head of Ramjee Doss, khuttree, an inhabitant of that place, to be cut off, his face blackened, and then paraded about the town, mounted on an ass; but finds him not guilty of the rest of the charge, and acquits him of the same.

Sentence.—The Court, having found the prisoner guilty to the extent above specified, sentences him, Lieut. W. H. Lowther, 52nd N.I., to be reprimanded in such manner as his Exe. the Right Hon. the Commander-in-Chief may be pleased to direct.

Confirmed.

Head-Quarters, Simla, April 12, 1848.

Recommendation by the Court.—The Court respectfully begs to recommend the prisoner, Lieut. W. H. Lowther, to the favourable consideration of his Exe. the Right Hon. the Commander-in-Chief, as it is evident that the misconduct for which he has been now arraigned was, in November last, investigated in the civil court at Jullundur, and the sum of Rs. 190 paid in settlement of the case, the prisoner receiving a razeenamah that it was settled. The Court is also of opinion, that the prisoner was ready and willing to adopt such further measures as might have been considered requisite by his superiors to stop further proceedings, but that the case was submitted to Government without his being allowed the opportunity of doing so.

Remarks by the Right Hon. the Commander-in-Chief.—The Commander-in-Chief has to observe, that the misconduct of Lieut. Lowther was not atoned for by his satisfying the person whom he had punished to the extent stated in the finding of the Court, and whom, though he did not cause his servants to beat the man, he himself beat. Besides the injury to the individual, Lieut. Lowther's offence consisted in ill-treating a native, in the face of the most stringent standing orders to the contrary, and in ill-treating and disgracing a subject of an independent chieftain, an indignity which was represented to Government, and led to the present trial.

The general officer commanding the Punjab division will administer a suitable reprimand to Lieut. Lowther, in presence of all the officers of the troops at Lahore, after which Lieut. Lowther will be released from arrest, and directed to return to his duty.

ASSIST.-SURG. BAZIL VIRET, H. M. 98TH FOOT.

Head-Quarters, Simla, 28th April, 1848.—At a general court-martial assembled at Meerut, on April 18, 1848, assist.-surg. B. Viret, H. M.'s 98th regt. of foot, was arraigned on the following charge:—

For having, at Meerut, on April 1, 1848, been in a state of intoxication at the mess-room of the regiment, where many guests were present at dinner, and conducted himself in such a manner at the table, under the influence of drink, as to render it necessary to remove him from the room.

Finding.—Guilty.

Sentence.—To be dismissed the service.

Approved and confirmed.

(Signed)

Gough, General,

Commander-in-Chief, East India.

Head-Quarters, Simla, April 26, 1848.

Assist.-surg. Viret is to be struck off the strength of H. M.'s 98th regt., from the date of the publication of this order at the head-quarters of his regiment, which will be reported to the adjutant-general, and to the military secretary to his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief in India.

LIEUT. JOHN FORSTER FITZ-GERALD, H.M., 16TH LIGHT DRAGOONS.

Head-Quarters, Simla, April 28, 1848.—At a general court-martial assembled at Ferozepore, on April 19, 1848, Lieut.

Fitz-Gerald, 14th (or the king's) regt. of light dragoons, was arraigned on the following charge:—

For having, in the neighbourhood of Ferozepore, on March 9, 1848, feloniously and unlawfully killed Parowitz, syce, by wilfully kicking him over the region of the spleen, and thereby causing rupture or laceration of the spleen, whereof the said Parowitz, then and there, soon after died.

Finding.—Not guilty of the charge, and do fully acquit him of the same.

Approved and confirmed.

(Signed) Gouern, General,
Commander-in-Chief, East Indies.
Head-Quarters, Simla, April 26, 1848.

Fleet. Fitz-Gerald is to be released from arrest, and will return to his duty.

EXCHANGES.

Exchange has fallen since our last quotations: 1s. 10½d. to 1s. 10d. for Bank Post Bills, and 1s. 10½d. to 1s. 10½d. for Document Bills. The latter is scarce and much wanted.

FREIGHTS.

Freights have still a downward tendency, our quotations of 5l. to 5l. 6s. are with difficulty maintained, and a further decline is anticipated.

COMMERCIAL REPORT.

During the week which has elapsed since the date of our last report, business has been very quiet here, and the reports just received from home are not of a nature calculated to improve our markets. We apprehend that purchases of produce will for the present be confined to actual wants. Indigo has been quiet, and little done in it, buyers being unwilling to pay late prices, while holders of the remaining parcels shew no anxiety to give way. The demand for Sugar has fallen off. Saltpetre has continued in active demand at full previous rates, but there is very little in stock. Rice is still neglected. Raw Silk is in active inquiry. Silk Piece Goods are dull.

The animation reported in our last as pervading the Piece Goods branch of our Import Market has been damped by advices of an unfavourable nature recently received from the Upper Provinces. Light Glasgow fabrics remain without improvement. Printed Goods are regarded with a little more favour. Mule Twist has receded in price. Metals are quiet.

There is no change to note in the Money Market, nor in the value of Government securities. The coffers of the Bank are overflowing for want of approved investments.

MISCELLANEOUS.

LONDON MAIL of the 24th March, reached Madras by the steamer Bentinck on the 3rd May.

GOOMSOOR.—We understand that the inquiry into the late Goomsoor agency has terminated in the complete refutation of all the charges, which are pronounced unfounded and frivolous, and that the report strongly recommends the expression on the part of Government, of satisfaction in "the honourable acquittal of Captain Macpherson and his agency." This termination of the harassing and vexatious persecution of a meritorious public servant, must be highly satisfactory to Captain Macpherson and his friends, and we take leave to congratulate them upon it accordingly.—Calcutta Englishman, May 3.

COLONEL CHAMBERS.—On the 10th May, a board of medical officers assembled for the purpose of reporting upon the health of Colonel Chambers, of H. M. 25th K. C. B.

LIEUT. ROSSI.—It is understood that Lieut. A. P. Rossi of H. M. 51st K. O. L. Infantry, would appear before a medical board on the 12th May.

ARISTOLOCHIA INDICA.—The present editor of the Madras Athenaeum, Mr. Meade, who has recently arrived from England, has been making some experiments on the virtue of the Aristolochia Indica as a cure for the bite of snakes. The trial on dogs bitten by the cobra-de-capello has, however, entirely failed, and there is reason to fear that our hopes of obtaining a specific remedy against the venom of snakes will be disappointed.

DEATH FROM CHLOROFORM.—We regret to publish the following account of a case at Hyderabad, in which the use of chloroform caused the death of an individual to whom it was applied. The narrative, as will appear on perusal, proceeds from the pen of the operating surgeon, and we are indebted for it to Dr. Hardinge, to whom it was addressed for the purpose of public communication. It is exceedingly to be lamented, that dissection of the patient's body was not possible, since organic reasons for the fatal effects of the chloroform might very probably have presented themselves, to the reassurance of those who are apt to believe that the anæsthetic powers of the agent are dangerous, apart from internal disease. "A most distressing event has just occurred in my public practice here. Chloroform has proved fatal in my hands! A young woman presented herself this morning with disease of the distal phalanx of the middle finger of the left hand, requiring amputation at the middle joint. As she appeared of a timid disposition, and exhibited more than usual reluctance to submit to the little operation, I administered a dram of chloroform in the usual way, viz. by sprinkling it on a pocket handkerchief and causing her to inhale the vapour; she coughed a little and then gave a few convulsive movements; when these subsided I performed the necessary incisions, which of course did not occupy above a few seconds. Scarcely a drop of blood escaped. The patient was then put into the recumbent posture, the head low, and active means were taken to bring her out of the state of coma into which she had apparently fallen. But although these means, including artificial respiration, were perseveringly employed for five hours, the unfortunate woman never breathed again; I am inclined to think that death was almost instantaneous, for after the convulsive movement above described, she never moved or exhibited the smallest sign of life. No opportunity was afforded me of making a post mortem examination, so that it must for ever remain a secret whether or not there were any special circumstances, such as an aneurism of one of the great vessels, or disease of the heart, to account for the dreadful result. The chloroform used on this occasion I procured from Messrs. Twemlow and Co., Bombay, and a few days before I had used it with perfect success, and without the most trifling bad consequences, in a case almost similar on that occasion; a dram and a half was required to produce the desired insensibility, and so transient was the effect, that the patient appeared to be quite sensible when I passed the stitches that concluded the operation. It is useless to say that I deeply feel the tragical termination of this case. I feel it to be but little consolatory, that the first living surgeons at home and abroad have used this agent again and again without ill effects. But apart from these considerations, I deplore it as giving a shock to what I have reason to believe is the increasing confidence of this community in the surgical science of Europeans. I address myself to you as the head not only of one of the largest hospitals in India, but as the superintendent of an important medical school, where it is of the last importance that this fatal event should be known. But it is not enough that yourself, your colleagues, and pupils should know it, it must be published everywhere, that our professional workmen may know the terrible power of this agent: this you may do by publishing this hasty note, or in any other way you please."—Spectator.

COURT-MARTIAL.

ASSIST. SURG. JAMES MOUAT, H.M. 4TH (OR KING'S OWN) FOOT.

Head-Quarters, Madras, April 6, 1848.—At a general court-martial, holden at Bangalore, January 10, 1848, and continued February 4th, Assist. Surg. J. Mouat, H.M. 4th or the (K.O.) regt. of Foot, placed in arrest by order of Maj. Gen. Aitchison, comm. the Mysore division of the army, was arraigned upon the following charges:—

First Charge.—For highly insubordinate and disrespectful conduct, unbecoming the character of an officer, in having, at Bangalore, from the month of December, 1847, to the 8th of January, 1848, evaded obedience to an order proceeding from Maj. Gen. J. Aitchison, comm. the Mysore division of the army, directing him to attend at division head-quarters, for the purpose of hearing read a letter from his Exc. the Commander-in-Chief.

Second Charge.—For unofficerlike, ungentlemanlike, and highly disrespectful conduct, in the following instance:—

First Instance.—In having, at Bangalore, on about Dec. 1, 1847, and in reference to his having been officially at division head-quarters, in the month of November, 1847, knowingly falsely stated, in the hearing of several officers of the garrison at Bangalore, that when asked by Maj. Gen. Aitchison to remove his handkerchief from his face, he, Assist. Surg. Mouat, had replied to Maj. Gen. Aitchison, saying, "I shall not, I have a cold, and require it;" and further, on its being doubted that he could have so answered the Maj. Gen., he added, "yes I did, I said I shall not," or words to that effect.

Second Instance.—In having, at the same time and place mentioned in the first instance, and in reference to his having been officially at division head-quarters in the month of November, 1847, knowingly falsely stated, in the hearing of several officers of the garrison of Bangalore, that he had, in reply to a question from Maj. Gen. Aitchison, answered the Maj. Gen., saying, "yes, it is my reason; I suppose I speak English," or words to that effect.

The above being in breach of the Articles of War.

(Signed) JOHN AITCHISON, Major-General.

Bangalore, Jan. 9, 1848.

Additional Charges.—I charge Assist. Surg. J. Mouat, of H.M. 4th, or the King's Own regt. of Foot, with unofficerlike, ungentlemanlike, insubordinate, and most disrespectful conduct, in having, at Bangalore, on or about Dec. 1, 1847, asserted to Capt. W. H. Hone, of H.M. 51st, or the King's Own Light Inf., that he had, sometime previously, at the Bangalore race-course, told me he would horsewhip me, or any one else, who spread reports that he, Assist. Surg. Mouat, or his father, had been writing in the newspapers. Such assertion of Assist. Surg. Mouat being contrary to the truth, in so far as relates to his having threatened to horsewhip me. The words used by him on the occasion referred to being, "You may tell whoever told you, that I am prepared to horsewhip him," or words to that effect.

The above being in breach of the Articles of War.

(Signed) J. H. SULLIVAN, M.D., Surg. H.M.'s 51st Regt.

Bangalore, 23rd Jan., 1848.

Upon which charges the Court came to the following decision:—

Revised Finding on the First Charge.—Not guilty.

Revised Finding on the First Instance of the Second Charge.—Not guilty.

Revised Finding on the Second Instance of the Second Charge.—Not guilty.

Revised Finding on the Additional Charge.—Not guilty.

Remarks by the Commander-in-Chief.—I consider that the Court should have found specially on the 2nd charge, but I confirm its opinion upon that charge, and approve and confirm its finding on the remaining charges.

(Signed) G. H. BARKLEY, Lieut. Gen.

Madras, April 5, 1848.

Assist. Surg. James Mouat is to be released from arrest and directed to rejoin his regiment.

[No papers of a later date than those extracted from into our last have been received from Madras; hence we have no appointments to insert.]

THE PENNY POSTAGE SYSTEM IN THE PUNJAB.

A writer from the Punjab states, that through the exertions of Colonel Laurence a one-anna-dawk has been established from Feroz Khan to Lahore—a great benefit to the natives of this part of the world, who use it very extensively. I trust, he says, the example set in the Punjab as to cheap postage may soon spread throughout India,—the present extravagant rates making not a few evade the regular dawk altogether. The Punjab will quickly become the model by which the government of India may adjust its measures. It led the way in the abolition of transit duties, and in this it has now been nobly followed. Colonel Laurence within a year of our occupation furnished us with a classified census for Lahore, such as has not hitherto been provided for any town within the Company's dominions. Then followed road-making on a scale which put India everywhere to shame. Other reforms of greater or less magnitude have everywhere been carried out, which do not at this moment occur to us, till finally we come to the penny postage system, which we have been talking about since before the Sikh war began, but in reference to which, so far as is known, nothing has as yet been effected. Colonel Laurence has once more re-impressed on the world the grand moral never to be lost sight of, of how easy it is to do good would we only set resolutely and promptly about it. It seems to be in things virtuous only that we are apprehensive of incurring responsibilities; wars without number have been begun without the preliminary required by the Act of Parliament, of first consulting the Court of Directors; the responsibility of squandering life and treasure in hostile operations has rarely occasioned any apprehension—we shrink from the risk of loss of revenue or favour with the Court only when some great measure of peace, improvement, or unmixt good is to be adopted. Were the Governor-General, instead of consulting about the matter, to decree at once, without the usual delay, that from and after the 1st of June, 1848, all postages in India were to be reduced to one anna for letters not exceeding a quarter of an ounce in weight, the postage to be paid in advance, official privilege of despatch to cease; newspapers to pay a half-anna stamp, not to exceed three tolas in weight; and a quarter-anna on supplements of half the paper size,—he would not experience more than a transient frown from the Court of Directors, which the shout of universal applause which would attend the measure would transform into a smile. A large portion of the loss of revenue which would accrue, if any loss there really was, would be made up by the saving effected by Government on stationery, where a new variety of returns would at once be adopted; thick foolscap would give way to thin post, and it would be found for the interest of all parties to have information condensed as much as possible. Lord Ellenborough determined to conquer Scinde, not only in the face of a direct prohibition of the Court of Directors, but of an express clause in an Act of Parliament: has the representative of the joint houses of Maitle and Ramsay, not so much of the daring of his ancestors in his blood as to grapple with one of the most important, simple, and most obvious of reforms! How long are we to drag behind our Sikh allies? How far in the rear of the Punjab are we to continue in the march of improvement?—Bombay Times, May 3.

DR. IMPEY.—It is reported that Dr. Impey is likely to get the appointment of presidency surgeon at Indore.

COAL FROM THE INDUS.—We have been favoured by a correspondent with some specimens of coal from the Upper Indus, near Malabagh. It differs very materially from most of what we have seen from seams in India. It retains its woody structure, but bears a very close resemblance to some of the less perfect specimens of jet from near Whitby, in Yorkshire. It is hard, heavy, and lustrous; breaks with an imperfect conchoidal fracture, seems to have considerable toughness, and might, we should imagine, be easily cut into ornaments and polished. Its remoteness from any place of consumption, and the extreme cheapness of fire-wood on the Indus, will, we should imagine, make it of little value as fuel, however abundant it may be on the banks of the river. It burns freely, and gives out a very large quantity of heat. Along with it specimens of iron pyrites, in which it abounds, have reached us. The mineral is common amongst most kinds of coal, and greatly deteriorates their quality. It is of no sort of value by itself. It is often mistaken for a copper ore, to which externally it bears a strong resemblance.—Bombay Times, April 26.

THE LEVEE.—The Right Honourable the Governor, Viscount Falkland, held a levee on the 13th May, at the Town Hall, at half-past ten o'clock A.M. His Excellency arrived from Parell House shortly before the hour named for the levee, and the following military honours were paid on the occasion, in pursuance of garrison orders issued after the notification of the levee. The 24th regt. N.I. furnished a guard of honour, consisting of a complete flank company, with its proportion of European and Native commissioned and non-commissioned officers, with the regimental colour and band, who attended at the Town Hall and were drawn up in front of the western entrance to receive the Right Honourable the Governor on his arrival. His Excellency was accompanied by Colonel Ashburnham, military secretary, and the other gentlemen attached to his staff, and escorted by the body-guard. The band of the 24th regiment N.I. were in the orchestra of the hall, and continued to perform new and popular airs during the morning. Of course every one wore full costume, and the variety of uniforms observable in the noble apartment in which the distinguished circle of presentations met constituted a tout ensemble as beautiful as can well be conceived.

R. WIGHT, ESQUIRE, surgeon-general, retires from the service this day, and proceeds to Europe by the steamer. Great sacrifices have we understand been made by our medical friends to secure this step, with the view of clearing the way for Dr. McLennan's immediate admission into the medical board, and of bringing Dr. Burnes there also at an early period,—these two gentlemen being considered likely to advance the interests of the service more effectually than has recently been done. The promotions consequent on the present step are as follow:—Inspector-general Tawse to be surgeon-general, Superintending-surgeon McLennan to be inspector-general, Surgeon Gibb to be superintending-surgeon at Bombay, and Assistant-surgeon Watkins to be surgeon.—Bombay Times, May 20.

CAPTAIN B. HARRISON, of the 10th hussars, has been appointed A. D. C. to the Right Honourable the Governor, vice Captain D'Arcy, returned home by last steamer. The last-named officer had been A. D. C. at Parell through five administrations. Captains W. McMahon and R. H. Gail, of the 14th dragoons, proceed, we believe, immediately to join in the north-west provinces, according to general order.

THE HILLS.—Letters of the 17th from the Hills mention that the order for the officers of H. M.'s 8th on leave at Mahabulshwar immediately to join their regiment, had been countermanded the morning after it was issued. The weather was still threatening, and during the last few days towards noon, dark lowering clouds had appeared in the east and south-east, and the rumbling of distant thunder had been heard.

ANHYDROUS COMPACT GYPSUM.—Dr. Malcolmson has forwarded to Dr. Carter from Sukkur, specimens of anhydrous compact gypsum, as fine-grained and as pure as the most perfect Parian marble. We have received some particulars in reference to this beautiful rock beyond those noticed by Dr. Carter. It appears to abound over a considerable tract of country in the Hala Mountains bordering on our territories, and is not difficult to remove. It is wonderfully uniform in its texture, and rises in masses of any size: it is much harder than the mineral is in general, and does not yield to the nail. Its translucency considerably exceeds that of marble. Italy has long been the great seat of manufactures in alabaster: but where carving is so well understood, and so extensively practised, as in India, and where such things are obviously in demand, now that we have discovered an inexhaustible mine of raw material, we should imagine that the working of it might be taken up with alacrity. We hope by-and-by to be in possession of larger specimens than those which have yet reached the presidency, when some more definite conclusions may be attained than can be arrived at at present. Alabaster is much more easily worked than marble, but it has this disadvantage—it is materially injured by the rain.—Times, May 20.

SIR WILLUGHBY COTTON has incurred the anger of the press for taking up and republishing an old order of 1822, which was intended to prohibit military men from making known their grievances through the medium of the newspapers.

THE MEER SHADAD.—The Telegraph and Courier informs us that the case of the Meer Shadad, late prisoner in Surat Castle, has been inquired into by the Governor-General, and the ameer fully and honourably acquitted of all connection with the murder of Capt. Ennis. Lord Hardinge must have had strong reasons to believe in his innocence before he directed his liberation and transmission to Calcutta, and he now stands freed of all imputation. Of the other imputations cast upon them we doubt not but that Shadad and his brethren are as guiltless as of this. The acquittal of the ameer is the conviction of his defamers: they are not unknown to the Government of India, and they deserve no mercy at their hands. They who would traduce the character of the fallen, to justify the wickedness of those who caused their fall, would hesitate at little in the way of criminality, and are in point of virtue on a par with the hiring defamer who would for a paltry consideration swear the life or character of his fellow-creature away. Meer Shadad is, it seems, to be put on the same allowances and footing as his brethren in captivity.—Bombay Times.

THE FEROZE.—This magnificent steamer, of the same noble class in which the H. C.'s steamers Moozuffer and Ajdaha are placed, and destined for the future service of the Indian Navy, was floated out of dock on Thursday morning, the 18th of May. The same preparations had been made to do honour to the occasion which distinguished the recent launches of H. M.'s brigs Nerbudda and Jumna. The importance of an event such as the one we are chronicling brought to its scene, in despite of the heat of the weather, which in the dock-yard, of all places in Bombay, is well nigh insufferable, a very large concourse of the rank and fashion of Bombay, and the élite of both the European and native communities. The Right Hon. Viscount Falkland, Governor of Bombay; the Viscountess Falkland; his Excellency Sir Willoughby Cotton, Commander-in-Chief; Sir Robert Oliver, Commander-in-Chief of the Indian Navy, and the majority of our "great folks," still remaining in Bombay, whose names are so familiar to our readers that we need not recapitulate them, arrived at the dock-yard shortly after ten o'clock, and seated themselves in the beautifully fitted-up apartment which the Indian naval authorities had made ready for their accommodation. Before them was the steamer, duly decorated with the gallant ensign of England—blue, red, and white—flying at the mastheads, and wreaths of flowers. At about half-past ten, Lady Falkland advanced to the tastily fitted-up platform in front of the bows of the Feroze, and, breaking the bottle of Champagne placed there in readiness, audibly wished success to the vessel. The whole of the noble and distinguished party collected there immediately repaired to the highest story of the Factory, from which they witnessed with great apparent interest the remainder of the proceedings; which consisted of "hauling out" the steamer from the dock. This operation was successfully and admirably accomplished under the directions and superintendence of Mr. Oliver. The only accident which occurred was the unlucky precipitation into the water of a Seede, arising from his precipitancy in performing some duty devolving upon him. He fell from the paddle-box into the water; and the height being very great, he was apparently unable, for a minute, to avail himself of the help instantly accorded to him by the men who had ropes at command, which were thrown out to him. He was ultimately brought safe and uninjured to land. The usual salutes were fired, and the Feroze "walked the waters as a thing of life." The spectators then separated.

THE QUEEN.—We understand that the H. C. steamer Queen is to be paid off, and to be taken into dock on the 1st proximo, as it is found necessary that she should undergo extensive repairs, which will occupy a considerable time.

POONAH, May 15.—In accordance with instructions received from the higher authority, our general officer commanding the Poonah division has warned the following corps to hold themselves in readiness, "in marching order," to proceed at a moment's notice to their respective destinations, as follows:—Right wing of H. M.'s 8th regt. to Bombay; from thence to Scinde (Kurrachee, I suppose). A wing of H. M.'s 22nd regt. to Bombay for garrison duty. A detachment of the 1st regiment grenadiers, consisting of 500 rank and file, and the usual proportions of European and native commissioned officers to Tan-nah, on outpost duty. Indents have been requested to be prepared for carriage, camp equipage, &c. &c. for the above-named details. Further particulars you shall have in my next. No other news; every thing is quiet, as quiet could be,—there is a little flurry in the lines, in buying and selling and packing and re-packing. The weather is pleasant: the evenings still continue cloudy.

May 17.—We had a very heavy fall of rain, on Saturday last, accompanied with a little forked, and a great deal of sheet, lightning, and loud peals of thunder. It has again cleared up, and the weather, I am happy to say, is considerably cooler: we may, I think, fully expect an early monsoon this year. The new barracks of H. M.'s 22nd regiment are not likely to be roofed before the monsoon sets in; but as they are pukka in their construction, no damage need be apprehended. These barracks, by the way, are certainly magnificent, and the comfort of the soldier has been consulted in their construction. What with fine parlours, capacious and lofty apartments, and wide verandas for dining in, and punkas, the soldier will now be able to luxuriate in an Indian climate. It was time, however, that the poor soldier's welfare was thought of. These structures need not now be termed the patchwork expedients of the British Government, which in the end used to run away with the revenues of a principality in their constant recurring repairs. These will last for ages, and like the Mahratta and Mahometan edifices, defy the ravages of time. We only wish that the Jamsetjee Bund had been undertaken by the former government, and we would be bound that it would never have turned out a failure. It is a discredit to the British Government.

—An hotel is about being established in Poona, in the civil limits, by two wealthy Mahomedans. It is not known by what name it will be called. As the project has been set on foot during the administration of our new governor, we would recommend their calling it Falkland Hotel. A place of this kind was very much wanted in a large station like this; and we hope that the difficulty of obtaining accommodation for short periods during the rains by persons coming from Bombay will now be obviated. If it is conducted on good principles, there is very little doubt that it will prove remunerative to the parties.—Courier and Telegraph.

H. E. THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF landed at Apollo Bunder yesterday morning, at half-past six o'clock, when a salute of 17 guns was fired from the battery. His Excellency proceeded to take up his residence at the Hope Hall Hotel.—The arrival of the Commander-in-Chief is said to be connected with the despatch of troops to Scinde. A council was holden yesterday, at which the matter was decided,—against sending troops, it is believed, for the present.—Gentleman's Gazette, May 18.

INDUS FLOTILLA.—We understand that the steamer which proceeds this day to Kurrachee, is to take to that port Captain Christopher, the Commandant of the Indus Flotilla. This gallant officer has made many trips on the Indus and even ascended the Chenaub as high as Moulton. His knowledge of the navigation of the Indus and its tributaries cannot but prove useful on this occasion. He, we learn with pleasure, entertains no doubt of the facility of transporting guns, ammunition and troops by the Indus and the Chenaub to within one mile and a half of Moulton. With a well equipped expedition from Sukker, with a proper battering train, there can be no doubt that the British, especially when supported by Ali Moorad and by the khan of Bhawalpore, a friendly sovereign, whose capital is situated on the Sutledge about seventy miles from Moulton, would soon become masters of that wealthy spot; which is described by Mr. Elphinstone, who passed some days there in December, 1803, as being a highly fertile country.

The British merchants, and especially those of Bombay, want so excellently situated an emporium for their commerce as Moulton is, and we trust if the British troops now obtain possession of the town and neighbouring district, that they will both be retained for the benefit of trade and civilization.—Gentleman's Gazette, May 3.

COAL FROM KALABAGH.—Dr. Giraud has just had under examination three varieties of the coal lately brought by Lieutenant Christopher, I.N. from Kalabagh, with a view to determine their relative properties as fuel. One of the specimens is one of the finest of the kind Dr. Giraud has ever met with; its appearance is intermediate betwixt cannel coal, jet, and lignite. It yields enormous quantities of carburetted hydrogen, so rich in olephant gas, that a series of experiments have been determined on to ascertain the amount, the quality, and the price of the olephant gas it will produce, compared with coal from other parts of the Panjab, and from the Nerbudda, from English cannel coal, and from cocoanuts, and cocoa-nut oil. It is the most remarkable coal on record for the large quantity of combustible gases it yields, for the small amount of ashes it gives on burning, and for the absence in it of any pyritic matter, or of any other sulphurets: all which points of its composition render it so admirably adapted to gas manufacture. The chief disadvantage it possesses in relation to steam navigation purposes arises from its extreme lightness,—its density being only 1,264—some of it even lighter than this. One thousand parts of it yield only thirty-two of earthy incombustible matters, and as much as six hundred of gaseous, and three hundred and sixty-eight of solid carbon. One hundred weight of this coal yields 307.9 cubic feet of a rich carburetted hydrogen or street gas. Enquiries such as these are not only extremely interesting in themselves, but might be productive of the most important results were there any probability of gas-light ever being introduced in Bombay. This we fear, at the same time, is scarcely a thing to be looked for: the enormous expense of piping with a population so dispersed as ours is, interferes on the side of outlay, while the want of factories and large shops which make use of thousands of lights without requiring a foot of extra main,—the early hours kept by every one, and the entire cessation of business after twilight, are formidable objections in the way of returns. The only place where gas would prove remunerative is at Parell, where a small work for the use of Government House might effect a material saving, especially under the regime of a party-and-ball-giving Governor. Some of the finest of the specimens both of the salt and coal brought by Capt. Christopher, are to be seen in the ante-room of the Council chamber—now open—at the top of the stair ascending from the Medical Board extremity of the Town Hall.—Bombay Times.

THE ABANDONMENT OF THE SOUTHAMPTON ROUTE FOR BOMBAY LETTERS.—We noticed some issues back the abandonment of the Southampton route for letters sent from India; and the excessive inconvenience arising from the change will begin to be felt immediately. The circumstances of the case are these:—The Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company have only one complete line of steamers to Alexandria,—that which leaves Southampton on the 20th of each month, and takes on the Calcutta mails. The Smyna steamer, which in general has a very valuable cargo of goods both ways, brings on the mails and passengers to Malta, and then proceeds straight on her way to the Dardanelles. An intermediate steamer completes the line betwixt Malta and Alexandria; she has in general but few passengers, and hardly ever any cargo at all. The Iberia used to be employed on this service till the Erin and Ariel—two new boats of 700 tons each, and no less than 300 horse-power, or a third over the ordinary allowance—were placed on the line, with the view of performing every thing the very highest rates of speed and certainty of arrival could attain. The hope meanwhile was held out, that the terms of the contract would be improved, and that the company would obtain the mail conveyance direct to Marseilles, for which the vessels just named would have been sufficient. The extreme pinch in the treasury has brought all this to an end, and the original line of Indian communication—established when it was believed it would suffice for the whole presidency—has been abandoned. Letters leaving this on the 1st of the month, or leaving England on the 24th, will travel direct betwixt Marseilles and Alexandria. Bombay passengers must shift for themselves as they best can. It is hoped that by-and-by some arrangement may be made with the Austrian Lloyd's Company, and that the Trieste route may become available: meanwhile parties anxious for light postages should patronize the mid-monthly mails exclusively, and recommend friends at home to write by the mails of the first week of the month alone. The confusion under these circumstances will be extremely annoying; and it is all the more so that it is the great mail of India, by which latest letters from every quarter are sent, that is affected by it. We trust a little agitation may improve matters by-and-by.—Bombay Times, May 20.

MARKETS.

Friday Afternoon, May 19, 1848.—During the period that has elapsed since our last report, which was dated the 12th instant, no change of importance has occurred in our market for imports. Some excitement has been caused by the decision of the Supreme Court here against the repudiation of the opium bargains, but we think it is likely soon to subside. An opinion is expressed in some quarters, that much loss will fall upon parties in Bombay, and thereby cause some injury to our commercial interests: this opinion we think erroneous, for as we have before stated, the chief loss will fall upon the Mharwarie Shroffs and dealers, and they are able and prepared to meet their obligations. Some of our native merchants will no doubt suffer severely also, but no general ill effect is, we think, likely to result therefrom. We are glad to have it in our power to continue to report favourably of the state of our money market. Our up-country dealers find no difficulty in obtaining the usual facilities for their operations, and notwithstanding the now fast approaching close of the season, they are still in the market continuing their purchases.

COTTON PRICE GOODS.—Our market has been steady during the past week for Grey Goods of almost all descriptions, with the exception of Grey Domestic, which continue much depressed. Grey Madapollams are eagerly inquired for, as also Grey Jaconets of low and middling qualities. Grey Shirtings of 40 inches widths of low quality are in good demand, and there is also some inquiry for the finer makes, but the intermediate makes are not much asked for. Low and middling makes of the same fabrics in 45 inches widths are in fair request. Bleached goods of all the foregoing descriptions are not in such active demand, and the prices obtained are somewhat lower than those previously ruling. Fancy Goods, Satin Spots, Striped and Checked, Doriahs, Lappet Scarfs 5 yards 45 inches, and 45 inches Grey Dhooties, have been in some inquiry, and are scarce; while Lappets, Mull Mulls, and Harness Sprigs, continue dull of sale. In Dyed Goods we have no change to notice, as both Turkey Red Twilled and Plain Cloth continue languid, with only an occasional inquiry for a superior quality.

COTTON YARN.—Further shipments have been made to Calcutta, and as stocks in this market are now much reduced, holders generally are indisposed to sell, but buyers as yet refuse to give higher prices, and the sales reported are at the low rates previously ruling.

COCHINEAL.—A further decline has taken place in the value of this article, and the price may be quoted at Rs. 3½, at which we have heard of a sale of 1700 lbs.

METALS.—We have had some arrivals of English Bar Iron, but no sales have yet been effected, though we hear Rs. 37½ has been refused for a good assortment. In other descriptions there is no change. Copper has experienced a further decline. Spelter has been shipped in some quantities to Calcutta, but prices here have continued to recede since the date of our last report. Swedish Steel, both in faggots and tubs, is dull, and in limited demand. Lead is steady at our quotations, and there is a good inquiry for both Pig and Sheet.

OPIMUM.—The price of this drug remains steady at Rs. 1650 per chest for first quality, at which rate purchases have been made. The Braganza steamer sailed to-day with 607 chests for China.

SRIARRS.—Brandy continues to decline, sales to the extent of 7 hhds, and 26 quarter casks having been made at Rs. 2½ per gallon. Gin is in good demand, and 50 kilders, containing 15 large square bottles, have been sold at Rs. 19 each, and 50 kilders containing 12 small ones at Rs. 9 each.

BERR.—Little has been done in this article since the date of our last, the shopkeepers being unwilling to continue paying the high prices that have of late been ruling, and confining their purchases to the supply of their immediate wants.

CEYLON.

THE GOVERNOR OF CEYLON AND THE CEYLON RIFLES.

It appears the Ceylon rifles is a tabooed corps in the eyes of Lord Torrington. Our readers will recollect a notice in the Observer some months ago of a misunderstanding between the governor and the officers in consequence of an alleged observation by the former, to the effect that "Lieut. Teasdale having left the regiment, there was not a gentleman in it." It was generally understood that Lord Torrington had confined this his private opinion to the safe-keeping of a young lady—who related it in confidence to another young lady—who told it in strict confidence to an old lady—who mentioned it to a gentleman—who—but we need not trace the progress of the rumour further—our readers know the mode in which such secrets usually come out. Suffice it to say, that the injurious report came before the rifle officers, in a shape so tangible, that their commanding officer felt himself justified in addressing Major General Smelt on the subject. The general would not write to the governor; but the latter saw the Observer, and offered an explanation, which we mentioned as being by no means satisfactory to a large portion of the officers. Our assertion remained and remains uncontradicted. The governor then again gave vent to his private sentiments, and we understand they were these: That inasmuch as the officers of the rifles had failed to notice and contradict the paragraph in the Observer, they might consider themselves as lying under his displeasure, and consequently shut out from all expectation of Staff appointments, &c. This feeling his Lordship is said to have communicated to Major General Smelt, and its operations are said to be marked in a recent occurrence. Our readers will have noticed in our last, a General Order embodying the result of a recent Court of Enquiry at Kandy. Capt. Wingfield and Lieut. Wilkinson are represented to us as getting off very easily, considering the circumstances of the case, which are said to be as follows:—Lieut. MacDougall entered the mess room of the 15th, and was invited by Lieut. Wilkinson to a game at billiards—he accepted the invitation, and engaged in a bet. Next day a letter was received by Capt. Lillie from a captain in the 15th, whose name we have forgotten, but who acted as the mouthpiece of the 15th mess, stating that Lieut. MacDougall had endeavoured to induce the Mess waiter to fill Lieut. Wilkinson's tumbler with pure brandy instead of brandy and water, Lieut. MacDougall's object being presumed to be that of so confusing Lieut. Wilkinson as to make him lose his bet! Now, most persons will agree with us, that this was a charge so serious that it ought not only to have excluded Lieut. MacDougall from the 15th mess (as was intimated in the letter to Captain Lillie it should do) but from the society of all honest and honourable men. Such a charge ought to be cautiously received and carefully enquired into. The officers of the 15th, however, it appears, contented themselves with the testimony of a servant, and never gave the accused an opportunity of defending himself. The matter was at once taken up by the officers of the rifles; and the governor and major-general, finding that the officers of the favourite 15th had got into a scrape, were most anxious to get the matter hushed up. The major-general sent a verbal message to Lieut. MacDougall, asking him if he would be satisfied by being received again at the mess of the 15th, and nothing further being said about the matter, the reply was an official letter from Lieut. MacDougall, to the effect, that nothing would satisfy him but a full investigation; and that if the officers of the 15th did not persevere in their charge against him, he was prepared to prefer charges against them. This forced the major-general to appoint a court of enquiry, the result of whose investigations appeared in our last. We understand that the officers of the 15th failing to establish the charge, wanted to prove that Lieut. MacDougal had entered their mess in a state of inebriety. The Court of Enquiry, however, it appears, did not think the evidence sufficient on any point, and the Commander of the Forces has been compelled to declare Lieut. MacDougal entirely exonerated from the charges so inconsiderately preferred against him. This affair and the governor's interference on behalf of the 15th, and especially on behalf of Lieut. Wilkinson, have, we understand, produced a feeling of no slight exasperation amongst the officers of the rifles.

Our informant is a party incapable of wilful misrepresentation, but, if we are misinformed, or our memory has erred on any point, we are open to correction. We shall not of course pay any attention to such denials as the Ceylon Times, in imitation of Sir C. Napier, indulges in. "Falsehood" and an "amphigonic lie" are "prove ords" no doubt, but they contain neither argument, nor proof. We say, with the old mathematical professor, when he was called a liar, "Prove it, Prove it!"—Colombo Observer, April 13.

THE LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.—We hear that the vacant seat in the council, lately held by Mr. Ackland, is not yet filled up. Rumour has it that it will be offered to a gentleman connected with the planting interest.—Times, April 28.

OUR WEATHER.—Until yesterday, has for the last week exhibited all the phases of the monsoon; heavy squalls, accompanied with torrents of rain, and electrical displays, deceived many with the impression that the monsoon had set in. Yesterday, however, the weather again changed to fair and gentle breezes from the westward, the heralds of the monsoon, and we may now safely calculate on an interval of about three weeks of fine weather pending the advent of our rainy season. This will be some consolation to planters who have yet coffee to ship before the monsoon fairly sets in. The Observer of yesterday contains some remarks on the occurrence of a hail storm at Jaffna; a very unusual phenomenon in that locality. We have also information of a very heavy hail storm which occurred at Ootacamunda pass, on the high road to Kandy, a few days since. A gentleman informed us that a perfect storm of hail fell for a considerable period, covering the house tops to some depth, and filling the drains in the roads. The natives were busily engaged in filling chatties with the frozen drops, attributing to them some miraculous power, but were miserably disappointed at finding them nothing but water after all, and very poor water too. The coincidence of the appearance of the "sleety shower" in several parts of the island with the presence of a cargo of ice, is not a little singular.—Ibid.

His Excellency the Governor returns from Kandy, we understand, about the 10th proximo. The Commander-in-Chief and the Hon. Sir James Emerson Tennent also return from their up-country visit on Tuesday.—Ibid.

SCINDE.

We have letters from Upper Scinde to the 6th instant. Everything remained quiet, and the Boogties, in place of joining our enemies, as was expected by some, were daily coming in in tens and twelves, for the purpose of settling at Larkhana. With such a man as Colonel Shaw in command, and Jacob's horse on the frontier, we have nothing to apprehend from the sowing of the people, should they be fool-hardy enough to make the attempt. The weather during the day was becoming extremely hot, but the nights were pleasant. The canals were beginning to fill rapidly, and a most prosperous harvest was looked forward to by the cultivators of all classes—a sufficient inducement of itself to keep them quiet at all events for some time to come. The whole of the troops of the brigade, as well as the inhabitants of the country, were in the enjoyment of good health—the former highly elated at the prospect before them of active employment against the marauders of two of their countrymen. The 1st Belooch battalion were presented with their colours on the morning of the 6th, by Colonel Shaw, who as usual made a most brilliant speech to the men. The corps is at present commanded by Lieut. G. F. Mayer, 25th N. I., second in command, during Major Jackson's absence. Some splendid specimens of anhydrous gypsum, of singular beauty, had been obtained from the Boogtie hills, where it was found in immensurable masses. It is said to be excellently well adapted for statuary purposes. The company of the 9th N. I., under Capt. Parves, sent up to Kanmore by the steamer Napier, was on its march back. From Kurrachee we have letters to the 16th instant. Lower Scinde was also quiet; the people were busy and full of their own affairs. Our officials had apparently forgotten a subject, which, at one time, was the sole source of interest—changes in the system of government likely to affect the many. The affairs of Mooltan had monopolized their ideas. The artillery at Kurrachee was held in readiness for a move, but it would be madness to think of doing anything for the next three months. The steamer Assyria left Kurrachee on the 16th for Kotree with Colonel Le Messurier, Lieut. Younghusband, &c.

SIAM.

THE BANGKOK CALENDAR.—Who would have thought, twenty years ago, of the issue of a calendar from a press in the capital of the kingdom of Siam? But wherever the missionary goes, be the country barbarous or civilized, he takes with him the great pioneer of modern civilization, a printing-press, and thus lays a foundation of civilizing influences. He sets up a foundry, reduces the characters of the language to a typographical form, cuts punches, and casts types, and diffuses knowledge, secular and evangelical, far beyond the sphere of his personal intercourse. The little brochure before us, with its grotesque Siamese cover, contains a good specimen of the Siamese types which Mr. Chandler has cut, and which are extensively used in the publication of religious and scientific tracts. Of Siam we know little, except that the king sent an envoy to the court of Louis XIV., in the seventeenth century, and that the British Government deputed Mr. Crawford as our representative to form a commercial treaty with the reigning prince some twenty years ago; that the articles of the treaty have never been much respected; that the government is continually interfering with the current trade, and that but for this vexatious interference, the country would be able to export no small quantity of sugar to the English market. This little calendar gives us some interesting information relative to the state of the country and the capital. The country contains 3,000,000 of inhabitants, of whom 35,000 are priests. The established religion is, of course, Buddhism, but other religions are tolerated, though it is considered disgraceful for a Siamese to change his religion. The trade of Siam is under great restrictions, and the duty on foreign-rigged square vessels is so high as almost to prevent their resort to the port. The sugar crop averages about 160,000 piculs, rather less than 80,000 tons a year; but with proper encouragement and suitable machinery, ten times this quantity might be raised. The duty on English and American ships coming in ballast is 1,500 ticals the fathom of 6 ft. 6 in. English, and if with cargo, 1,700 ticals. The measurement is taken across the widest part of the vessel, without reference to length, draught, and tonnage. The science of ship-building has been introduced, and has made more progress than we were prepared to expect in this semi-barbarous country. The first square-rigged vessels built after the European mode, were the Ariel and the Conqueror, the one of eighty, the other of 500 tons. They were constructed in 1835, by a gentleman with a very long name, Khun Phra Nai Wai Woranat, the eldest son of his excellency the Phra Klang. The king was so well pleased with them as to order royal docks to be constructed in the vicinity of Bangkok. Into these docks was received the hull of the Caledonia, a vessel of 780 tons, which had been built elsewhere. Two war-junks were also constructed, the Fairy, and the Sir Walter Scott, for the royal navy of Siam. Here is fame for us. What would the author of "Guy Raverling" have said, if it had been predicted to him that in the far east, in the semi-barbarous and almost unknown region of Siam, the king should pay him the compliment of christening one of his own junks with his name? But a larger achievement was at hand. The Victory,—not Nelson's "Victory," but as remarkable a vessel for the circumstances of the country,—of 1,070 tons, was launched within two years after the art of ship-building had been introduced; but by this time Khun Phra Nai Wai Woranat had been appointed royal ship-builder, and commissioner of dock-yards. This individual, we are told, has some knowledge of English, and with the aid of books and shipbuilders, has constructed vessels which reflect great credit on him and on his country.

The following account of the machine-shop of Bangkok we give entire:—

"The friends of improvement will rejoice to learn that a machine-shop has been established in Siam. It was commenced by his Royal Highness Prince T. Momfaoi in 1844. One of the missionaries, who is a practical mechanic, aided him in this work, but the Prince being a man of talent and genius, has made and arranged things to please himself. His royal highness speaks and reads the English language with tolerable correctness, and, having a good English library, which contains many valuable mechanical and scientific works, he is able to construct his tools and machines from the best models."

The number of missionaries in Siam is considerable. The American Baptist Mission has four labourers, independently of native assistants. The American Independents have three, and the American Presbyterians two. Nine Protestant labourers in all. The Roman Catholic Mission, one of the most ancient in that community, has at its head the Right Reverend Dr. Pallegoix, bishop of Mallos and Vicar-Apostolic of Siam, the Rev. P. M. Clemanceau, the principal of the college, and six professors, in addition to five native teachers.

The printing-offices are also numerous; there are twice as many at Bankok as at Agra. The Baptist mission has two presses, two founts of Siamese and four of English, besides a foundry, and what is called by a Transatlantic innovation—but not an improvement—a bindery, by which we suppose a binding office is intended. The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions has two presses, two founts of Siamese and two of English, as well as a foundry and bindery. The Catholic college printing-office has also one press and type for printing Siamese and Cochinchinese in Roman character; and the press of his Royal Highness Chaufa Mongkut also contains one press, a fount of Siamese, two of Pali, and one of English; and he has prepared a new character for the Pali, which is called Ariyk. Finally, we have a memorandum of the vessels which arrived in the port in 1847; five under English, one under Danish, one under Portuguese, and thirteen under Siamese colours.—Friend of India.

JULLUNDHUR DOAB.

THE following is an extract of a letter from Hosheypore, dated the 17th April:—"This is altogether a nice station—situated in a most beautiful country, and although little can be said in praise of the deep sandy roads and parade grounds, up to your ankles in dust within cantonments, yet a ten minutes' canter will conduct you into a country rich in foliage, and fields waving with crops of gram, and through some of the prettiest green lanes I ever saw, reminding me very much of those in old England. To the north and east of the cantonments there are three ranges of small hills, the nearest about four miles off, and these again are backed by the high Kangra range, covered with perpetual snow, and the sun's rays shining upon this pure white mantle, has a dazzling but refreshing effect. The lines of the 1st Sikh regiment and the civil station are beautifully situated in the midst of some noble trees, about a mile from cantonments, not very far from the city of Hosheypore, which is rather extensive, and, like most towns in this neighbourhood, is surrounded by walls and gates. It is rather strange that this site should have been chosen for the cantonments, when a so much more shady and favourable spot was available for the purpose; however, they say it would have been too near the city, and so the sepoys were left to broil in an open spot, without a leaf to cover their houses. Most of the officers are comfortably housed out there is a great deal of building going forward, timber is scarce, and workmen—good, bad, and indifferent—very difficult to obtain, especially as the learned deputy-commissioner will give no assistance in obtaining their services, and when they are procured are excessively lazy, and are authorised in charging much higher rates than is usual in the provinces. Everything in the Hosheypore district is extremely dear; and I am given to understand that the rates for coolies, carriage, &c., &c., are more exorbitant here than in any other part of the Jullunder Doab. Woe to the unfortunate European sufferers, but happy the conquered niggers under such a rule. A rather amusing instance occurred here the other day, shewing the majesty and impartiality of British justice. An impudent scoundrel of a Punjaabee letter-carrier having grossly and without provocation insulted a gentleman in Cantonments, by reflecting on the character of his female relatives in the usual way, added to a small amount of abuse for his own particular benefit, the said gentleman applied to the learned authority here for redress, demanding to have the man punished for his misconduct, when he received an intimation, that his only remedy was 'an action in civil law against the dawk wallah!' I expect the sufferer will take the law into his own hands on any future occasion, in rather an uncivil way. None of the corps here have been inspected by Brigadier Wheeler this year, in consequence of the lateness of the season, and the men requiring to go on furlough; and although many reports have been flying about the bazar of approaching wars and outbreaks, especially with Goolab Sing, yet the fact of everything appearing quiet, and that the usual number of men having gone on general leave, and many more to the shrine of Joallah Mookce, in this neighbourhood, is, I think, enough to prove that we shall have some more months of inglorious inactivity ere the trumpet summons us to arms, at least in this doab. For the last five weeks it has been very hot here, with dust storms, and a hot wind: however, it is invariably cool at night; and in the day the thermometer stands at 90 deg. in the house, and during the night under 80 deg. These hot dry winds, however, have led to some warm work in the lines lately; for, on the morning of the 14th instant, the 2nd Irregular Cavalry lines took fire, and many houses were burnt down before it was got under; eight or nine horses were burnt to death, and many others injured, and the sight of so many troopers' horses galloping about and fighting with each other amidst the flames was most wild and curious. Again, last night the houses of the left wing of the 3rd regiment N.I. were entirely destroyed by fire, and, from the high state of the wind, many of the officers' houses were in great danger from flying flames of fire; however, the conflagration was got under by midnight, and it is to be hoped that these warnings will have the effect of making the men more careful of their lights in future. We have not been very gay of late, in consequence of all the regiments being strangers to each other; however, the people are beginning to know one another, and ere long, no doubt, the music of the gay quadrille, the lively polka, and graceful waltz will echo through the hills of Hosheypore. The spirited members of the Bagatelle Club gave a quadrille party the other night, which went off very well, although a greater assembly of the fair sex would have added to the brilliancy of the room and pleasure of the guests. It is also in contemplation to build an assembly-room and theatre, when some of the histrionic militaires will have an opportunity of fretting their hour on the stage. Everybody is now meditating a flight to Kangra and Dhurumsalah, and I hope myself, before long, to make acquaintance of a hairy old bear, amidst the eternal snows beyond Dhurumsalah."

NIZAM'S DOMINIONS.

WE have letters from Hyderabad (Deccan) to the 9th May. Considerable surprise is expressed that the late Governor-General, Lord Hardinge, perfectly aware as he must have been of the pecuniary difficulties with which the Nizam's Government had to contend, should have sanctioned, from the yearly diminishing revenues of the country, such an enormous outlay as a lac of Rupees per annum for statistical purposes. We have reason to suppose that this object was adopted and pressed upon the minister, in consequence of a circular addressed by the Supreme Government to all its subordinates throughout India, amongst others to residents. He of Hyderabad quickly availed himself of this occasion, so gratifying to his thirst for scientific pursuits, and satisfied it at the expense of an ally, unable to pay its own state debts. Recalling to mind that these statistical reports are to be made to their respective governments, by their civil, military, and medical servants, without additional remuneration on that score, and conjecturing that, in all probability, it was never intended that this measure was to be pressed upon friendly states, burdened with pecuniary involvements, it was unjust, impolitic, and an abuse of influence, to extract so large a sum from a weakly, yielding minister, for a purpose the very nature of which he cannot comprehend, and the object of which (as explained to him, though by no means coming within his comprehension) must be regarded as inadequate to the outlay. To two medical gentlemen is entrusted the charge of reporting on the resources and capabilities of the Nizam's dominions, and to a military officer the repair of the roads. The latter object is of vital interest to the traffic of the country; but it is ridiculous to suppose that a portion of a lac of rupees expended on roads, can at all answer that purpose, and we hear a large portion of that lac is applicable to statistical purposes. Unfortunately, the finances of the Nizam will not admit of a bestowal of benefits on his country and subjects for years to come, through the learned researches and labours of these gentlemen, who have been taken from a branch of the service where their place cannot be filled. The Nizam's service has not a superfluous medical servant, and if these be employed on duties out of their profession, for years, in all probability, their places can only be filled by the inferior grades of that profession. If these suffice, will not the question naturally arise, whether the Nizam's troops cannot be tended by medical men less expensively paid? If the answer be in the negative, then the abstraction of the medical officers is an injustice to the troops and to the Government. To return to the subject of statistics. Science is so very little comprehended at Hyderabad, that the utility of these statistical reports, at the charge of nearly a lac per annum, is much scouted; and there is no doubt that the natives and the government, ignorant as they are, are fully aware that this heavy outlay from their treasury is made for a purpose purely English. The statistical officers report in English to the resident, and, we presume, the reports are by him forwarded to the Supreme Government to be consigned to some desk in a government office, or printed in some periodical for the benefit of an English community. An annual drain of about forty lacs, paid by the Nizam on account of the contingent and on other accounts, ought to be most ample for all statistical and other freaks which may enter the cranium of those placed in authority. Hitherto it has been too common with us to dip our hands into the Nizam's pockets for purposes peculiarly our own. We have at an enormous expense built bungalows for English travellers. It will hardly be credited, but it is said on good authority, that each of these bungalows cost from ten to twelve thousand rupees. They were built by the Nizam's pioneers, 'tis true, but they were so long employed in their construction that a fair calculation gave that amount of cost per bungalow. Had they not been retained for that purpose, the pioneers would, long ago, have been discharged. Mr. Dighton's administration of his district was highly commended, because English travellers were sedulously and obsequiously tended and their wants supplied. This was laudable enough; but could the same have been said of native travellers? Were his highness's subjects as effectually lodged, tended, and protected? We answer boldly in the negative.

We hear that great financial difficulties prevail at Hyderabad. The Sahookars had been repeatedly sent for by the minister, but no money could be got out of them. The Nizam kept up a regular warfare of dunning against his minister, and had succeeded in obtaining about Rs. 56,000. The acting resident is said to have been using importunity for the pay of the contingent, which he, at last, was forced to advance from the Company's treasury. We are surprised at this, for the Company's government have been dunning the Nizam's for a refund of their heavy advances, of which five lacs were paid a short time ago, but the debt has again swollen to its original enormity, on which it is said our Government demand interest at twelve per cent. In default of payment, it is said, districts are to be ceded in liquidation of the debt for a period of years. And Mr. Dighton's people give out that he is to be invested with their charge.

We do not hear that any inquiry is proceeding in the affair of the postmaster at Hyderabad. His three predecessors were thus silently dismissed; no investigation, and certainly, no punishment, having ensued. Can the Company's government have any fears on this head? Are they afraid of any awkward disclosures? The city reports mention that the postmaster has been to the minister every day for the last month. What interest can they have in common? Time will perhaps shew.

CHINA.

Governor of Hong-Kong.—Mr. Bonham, the new governor, arrived at Hong-Kong on the 29th of March, to the great delight of the inhabitants.

Mr. Macgregor.—It is understood that Mr. Macgregor, the consul at Canton, is about to return to England.

Shanghai.—There has been an outrage committed at Shanghai on some missionaries, which has induced Mr. Alcock, the consul, to blockade the port. There has also been a collision at Whampoa, between the Chinese and Americans.

British Trade in China.—The table of imports and exports at Ningpo, lately published, shews an increase upon the imports of Dols. 27,629, and a decrease of Dols. 24,905 upon the exports as compared with the previous year. The total value of imports in 1846 was Dols. 26,767, and in 1847 Dols. 54,396. It appears, however, that the Young Hebe in June last exported a quantity of unsold piece goods, the value of which is not given. In 1846 the exports were valued at Dols. 27,780, and in 1847 at Dols. 2,875.

At Amoy there is also an increase in the value of imports, and a small decrease in the exports. The number of vessels (forty-five) was the same each year, but in 1847 there is a decrease of 1,067 in the tonnage, being 9,378 to 8,311. The imports in 1846 were valued at Dols. 775,085, and in 1847 at Dols. 829,652. Increase Dols. 54,567. This arises principally from longcloths, drills, cotton yarns, camlets, long ells, and Spanish stripes; while in cotton there is a decrease of Dols. 140,455. The exports of 1846 amounted to Dols. 38,938 and in 1847 to Dols. 32,918. Decrease Dols. 5,990, chiefly upon tea and tobacco.

The reports from Fuh-chow-foo and Shanghai have not yet been published. —Hongkong Register.

LONDON,

TUESDAY, July 4, 1848.

THE narrow majority by which the first stage of the government measure respecting the Sugar Duties has passed the House of Commons must not be regarded as a criterion of its feelings upon the simple question whether the growers of free-labour sugar should be assisted in their struggle against slavery; if it were, the yielding temper of the present Ministry might encourage a hope that a more liberal measure of relief would be conceded. Looking to the lists of the majority and the minority, there appears such a confusion of conflicting opinions, protectionists and free-traders voting on the same side, "pigging together," as Mr. Buxton expressed it, "heads and points in the same truckle-bed," that the division merely reveals the complexity of the question, and the infinite diversity of opinions upon its separate points.

Scarcely ever, indeed, had the Legislature of this country to deal with a subject, difficult in its essential elements, which has been so embarrassed by extraneous circumstances. Discarding, however, those points respecting which the true state of the facts is in controversy, sufficient, we think, is conceded to warrant a conclusion adverse to that which Parliament will probably adopt.

As regards the West-India colonists, their labour system (which, vicious as it was, had been the result of a long course of policy deliberately recognized by the mother-country) was forcibly broken up, the faith of Parliament being pledged for the observance of certain conditions necessary to prepare them for competition with slaveholding countries. The most important of these conditions—the apprenticeship system—was violated. Moreover, the measure of emancipation was based upon the assumption that free labour was cheaper than slave labour, and that the competition between them would finally extinguish the slave-trade and slavery itself. Practical experience has shewn, in this as in other cases, that it is not safe to legislate upon abstract principles of philanthropy alone; that the irregular motives and complex interests of mankind furnish disturbing forces which defeat the wisest arrangements. No one now doubts—not even the emancipists—that our large sacrifices and most sincere efforts to extinguish slavery and the slave-trade have, especially since the Act of 1846, stimulated both, and aggravated their horrors.

It is a mortifying fact that our West-India colonies cannot raise their produce so cheaply as those countries where the soil is moistened by the sweat and blood of slaves. Capital has been expended in improvements; in some of the colonies, at least, there is no deficiency of labour; yet the planters, after long and persevering efforts, have been ruined by the low prices at which Cuba and Brazil can supply sugar even in the British market.

The growers of free-labour sugar in the East, though not precisely in the same predicament as the West-India colonists, are affected by the same cause which has paralyzed the exertions of the latter, and their condition gives consistency and strength to the whole case. If free labour could contend with compulsory labour, the East-Indies and Mauritius have almost a redundancy of it. But insolvency and ruin have attended the attempts of the Eastern sugar growers to compete with the low-priced productions of slave toil. It is said, and with some degree of truth, that rash speculation has accelerated this result; but the immediate cause has been "ruinous low prices."

The result is, that the production of sugar is placed in anomalous and peculiar circumstances; that it must be excepted from the category of free trade, the doctrine of which assumes that the means of competition are equal, or capable of being equalized; and all that the growers of free-labour sugar ask is, to be placed in such a position that they may start upon equal terms with their competitors.

These being admitted facts, what does the Government propose? We can understand those who take their stand upon the broad principle of free trade, who repudiate all protection, and insist that the Act of 1846 was a compromise and final settlement. We can understand those who, like Mr. COBDEN, look at colonies and an East-Indian Empire in a merely utilitarian point of view, and, if they are not profitable in a pecuniary sense, recommend that they should be got rid of. But the Government measure surrenders the principle of protection, and even extends the protection given by the Act of 1846; but it stops short of what is required to adjust the balance of equality: as Mr. MUNTZ, a sturdy free-trader, observed, it saves the planter from sudden asphyxia, and mercifully allows him to bleed to death. It is not really protection which the growers of free-labour sugar require; it is, in fact, the removal of that protection which their competitors, the slaveholders of Cuba and Brazil, derive from their being permitted to extract an unfair and unholy profit from man-stealing and the lash.

Although the measure of the Government must, we fear, be considered as virtually carried, the country may hereafter be convinced that (in the words of Sir J. PAKINGTON's motion) "the remedies proposed by her Majesty's Ministers for the great distress in the sugar-growing possessions of the British Crown, which the committee unanimously declared to require an immediate application of relief, will neither effect that object, nor check the stimulus to the slave-trade, which a diminution in the production of sugar in those possessions must inevitably occasion."

THE discussion of the Sattara affair threatens to be interminable. After the lapse of several years, and the death of all the parties whose interests were directly involved in it, the matter might, surely, be allowed to sleep. During the life of the dethroned RAJAH, the question of his guilt or innocence was sufficiently ventilated before all the tribunals competent to take cognisance of it (by all of whom his guilt was affirmed), to allow of a safe conclusion that, humanly speaking, justice had been done. Whatever its merits, however, the suit must be held to have abated at his death; a fortiori, at the death of his rival and successor. Enough has been performed on behalf of the dethroned prince, to discharge all honest obligations; and, were it even possible now to establish his entire innocence (of which there is not the remotest hope), it may be doubted whether the barren satisfaction attending the discovery would not be dearly purchased by the obloquy it must cast upon all the departments of our Indian Government. In every point of view, therefore, the further agitation of this subject—which the question respecting the disposal of the Sattara territory is only another attempt to prolong—is useless and mischievous.

PARLIAMENTARY PROCEEDINGS.

SUGAR DUTIES.

On the 16th of June, Lord JOHN RUSSELL proposed the following scale of duties on sugar, in lieu of those under the Act of 1846:—

Year ending July 5.	Foreign.		Colonial Muscovado.
	Brown	Clayed.	Musc.
1849	20	0	18	6
1850	18	6	17	0
1851	17	0	15	6
1852	15	6	14	0
1853	14	6	13	0
Equal	10	0	10	0

On the 19th, on the motion for going into Committee upon this proposition, Sir J. PAKINGTON moved as an amendment, "That this House, considering the evidence taken during the present session before a select committee, is of opinion that the remedies proposed by Her Majesty's Government for the great distress of the sugar-growing possessions of the Crown, and which that committee has said will require the immediate application of relief, will neither effect that object nor check the stimulus to the slave-trade which the diminution of the cultivation of sugar in those colonies has inevitably occasioned."

This motion led to a debate of six days; on the 29th the House divided, when the numbers for going into committee were 280, against it, 245; leaving a majority of only 15 in favour of the Government measure. Amongst the majority were Mr. Bernal, Dr. Bowring, Mr. Cobden, Sir J. Graham, Sir W. Molesworth, Sir R. Peel, Mr. Ricardo, and Mr. G. Thompson; in the minority were Mr. Cardwell, Sir G. Clerk, Mr. Gladstone, Mr. Goulburn, Mr. Hume, Sir R. Inglis, and Mr. Muntz.

On the following day, June 30, the House went into committee, when Mr. Bright moved that "it is not now expedient to make any alteration in the Sugar Duties Act of 1846."

Upon this motion the committee divided, when only 36 were in favour of it, and 302 voted against it; the majority being 266.

EAST-INDIA COLLEGE, HAILEYBURY.

Thursday, the 29th ult., being the day appointed for closing the first term of the present year, a deputation from the Court of Directors visited the College for the purpose of receiving the Report of the Principal upon the progress and discipline of the students, and of distributing the medals and prizes awarded to the successful competitors in the branches of Oriental, classical, and European literature.

On the arrival of the Directors and visitors at Haileybury, they repaired to the Council-room, where they received the Principal's Report, which was as follows:—

"The Principal has great satisfaction in reporting to the Hon. the Finance and Home Committee, that the eighteen students, constituting the fourth term, have all been found duly qualified for finally quitting the College. Of these, twelve are ranked as highly distinguished, and three have passed with great credit.

"In the whole college, seventy-one students have been under examination. Of this number, eight have not shown the proficiency required for keeping the term. Of the remaining sixty-three, thirty-seven are highly distinguished, and ten have passed with great credit.

"It is satisfactory to observe that the failures are exclusively in the two junior terms. It may be inferred from this, that the system of the College detects incompetence or inattention at an early stage, and produces either improvement or removal. None of the failures involves the loss of appointment.

"The very large number of those who have obtained distinctions in the recent examination is sufficient proof that great attention has been paid by the mass of the students to the studies of the place. So eager has been the competition, that in many cases it has been found necessary to award two prizes in a department. Hence the number of prize men is unusually large, being nineteen, or more than one in four of the whole College.

"In regard of the important subject of English composition, the committee will hear with great pleasure that no fewer than twenty-three essays were sent in for the prize, so that nearly every third man in College became a competitor. There was none of these essays which did not possess a fair share of merit.

"With respect more particularly to the Oriental department, the visitor remarks that the classes preserve the character which they not unfrequently display at this season of the year. There have been no absolute failures in any language but Sanscrit; and in Telugu, as usual, the students present a very uniform degree of merit.

"In conclusion, the Principal feels the greatest pleasure in being able to assure the committee that this long term has been passed in uninterrupted good order. On no single occasion has there been need of any severe exercise of authority; whilst, in regard of minor offences it may justly be doubted whether the same length of time has ever before elapsed with less cause on the part of the great body of the students for animadversion and reproof.

"East-India College, June 29th, 1848."

The CHAIRMAN rose and said: Gentlemen students,—I will first express the very great gratification I have felt, and which gratification is also, I am confident, participated in by my colleagues in the direction, present on this occasion—at the very favourable report that has been made by the principal, of your excellent conduct during the term which has been passed in uninterrupted good order, and in cheerful submission to the rules and regulations of the college. It must be as pleasing to yourselves to hear, as it has been to me to learn, that in no former period has there been so little of any practice at variance with the high tone which should characterize men of principle and education, and most sincerely do I congratulate you upon it. With regard to the progress made in your studies, the report is less favourable, though upon the whole there is reason to be satisfied. In the two senior terms there is no cause of dissatisfaction; but I regret extremely that in the junior terms so many should have proved themselves deficient in a degree which has called for marked disapprobation. I do most sincerely and earnestly call upon these students to reflect on the unhappiness they must cause their parents and patrons, who, having placed them in a situation where, by ordinary industry and attention they might secure to themselves an appointment in the Civil service of the East India Company; an appointment—I have no hesitation in saying, of a kind that it would be difficult for a young man entering public life anywhere to find so advantageous either in immediate prospect or in final result. Do not, therefore, risk the loss of such appointment by idleness or inattention, and when you return to the college I trust it will be with a firm determination to redeem the time you have lost. To the principal, dean, and professors, I beg on my own part and on the part of the directors generally, to return our most sincere thanks for the admirable manner in which they perform their responsible and important duties, both in the maintenance of good order, and their just discrimination as to the merits and proficiency of the several students. To those gentlemen who are about leaving the college and will shortly proceed to India—prompted entirely by an anxious desire that they may prove themselves meritorious and useful public servants—I offer to their attention a few words of friendly advice: First, I would recommend to you during the period that may elapse before you set out for India, not entirely to shut up your books and remain idle, but so far to pursue and keep up your Oriental studies that you may not, on reaching your destination, in a great measure, have forgotten what you have here learnt. The effect of this will probably be to shorten the time you will have to pass at the college in Calcutta, and your more early qualification to enter upon the public service. In your conduct towards, and treatment of the natives, be always kind, considerate, and indulgent. In the course of your service you will have to employ them in many important and responsible situations, and if you act towards them in the manner I have recommended, you will be rewarded by their fidelity and attachment. There is another point which I am desirous of bringing to your very serious attention. It is that you will keep yourselves free from pecuniary embarrassments. Be assured, debt is an evil which frequently entails the most disastrous consequences. It may injuriously affect your character. It often proves fatal to the honour and integrity of a man who is unfortunately so involved; and happiness, under such circumstances, cannot be hoped for. I earnestly recommend to you, therefore, prudence and economy in your manner of living. Gentlemen, in bidding you farewell, may health, happiness, and prosperity attend you.

At a quarter to two o'clock, the Chairman and directors, accompanied by the principal and professors, and the distinguished visitors who were present on the occasion, repaired to the library, where a sumptuous luncheon was served. At the close of the repast,

The CHAIRMAN rose and said—There was one toast which it was indispensable he should propose before the company separated. For the uninterrupted good conduct which had distinguished the students during the term just ended, they were mainly indebted to the wise and able management of the institution by the principal and the professors, whose services it was impossible to overvalue. He would, therefore, give "The health of the Principal and Professors." (Cheers.)

The Rev. the PRINCIPAL said—In acknowledging the toast which had just been proposed with so much kindness, and received with no less, he thought he should be expressing the sentiments of the professors, as well as his own, if he said that they derived a more than ordinary gratification from the proceedings of the day. It was not merely that they were gratified in being able to give assurance of the sound and satisfactory workings of the institution. They were gratified—they were more than commonly gratified—that their meeting had been presided over, their prizes distributed, and their students addressed, by a military man, with a military colleague, and in the presence, he would add, of the distinguished military chief on his right. The circumstances were peculiar. The Chairman and the Deputy Chairman of the East-India Company had both won to themselves most honourable distinction in the profession of arms. But they came to that place, not to urge aspiring youth to martial exploits, but to acknowledge the worth of the arts of peace, and to bear testimony to the value of the civil service of India. (Cheers.) He was right then when he said that they had cause for more than ordinary gratification. They might sometimes be tempted to feel as though theirs were a less brilliant part, than had it been their task to train to emulation of those splendid deeds which had fixed on the Indian army imperishable renown. Not but what, as had lately been seen, the civilian, when occasion called, as well as the soldier, could fight bravely and die nobly. (Cheers.) But why should theirs be thought a less brilliant part? They acknowledged, indeed, the magnificence of their achievements, who had swept down the enemies, and enlarged the frontiers, of the British empire in the east. But they thought it no less a brilliant thing to follow in the wake of the warrior, with the blessings of peace and civilization in the hand,—agents in pouring on a devastated territory those fertilizing showers which should mantle it with a harvest of prosperity and contentment. (Cheers.) This was the office of those who were trained here. And they gratefully felt as though it were a special tribute to the importance of that office, when, as now, the profession of arms lent its authority to grace and dignify a scene intended to illustrate and encourage the civil department of the Indian service. (Cheers.) He could only say that no efforts should be wanting on the part of the authorities of the college to send out men to India worthy to undertake so honourable an employment, worthy to follow in the track of the soldier, and to apply to the wounds, which he had reluctantly inflicted, the healing balm of that civilization which was at once the offspring and the ornament of a pure Christianity. (Loud cheers.)

ROSE DONNELLY MANGLES, Esq., M.P., rose and said,—Although it was unusual to propose any other toast after that which had been just drunk, he believed that when he told the assembly the cause which had induced him to depart from the established order of the proceedings, the most liberal condonation would be granted to him. Many years ago he was a student in this College, and he always felt deeply grateful for the education he had received here; and he could not therefore be present in this place, and see before him the venerable hairs of him who had so long and successfully presided over this Institution, and at the time when he (Mr. Mangles) was a student here—he could not see before him his venerable and respected master, the Rev. Mr. Le Bas, without drinking his health. They never could forget the great services which that gentleman had rendered,—and that he had laid the foundations of that Institution, which, by similar services on the part of the present distinguished Principal and the Professors, had been brought to its present state of perfection. (Loud cheers.)

The Rev. C. W. LE BAS rose amidst loud cheering. He said his honoured and distinguished friend and former pupil had taken him by surprise. He was no longer the living principal, but a shadow and an εἰδωλον; and the shade of the departed principal had no right to expect that his health should be drunk. His friend and honoured pupil, and now his honoured master, had welcomed him back as a living man, and he would therefore do his best to acknowledge the kind consideration which had been expressed for him. (Cheers.) What heart of flesh could be other than delighted at the sight which he had seen to-day? They might imagine the gratification which he felt at finding himself surrounded by men whom he had seen launched into life—in whose early successes he had taken an interest—and who had now returned, well rewarded, from the scenes of their useful exertions. This was enough to convert the mere εἰδωλον and shadow into a living man. (Loud cheers.) It was enough to call a departed man into life, to see this noble institution—to which thirty years of his life had been devoted—now flourishing under the superintendence of that highly-gifted individual who now filled the office of principal. Conducted as the college now was, with so much more ability than he (the Rev. C. W. Le Bas) had possessed; with its steam power, its machinery so well lubricated, and so well furnished with first-rate official talent likewise, it might be hoped that the engine would reach its terminus; that being no less than the highest aspirations that could possibly be formed by the most ardent friends of this college, of the civil service, and of the Anglo-British Empire in India. (Loud cheers.) Such were the sentiments of one who had been for many years the unworthy servant of the East-India Company, and who stood before its representatives as its attached and grateful old servant. (Loud cheers.)

The Chairman, Deputation, and the Company then rose, and after visiting the principal, returned to town by special train.

MISCELLANEOUS.

KELAT AND NEPALEE PRIZE MONEY.—The following notice was issued from the Royal Hospital, Chelsea, on the 14th June:—The Directors of the East-India Company having paid over to this Hospital the amount of the unclaimed shares of the prize money for the capture of Kelat in 1839, due to her Majesty's troops, viz. the 2nd and 17th regiments of Foot, and also the amount of the unclaimed shares for the capture of Nepanee in February, 1841, on account of her Majesty's 4th regiment of Foot,—notice is given, that payment of the said shares will commence at the secretary's office on the 17th of July next, and will be continued at that office on each succeeding day between the hours of 11 and 2.

NOMINATION AT THE CHARTER-HOUSE.—Lord John Russell has conferred the nomination at the Charter-House, which fell to his lot, upon the son of the late Sir Benjamin Malkin, judge of the Supreme Court of Calcutta.

TRIPS TO INDIA.—The ship Southampton, has been engaged for the conveyance of stores to Calcutta.

MERCHANT TAILORS' COMPANY.—The annual dinner of this Company, on the election of scholars and exhibitors to St. John's College, Oxford, from Merchant Tailors' School, took place on Saturday, the 10th June. In the course of the evening, the health of Lord HARDINGE being drunk, the noble lord observed, in reply, "I value very highly the honour you have conferred upon me in admitting me to be an honorary member of this ancient corporation, which stands deservedly so high in public estimation on account of the charitable purposes to which, in a great measure, its funds are applied, and, I will add, from the character it bears for the loyalty and patriotism of its members. I am proud to be one of a society in which I am associated with many men of eminence, with whom I have acted during thirty years of my public life. I am also much gratified by the very cordial manner in which you have received the toast proposed by the Master, for which I beg you will accept my most grateful thanks. On various occasions I have partaken of your hospitality in this magnificent hall. I have always witnessed a most generous anxiety on the part of the citizens of London to do honour to public men who have performed any service to their country, whether in the field or in the council; and I must say, in behalf of the army, that I am confident our troops will at all times be found to do their duty as loyal subjects of her Majesty, to prove their allegiance by obedience to the civil laws of their country, and to preserve the properties, the liberties, and the lives of every class of her Majesty's subjects, and that they will ever be ready to defend the throne and maintain the honour of the country, both at home and abroad. I have had reason on a late occasion, during the war on the Satalj, to prove what is the spirit of the British army, and to shew that, in discipline and prowess, it has not degenerated since those glorious days when it was commanded in Spain and Portugal, and its arms were triumphant, under the Duke of Wellington. On this occasion, I have the satisfaction of seeing around me several most distinguished officers,—the Duke of Richmond, Lord Londonderry, Lord Saltoun, Sir John Rolt, Sir H. Watson, Sir John Buchanan, and many others I could name. I found the army of India, under its distinguished and gallant chief, Lord Gough, ever ready to do its duty, and the Asiatic part of it nobly and bravely emulated the example of their European comrades. I never can speak of the sepy portion of that army without expressing the admiration and pride I feel in that extraordinary instrument of our power in India; and if I wanted any one on whose testimony I could rely in guaranteeing to you the truth of that statement, it would be my gallant friend on my left, Sir George Pollock, whose own gallantry was so successfully displayed in the Khyber Pass, in Cabul, and in the manner in which he vindicated our arms after a very great disaster. To the heroic exertions of our army we owe it that a lasting peace has been obtained, and I hope the prosperity of the Punjab promoted. However intensely our interests may be excited by revolutions abroad, our attention cannot be too much directed to the magnitude of our interests in India. To those interests we must ever attach the highest importance. In a political point of view, our military force is supreme and irresistible throughout Asia; in a commercial point of view, India presents a wide outlet for our manufactures; in a moral point of view, it exhibits the noble example of millions of Asiatics governed by a handful of Europeans, and submitting to their rule because they know it to be most conducive to the prosperity of their country. I will no longer detain you than to express my most fervent hope and belief that, under the enlightened policy of the East-India Company, and the care of my noble friend, Lord Dalhousie, the resources of that great empire may be rapidly developed, civilization advanced, and our rule, resting on justice and good faith, may be confirmed for ages in India." At a later period of the evening, the health of the "Chairman and Deputy-Chairman of the East-India Company" being drunk, Sir J. L. Lushington replied,—"he had frequently partaken of the splendid hospitality of Merchant Tailors Company, but never with so much satisfaction and pleasure as on the present occasion. This arose from his gratification in seeing among the company his noble and gallant friend, Lord Hardinge, and his brother in arms, Sir George Pottocock, and from the compliments so deservedly paid to them. The Master had alluded to Lord Clive, the great founder of our Eastern empire. He was a man distinguished both in arms and in the council, and from him they might fairly date the foundation of our great power in India. With respect to Lord Hardinge, he, as Chairman of the East-India Company, might say, that no governor ever went to India who possessed in a greater degree than his Lordship the confidence of the East-India Company, and that no one had more completely justified that confidence. He would say nothing as to his eminent achievements in the field, but he would observe, that in the council his earnest endeavours were always exerted to promote the civilization and happiness of the immense population entrusted to his care. He had shewn a deep concern for the education of the natives of India, and in that respect had done much good.

LITERARY NOTICES.

Narrative of Services in Beloochistan and Afghanistan, in the Years 1840, 1841, and 1842. By COLONEL ROBERT LEWIS STACY, C.B., Bengal N.I., Aide-de-camp to Her Majesty, &c. London: W. H. Allen & Co.

THE painful interest excited by the critical state of affairs in British India upon the outbreak at Cabul, and during the advance and retreat of our armies from Candahar to Hindustan, has passed away, or this work would have been read with avidity. It furnishes full, authentic, and lively details of the negotiations with the khan of Kelat, in 1840 and 1841, respecting which little has been known, and of the operations of Sir William Nott's army in its triumphant march from Candahar to Cabul, and thence through the passes to the Punjab and Ferozepore. The Caesarean brevity of General Nott's despatches left much to be supplied, and Colonel Stacy, who commanded the second brigade of the Candahar force, has done justice to his gallant companions in arms, by rescuing from oblivion services which, had they been known, would have greatly strengthened the claims of that army to public gratitude.

When the khanat of Kelat was taken by Major-General Willshire, in 1839, it was made over to Meer Shah Newaz, a nominee of Shah Shooja-ool-Moolk; but the Brahooes refused to recognise him, and he was expelled from the fortress of Kelat, which, with the khanat, was assumed by Meer Mahomed Nasseer Khan, the only legitimate son of the late Khan, who had fallen in its defence. He was, in turn, expelled by the British forces. It became of great importance at that period to settle and retain in our interest the country below the Bolan Pass, and Colonel Stacy tendered his services in the difficult and somewhat perilous undertaking of endeavouring to reconcile the khan of Kelat and his turbulent semi-civilized tribes to the supremacy of the British Government, against which they were at that moment grievously irritated by some supposed perfidy on the part of our functionaries. His knowledge of the native character and a confidence in his own resources, led him to go amongst these rude people wholly unattended, and, after a long and tedious negotiation, which would have worn out the patience of many a diplomatist, he succeeded in all his objects. The history of this negotiation is a highly curious one, and throws new lights upon the native character. The various tribes appear to have been won by the frankness and openness of the negotiator, and "were converted from bitter enemies into confiding friends."

Some idea may be formed of the nerve required in dealing with these violent people by the following description of a durbar scene at Sohrab, upon the occasion of the young khan being constrained by his chiefs to retract his promise to accompany Colonel Stacy to Kelat:

"As soon as I saw Rheimdad approaching, I concluded matters had gone wrong, it being Gool Mahomed's office to bring me messages; and the ill-concealed delight which gleamed in the countenance of Rheimdad justified my conclusion. 'The khan,' he said, 'presents his compliments, and has sent me to inform you he would go no further, and begs you will return to Kelat.' I replied, 'Well, the khan is his own master; I will go and take leave of him, when I shall learn the truth from his own lips.' Passing through the crowd, who reluctantly gave way, I walked quietly to the compound where the khan lodged, which was crowded with people, armed, and in a state of great ferment. I inquired for the room in which the khan was, and, finding he did not come to the door to me, I looked in and saw that he was held back by Rheimdad's people, the khan's usual personal guards having been removed. On entering the room, I perceived two of Rheimdad's servants standing near the khan, with fierce looks, grasping, in a menacing attitude, the hilts of their swords, whilst the countenances of all around wore an expression of strong emotion. Not appearing to notice this, I took the young khan by the hand, and tears stood in his eyes when I said I had come to learn from him whether he really intended to go no further, and wished me to leave his camp. He replied, without hesitation, in a firm and decisive manner, that he wished to go with me, but the durbar would not allow him; that letters had been received which affirmed that he was to be seized at Kelat or Shawl Kote, and Shah Nennz placed on the throne. I told him that his principal chiefs had not been present when this resolution was formed, the Sirdars Meer Bober, Meer Khamaal Khan, and Meer Esah Khan having been absent, and I proposed that a durbar should be called when they should have returned. Atta Khan (who was intoxicated with b'hang at the time) and Fakker Mahomed interposed, saying the affair was settled, and the khan would go no further; adding, 'Take leave and go; no one is angry with you, but go; you have always spoken truth; but Ross Bell has ordered it, who is the higher authority, and the Lord Sahib has removed our friend,' meaning me, 'and sent Hasly Sahib,' meaning Lieutenant Hammersley, 'who is our enemy.' I asked to see the letters they referred to, which they admitted came from Kelat; but this they refused, on the pretext that I would hang the writer, and I could get nothing from them but a reiteration of their resolution that the khan should not go further, and of their advice that I should return to Kelat. I appealed to the multitude, declaring I had nothing but the khan's welfare at heart, and asked whether I had ever been untrue to my engagements. I called upon Gool Mahomed, as the darogah, to advise his master. 'I am humbled in the dust,' was the old man's answer. Meer Esah Khan had now returned, and I addressed him, reminding him how he had boasted of the influence and bravery of his tribe. He replied that he was but one, and it was useless for him to speak. 'Better leave these people,' he said; 'they are mad.' Before I took leave of the khan, I made a last effort to inspire him with spirit to act for himself. He repeated that he wished to go with me. 'Who then,' I asked, 'should prevent you?' Atta Mahomed said, 'the durbar resolve he shall not go.' I asked him if he was the sovereign, and the khan, whether he wore a sword and shield to look at. Cries of 'Rise! Take leave! Go to Kelat!' which had been heard at intervals, in a subdued voice, were now uttered loudly by most of the assembly; the agitation increased, and Meer Esah Khan, as well as my two valets, earnestly recommended me to take leave. Holding up my hand for silence, I declared I was the friend of the khan and of the Brahooes, and asked, if I left them, who would shew him the path to his father's throne? I implored them to wait until the absent sirdars returned that day; but after two hours spent in entreaties and exhortations on my part, and the reiteration of 'Rise and go,' from the people present, accompanied by a disclaimer of all anger or dissatisfaction towards me, I shook hands with the young khan, and proceeded deliberately to the door, Meer Esah Khan placing himself behind me, and Moolla Nasseer Oolla and my Brahooe interpreter (who was almost expiring with fright) on either side; I walked very slowly through the crowd, towards the orchard, where my horses and camels were waiting for me, and where I told the sirdar and the moolla I would wait to take leave of Meer Khamaal Khan."

The incidents of the march of Major-General England through the passes from Quetta to Candahar, including the affair of Hykulzie; the actions with the enemy in the advance from Candahar to Ghuznee and Cabul; the operations at Emillah and Istalif, and the severe affairs in the Juggdulluk and Lundekhana passes, and at Allee Musjid; are detailed by Colonel Stacy, a conspicuous actor in all these spirit-stirring scenes, with a precision and fulness which will be well appreciated by all who shared in those arduous operations.

One of the avowed objects of Colonel Stacy in this work is an exposition of his own services, which, his editor states, he considers have "not been adequately acknowledged and requited." When we add to the services detailed in this work those, respecting which he is almost silent, rendered by the author in the Mahratta and Sikh campaigns, in each of which he commanded a brigade, and at the battle of Sobraon, led the first column to the attack, and took the command of Major-General Dick's division, on the death of that officer, it is difficult to resist the same conviction.

"The greatest part of 'The Dabistan' would be very interesting to a curious reader, but some of it cannot be translated. The TRAVELS of MACARIUS, Patriarch of Antioch: written by his attendant Archdeacon, Paul of Aleppo, in Arabic, translated by F. C. BALFOUR. 2 vols. 4to. 4l.

"As a record of the early struggles of the Muscovites for empire against their natural enemies the Poles, so steadily and triumphantly maintained by the Czar Alexius, whose sword of conquest is still wielded by his successors to the present time, the writings of the archdeacon will be found of considerable value: nor, as far as I have been able to discover, is there any document extant of equally curious authenticity, as regards the distinctive policy and prescriptive maxims of that colossal of modern history, the Russian Government."—From the Preface.

ECONOMY! ECONOMY!

STEPHENS' DYES for STAINING WOOD, as a SUBSTITUTE for PAINT. For Decorating Churches, Large Public Rooms, and Theatres, as well as Private Dwellings.

When economy in expenditure of material and time is of importance, these Dyes will be found of the greatest advantage, as they give a rich colour to plain woods, while they reflect all the beauty of the natural graining, which is so superior to imitations by art, and, at the same time, avoid the disagreeable smell and deleterious consequences of paint.

The Dyes or stains, are in bottles of 6d. and 1s. each, and at 10s. per gallon. The Oak Colour may be obtained in powder at 8s. per lb., which dissolves in water to form the liquid, and 1lb. will make one gallon of stain.—N.B. The trade supplied. Also, scorching rays of the sun and heated particles of dust, will find ROWLANDS' KALYDOR a most refreshing preparation for the complexion, dispelling the cloud of languor and relaxation, allaying all heat and irritability, and immediately affording the pleasing sensation attending restored elasticity of the Skin. The numerous varieties of Cutaneous Eruptions, Sunburn, Freckles, Tan, and Discolorations, are pleasantly eradicated by the Kalydor, and the Skin rendered delicately soft and clear. Its purifying and refreshing properties have obtained its exclusive selection by the Queen, the Court and the Royal Family of Great Britain, and the several Courts of Europe; together with the "élite" of the Aristocracy, from the sultry climes of India and the drawing-rooms of Calcutta and Madras to the frozen realms of the Caspian and the saloons of St. Petersburg and Moscow.—Price 4s. 6d. and 2s. 6d. per bottle. Beware of spurious KALYDORS, containing mineral ingredients utterly ruinous to the complexion, and which, by their repellant action, endanger health.

STEPHENS' CONCENTRATED and SOLUBLE INK POWDERS, which contain the chief elementary parts, in a dry state, of his various well-known inks or writing fluids, yet so readily soluble in the water, that by putting the contents of a paper packet into a bottle, and adding to it the quantity of water indicated on the directions, it is ready for immediate use. The economy of this article in carriage, from its reduced bulk, may be estimated when it is considered that one part of the powders will make twenty times its weight and bulk of liquid ink.

Samples of the smaller packets can be sent by post to those who may wish to make a trial of them.

All the above prepared and sold by HENRY STEPHENS, Inventor and Proprietor of the Writing Fluids, 54, Stamford-street, Blackfriars-road, London, and by Booksellers and Stationers throughout the Kingdom.

ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL.—The unprecedented success of this discovery in restoring, improving, and beautifying the Human Hair, is too well known and appreciated to need comment. The special patronage of the Queen, the Court, and the Royal Family of Great Britain, and of every Court of the civilized world; and the high esteem in which it is universally held, together with numerous testimonials constantly received of its efficacy, afford the best and surest proofs of its merits.—Price 3s. 6d.; 7s.; family bottles (equal to 4 small), 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s. per bottle.

On the receipt of money orders, a liberal discount is allowed. The 7s. contains two 4s., the 11s. four times the quantity of the 4s. Retail agents appointed on receiving money orders, to WILLIAM GRIMSTONE, Herbarry, Highgate, near London.

DIARRHÆA, STOMACH or BOWEL COMPLAINTS, CURED BY HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—These diseases, so prevalent at this season of the year, are produced in many instances by suppressed perspiration, or by the too free use of acid fruits, by which acidity in the stomach is generated, creating a deficiency of bile and consequent illness, often of a painful and dangerous nature. To obviate these results, the irritating causes must be speedily removed. Let the sufferer, then, have immediate recourse to Holloway's Pills, as they surpass all other remedies in effecting a cure, and permanently restore the impaired tone of the complaining parts. They are equally efficacious for disordered livers and bad digestion.

Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 344, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

SUMMARY & REVIEW OF EASTERN NEWS.

This plot appears to thicken in the Punjab. The outbreak at Mooltan has been followed by the discovery of a conspiracy, far more alarming in its character, at Lahore, the object of which was the massacre of all the British officers in that city, the expulsion of our troops from the Punjab, and the overthrow of the existing Sikh government. The time and circumstances seemed to connect this atrocious plot, formed after the model of that at Cabul, with the Mooltan affair; but a consideration of all the facts, so far as they are yet known, tends to relieve us from apprehension as to the Lahore conspiracy being part of a great ramification, and to shew that it is no more than an act of isolated treachery. The country is full of discontented chiefs, whose power, exerted in oppression of the people, it is part of the policy of our Government to put down; their intrigues find an able coadjutor in the Ranee, who has large funds at her command, and the occurrence at Mooltan, whether meditated or accidental (for we are yet somewhat in the dark upon this point), may have suggested or precipitated the plot at Lahore, the most disagreeable incident attending which is the mode of its projected execution, namely, by the corruption of our sepoys, which, it is encouraging, however, to find, was not carried to any length before it was disclosed.

It appears that some native commissioned and non-commissioned officers of the 7th irregular cavalry, part of the garrison of Lahore, reported to their commanding officer, Major Wheeler, that attempts were making by certain parties in the city to seduce them and their men from their allegiance. The major communicated this important fact to the British Resident, Sir Frederick Currie, who directed that the native officers should fall in with the attempts and lead the parties on until they were implicated beyond escape. This was accordingly done, and on the 8th May, Mr. Cocks, the chief assistant to the Resident, arrested fifteen persons in the city, including Colonel Khan Sing (who in the late war commanded a division of Sikh artillery against us), and the moonshi of the Ranee. These two persons were tried, convicted on the clearest evidence of having tampered with our sepoys, and condemned to be hanged. This sentence was carried into execution in the presence of 2,000 of our troops, on the 11th. Another man, named Golab, when at the foot of the gallows, was relieved on his promise to divulge all he knew of the plot, and to point out his accomplices and the traitors in our service. On the following day, all the regiments composing the garrison at Lahore and the moveable column at Annarkullee were paraded, and this man (Golab) picked out the men who had been corrupted. It appeared that the following corps had been tampered with; namely, the 8th, the 10th, and the 50th; and that the guilty men were mostly Brahmans and men of long service. When the roll of the 50th regiment was called, it is said that several of the men, conscious of their guilt, ran from the ranks. A court of inquiry was sitting upon the sepoys charged with having joined the conspiracy, who are few indeed in comparison with the number of our troops in Lahore and the vicinity, nearly 8,000.

So far as the nature of this conspiracy has been disclosed it would appear that it was intended, on the 13th May, to make a sudden attack upon the British officers, who were to be massacred; the sentries on duty (who were to be corrupted) were to open the gates, and 5,000 men were to be admitted into the city!

No person of higher rank than Khan Sing had been directly implicated in this plot. Others had been suspected, and even Raja Deena Nath's privity was rumoured. The proceedings taken against the Ranee, however, furnish decisive evidence that the Government believe that she has been concerned in the affair.

This lady, whose talents are rendered highly dangerous by her utter want of principle, resided at Shekapoor, about thirty miles from Lahore, with an income of 15,000*l.* a year, allowed her by the Sikh durbar, far more than her legitimate wants required. It was determined to remove her from the vicinity, and the durbar, on the 17th May, intrusted this critical duty to Fakeer Noor-ood-Deen, who executed it with characteristic art and duplicity. He waited upon the Ranee, and informed her that her son, the young Maharaja, was to be at Kanah-Kutch (about fifteen miles from Lahore, on the road to Ferozepore), and that the Resident had consented to her having an interview with her son, if she was desirous of so doing. She gladly accepted the offer, and proceeded in her palkee in the direction of Kanah-Kutch, and, not until she crossed the Ravee did she discover she had been duped. On her arrival at Kanah-Kutch, she found she was to be escorted across the frontier to Ferozepore, and from thence to her ultimate destination, Benares. She was accompanied from Shekapoor by Messrs. Cocks, Inglis, and Lumsden. In crossing the Ravee, she was escorted into Kanah-Kutch by a ressalah of the 7th Irregulars, under the command of Lieut. Graham, and from thence to Ferozepore by a wing of the 50th N.I.; these troops had been ordered out to Kanah-Kutch two days previously, with the avowed intention of escorting treasure from Ferozepore. "The cause of the Ranee's removal from the Punjab," says a letter from Lahore, "was her having been one of the principal movers in the late intrigues and conspiracies; the durbar are quite as guilty, but have been more prudent than the Ranee; they have not put pen to paper; all communications have been verbal; that they are guilty there is not a doubt, but the proof is wanting."

The chief agents in seducing our men were the fakeers in the city, who have great facilities of communication with them. Sir Frederick Currie proposed to expel all the fakeers from the city; but Raja Deena Nath strongly urged him not to attempt it, as it might lead to a rise en masse of the population. "These rascals," says a letter, "have used the position of their houses or huts, which are close to all the different gates of the city, to observe the different dispositions of the sepoys on gate duty, and select those most likely to forward them in seducing the troops from their allegiance."

The Resident, at a special parade, bestowed kelats and money upon the native officers who had disclosed the plot, and the Governor-General has since promoted three of them, as a reward for their praiseworthy conduct, and fidelity to the British Government.

Some accounts from Lahore assert that this conspiracy was concerted with the Dewan of Mooltan, and that the outbreak at that city was intended as a lure to draw away part of the garrison of Lahore, so as to render the plot more easy of execution; but this is probably mere conjecture, and the better opinion seems to be that the two occurrences had no original connection. There appears, however, to have been some anticipation, on the part of the Lahore authorities, of the possibility of disturbance prior to the discovery, since a reinforcement of troops had been ordered into the Jullunder Doab, namely, her Majesty's 14th light dragoons from Ferozepore, and a native troop of horse artillery from Loodiana, which had arrived at Lahore; and from beyond the Sutlej two corps of infantry, a corps of irregular cavalry, and a field battery, to occupy Govindpur, near Umritsir; while a native regiment and a troop of horse artillery were further to reinforce Jullunder. Her Majesty's 32nd were to move from Umballa to Ferozepore, and her Majesty's 98th, from Meerut, to take the place of the 32nd. The engineers were occupied in raising a parapet around the whole inner edge of the rampart of Lahore, and by every possible means strengthening and isolating the works occupied by the troops. A large magazine of arms in the Meean Meer, furnished by Runjeet Singh, had been undermined by order of the Resident, and destroyed. It was at first intended to blow it up; but apprehensions of the consequences of the explosion induced the authorities to substitute water for fire. The motive for this act of severity is said to be a discovery that the people from the town were supplying themselves secretly with arms from thence.

It has been rumoured in the papers that Sir John Littler goes to Lahore in the room of Sir Frederick Currie, and that Sir Frederick will occupy the vacancy thus created in the Supreme Council.

It is stated in the Delhi Gazette that General Ventura had been seen in disguise at Lahore; and that he had retired into the territories of the Raja of Pottah, near Umballa.

The policy of the authorities at Lahore seems to be to strengthen their position there, and to await the proper season for action before they incur any risk. But some slight affairs appear to have taken place. Major Jacob, with a strong party of Scinde Irregular Cavalry, had fallen in with a body of Belooches proceeding to join the standard of Moolraj, under a hill chief, with whom he had a smart conflict, without any decisive result. Lieut. Edwards had also marched upon Mooltan with 2,500 Sikh troops; but these forces deserted him when near the insurgent frontier, and he escaped, with only one attendant.

The discovery of the conspiracy at Lahore was coincident with the arrival of the report of Lord Hardinge's speech in England, wherein he said "he had no apprehension for the tranquillity of the Punjab." This expression of confidence is treated by the Indian papers as if it were found to be unwarranted; but his Lordship would probably deem the insignificance of this affair rather a confirmation than a contradiction of his prediction. All was quiet at Lahore up to the 22nd of May.

No addition of any moment is made to the intelligence from Mooltan. That Moolraj has raised the standard of revolt seems, however, beyond question. He is enlisting men, offering large bounties to Sikh horsemen, and collecting stores and ammunition, prepared to stand a siege in his stronghold. General Khan Sing had joined his cause, from choice or compulsion. It was at one time asserted that he was at the head of 60,000 men and a powerful artillery, advancing to attack the British force at Lahore. But this news was too good to be true, and eventually the estimates of his strength sunk down to a tenth of that given by rumour. A writer, whose information, it is said, may be relied upon, describes the Dewan's forces as much more insignificant than is generally supposed; he says the extent of his artillery is forty pieces, a very small portion of which are moveable, the majority being mounted on the ramparts. The fort is said to be strong, but irregular and badly constructed; its chief strength is in the power of impudation. On the other hand, an officer of great experience writes thus: "When the Mooltan revolt broke out, I would have gladly undertaken to put it down with a single brigade; now I should not be very confident with three, and, if we wait till the end of the rains, no force we can spare will be more than sufficient." It seems decided that the expedition against the city will not be put in motion till the close of the hot season and the rains, when a powerful force under the Commander-in-Chief in person will be sent.

French writers imagine, and our own are not exempt from the error, that an "appropriation" of Mooltan is meditated by us. This is by no means the fact, though it might be highly beneficial to the people of the province if it were otherwise. The transforming influence of British rule in India is shewn in a very striking point of view by Col. Everest, in his curious account of the Trigonometrical Survey, who observed the contrast presented by the same tracts when visited by him at different intervals:—

"The condition of the country (he says) appears to have been greatly improved since 1824, which is a never-failing result where any tract in India has for a reasonable period been subject to the steady and systematic control of British rule. In all portions of the tract passed over by the Great Arc series, the contrast exhibited by the present over the former want of prosperity is most striking where the British power has been paramount, and is more and more marked in proportion to the influence which that power exerts. As an example: in 1824, all that part of the plain of Seronj, in which my base line was measured, was a desert; in 1837, when re-measuring the same line, free ground on which my camp could be pitched was not to be found; and it was utterly impossible to carry on the operation without cutting a broad road for three-fourths of the way through growing corn, for all which the owners had to be remunerated."*

The intelligence from Scinde is again pacific. All those visions of alarm which the imagination had conjured up, have died away. The Boogies are not dreaming of a raid on our provinces; there is no prospect of any insurrection whatever. The Government of Bombay has wisely resolved not to send troops to that province at present.

Amongst the local incidents at the Chief Presidency, the affairs of the Union Bank take precedence. A meeting of the shareholders was held in Calcutta, for the purpose of arranging, if possible, the terms of agreement with the creditors, when it was ultimately resolved that a scheme of assessment upon the proprietors, according to their means and the value of their respective shares, should be framed, with a view of securing them from future liability. The proposal was unanimously adopted, and the only difficulty which appears to stand in the way of a final settlement, arises from the inability or unwillingness of some parties to furnish their quota, and the delay of the minority of the creditors to adopt the proposed terms. The Chief Justice intimated, on the 2nd of June, that on the 6th he intended sitting in open Court, instead of disposing of business in Chambers, as customary in vacation. He stated that this was with reference to the proceedings by scire facias against certain of the Union Bank shareholders, appointed for that day, as the Act seems to require that such proceeding shall be in open Court. He added that certain inquiries, having reference to one of the officers of the Court, would be gone into on that day, and it was desirable that the matter should be brought forward in Court instead of in Chambers.

The intelligence from the sister Presidencies presents no prominent features. The libel case at Madras (referred to in the last Mail) had not been decided. On the day appointed for the judgment, the community crowded to the Court to learn its decision; but the judges deferred judgment to the next term. The cause of this delay excited much speculation, and it is generally supposed to have arisen from a desire to consult the other Crown Courts in India.

The mid-monthly mail from Bombay having been discontinued, in consequence of the monsoon, the intelligence from thence is confined to such portions as appear in the Madras papers. Some preparations had been made at Bombay to send troops and artillery up the Indus to reinforce Scinde; with a view to operations against Mooltan; but the orders were countermanded.

The cholera had broken out at Surat and other parts of Western India.

The prospects of the planters in Ceylon appear to be lamentable, judging from the results of the sales at the Fiscal's office. The Columbo Observer says:—

"A calm review of the circumstances will satisfy the coffee planters that their ruin is the work neither of fate nor unwise legislation. They have sought to achieve impossibilities, and failed. The cost of production was enormously increased, and the worth of the product could not be raised in the same proportion. It is sad to have to record instances of such wholesale destruction of splendid fortunes, but the world at large is none the worse; a fact extremely consoling to those who are untouched by calamity."

The intelligence from China is somewhat encouraging. All was politically quiet, and trade, in both imports and exports, exhibited a slight improvement.

News had been received from Cochin China up to the 15th of January. Several Catholic missionaries residing in that country, one of them near the Bay of Turon, have unanimously confirmed, by their letters, the truth of the report respecting the diabolical intention of his Cochin Chinese Majesty to allure the French commander and his officers to a party, where they were to be poisoned or murdered, whilst the two men-of-war were to be suddenly attacked, set fire to, and destroyed. "There is not a native of that country who entertains the least doubt about the horrible plot. They give it out in their conversations as a plain fact that has never been denied nor contradicted by the mandarins."

BENGAL.

UNION BANK IN LIQUIDATION.

GENERAL REPORT OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE FOR THE MONTH OF MAY, 1848.

The proprietors of the bank are doubtless prepared to learn from the committee's present report that the proceedings of the sheriff have almost tied the hands of the committee during the past month. Most of the settlements of claims which were in progress have been necessarily suspended, but the committee have been able to conclude some few adjustments not embarrassed by any question arising out of the sheriff's seizures. Some similar adjustments are also in progress, upon which the committee hope to report at the next meeting.

The judgment-creditors of the bank having objected to the principle of the plan of liquidation proposed by Sir Robert Barlow and sanctioned by the last meeting, that scheme necessarily fell to the ground. A private meeting was, in consequence, intermediately held, and a plan of assessment was then proposed and agreed to, which the committee are happy to say promises fair, if cordially supported, to afford the means of liquidating the bank without ruinous sacrifice to any individual shareholder. A sketch of this plan has been submitted to the creditors' committee, and to some of the chief creditors, and the principle is approved of by them, although all the details have not yet been finally agreed upon. The following is an outline of it:—

The creditors to sign an undertaking not to proceed against the person or property of such shareholders as shall contribute the several sums at which they shall be severally assessed in a schedule to be prepared by the creditors' committee. The plan is not to come into operation until a certain number of creditors sign, and unless a certain sum be contributed by a given day. As an inducement to creditors to concur in this proposition, it is provided that no creditor refusing to conform shall receive any benefit from the contributions. The advantage to shareholders is, that the agreement as nearly approaches to an absolute and final discharge as the relative position of the bank and its creditors admits of. If all the creditors, or all but an insignificant proportion, concur in the scheme (and unless this is the case it will not be carried out at all), every shareholder, paying according to the assessment, will purchase immunity from further call. This will obviate the great objection which has been urged against every plan for voluntary contributions hitherto brought forward, namely, that neither the executive nor the creditors' committee are able of themselves to give protection to parties responding to the call. It appears to the committee unnecessary to enter into further details at present, but they hope that a resolution will be passed at the present meeting approving of the general principles upon which the proposed scheme is based. The schedule of assessment has been already prepared by the creditors' committee, and revised by them in conjunction with the executive committee. Circulars will be addressed to the shareholders respectively informing them at what sums they have been severally assessed; and it will be open of course to parties assenting to the scheme, but objecting to the particular rates of assessment applied to themselves, to state the grounds of their objections, and require a further revision.

The committee are gratified in being able to state that all the valuable indigo factories in which the bank are interested have good prospects, and they fully hope to be able to dispose of them before the commencement of next season.

The committee have much pleasure in annexing copy of a letter from J. H. Young, Esq., secretary to the committee of shareholders at home, from which it will appear that remittances may be expected by the steamer looked for early next month; and with reference to the request made in respect to the order of any debentures to be granted for such remittances, the committee would suggest that they come in pari passu with, and bear the same number as a debenture granted here to a party who contributed within the same number of days after receipt of notice as the London shareholders do, and that one debenture be granted after arrival of each mail for the English shareholders, bearing such number, and a distinguishing mark with the proportions belonging to each party endorsed on the back.

In pursuance of the resolution passed at the last meeting, the committee have published in the Hurkaru newspaper, a list of the debtors of the bank, specifying the securities held for the debts.

The committee recommend the abolition of the treasurer's department from the fifteenth proximo. They are not of opinion that any reduction can be made at present in the accountant's department. The committee also recommend immediate removal into cheaper premises after the close of the current month.

Copy of a letter from Mr. James Calder Stewart in respect to the overdrawn floating accounts, which subject was referred to in a separate report made last month, is added for the information of the shareholders.

T. C. MORTON, President.

THE LIST OF DEBTORS OF THE UNION BANK.

From a list of the debtors of the Union Bank which has been published (it appears in the Hurkaru of Monday, the 22nd inst.), the whole number does not amount to seventy. Though it is a very beggarly account of empty boxes, yet, knowing the interest which has been attached to it, more, perhaps, from the mysterious pertinacity with which it was refused, than from any idea of its practical utility, we have published it entire. It appears that the sum involved in the firms which have gone into the Insolvent Court amounts to more than one hundred and twenty-nine lakhs of rupees; that is, the whole of the capital, and about a third more. To understand this circumstance, we require the list of the directors, and of the firms to which they respectively belonged, as well as of the committee of finance,—the interior cabinet which disposed of all this money—during the period in which the process of exhaustion was going forward. A more prodigate exhibition has never been held up to view in Calcutta, and we cannot wonder that, with a very small exception, men of all classes, creeds, and parties, Europeans and natives, "saints" and men of the world, residents in India and residents in England, should unite in reprobating the conduct of the bank, and talk with the bitterest scorn of the commercial immorality which has marked these nefarious proceedings. But the most surprising circumstance connected with these abstractions is the ingenuity and success with which they were so long concealed from public view, by fallacious and impudent statements. Every half-year did the directors come forward and throw dust in the eyes of the shareholders by the most solemn assurances that they were steadily pursuing the plan of liberating the bank from its indigo embarrassments which were enforced upon them in 1843; and, year after year, did they give their constituents the assurance that the indigo liabilities of the bank were limited to the exact number detailed in the report, when there was all the time thrice that sum irrevocably sunk in the most profitless concerns, which were entered under other heads, with the view of their escaping detection. Year after year did the directors congratulate the proprietors on the flourishing condition of the establishment, when they knew that no inconsiderable portion of the sum put down as capital consisted of their annual losses in indigo, and that if the concern had been wound up at the time, it would have been found insolvent. Five years before the bank failed, its entire capital was in the hands of five or six firms, which had each its own representative in the direction, to help themselves to its funds, and when the bank became insolvent, more than the whole of its capital was still found to have been in the hands of a few houses, which had in the mean time taken the benefit of the Act. There was no improvement whatever in this respect in the four years which elapsed between the great agitation and the deceptive reform of 1843, and the greater agitation and dissolution in 1846.

The bills discounted and the sums due from sundry debtors amount only to 18 lacs of rupees, and of this sum eleven lacs and a half are connected with the name of Mr. W. P. Grant, one of the late directors, and more than half this amount is disputed by him and others. Little enough of the eighteen lacs of rupees are the unfortunate shareholders ever likely to see again. The publication of this schedule, though it will serve to lower still farther the general opinion of the value of the bank assets, may not, however, be found unserviceable, if it enforces on the shareholders the necessity of making a strong effort at once to raise a sufficiently large sum to propitiate the creditors.

A correspondent of the Hurkaru has sent him the following letter, on which we desire to offer a brief remark or two.

"From an article in the last Friend of India, referring to one in the Hurkaru relative to the Union Bank, I am led to infer that the creditors of the Union Bank propose that forty lacs should be paid to them immediately, and that they should besides have all the assets of the bank made over to them, and retain a lien also on the shareholders who have not paid!! If this is what your contemporary means, I can only say that for the sake of the creditors' characters, I hope he has mistaken their proposal; for though they may have the power to enforce such terms on the unfortunate shareholders, they should be ashamed to avail themselves of it. Why, the 'Change-alley Jews would blush to make such a proposal to those who had been deluded and plundered as the shareholders of the bank have been. I certainly have not so understood the conditions of release proposed by the creditors but should be glad to know what you have learned on the subject."

The proposal, as we understood it to stand originally, was, that there should be some kind of mutual understanding between the creditors and the prostrate shareholders, for a final adjustment of the matter; and that on the payment of three-fourths of the claims, the latter should obtain an acquittance, and be for ever absolved from all further molestation. We felt that it was not preposterous to urge such a compromise on the creditors, not only by an appeal to those feelings of generosity on which, as Englishmen, they must naturally pride themselves, but also in reference to the great instability of all commercial prospects, and more especially to the great deluge which, through the convulsions in Europe, now threatens to overwhelm all mercantile, manufacturing, and industrial interests throughout the world, and which may rise so high that even those who are seated upon the "high hills and the mountains" may not escape the visitation. It was in reference to these prospects, as well as to the great legal difficulties which lie in the way of realizing all property, that we suggested the composition, and hinted that the shareholders who advanced the three-fourths of the whole demand at once should be reimbursed by the sale of the assets, and by a call, according to the act, upon their brother shareholders. But it appeared from the document published in the Hurkaru, that it was expected the creditors should be paid in full; and that they were to take forty lacs, as the price of their forbearing to sell up the shareholders in Calcutta forthwith, and then take over the assets for what they would fetch, and squeeze the balance out of the absent proprietors. It would be injurious to many of the creditors to suppose that they could ever have entertained any such idea; but as the proposal was put down in print, we said that even if such a plan was offered for their acceptance, it would be advisable for the shareholders to close with it. Any sacrifice for the inestimable blessing of finality should be their motto.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ARRIVAL OF LONDON MAILS.—The mail from London April 7. arrived at Calcutta on the 14th of May. That of April 24 arrived by Bombay express on the evening of the 1st of June. The steamer Handlington, with the Calcutta portion of this mail, arrived at Kedgeree on the 4th of June.

THE SALWEEN PILOT VESSEL, which left for Van Diemen's Land with convicts in November last, has returned to Bengal with a cargo of timber; she proved very leaky on the voyage.

INDIGO.—A letter from Zillah Hooghly observes there has been very little rain in that district, and that indigo prospects are wretched. At Jessore scarcely half an average crop was looked for.

NEW ORIENTAL LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY.—The half-yearly meeting of this Company was held on the 13th of May, when it was resolved that a dividend of Rs. 100 per share be declared, and that Rs. 25 per share be returned as a premium to the shareholders.

PRIVATE STEAM COMPANIES.—On account of the numerous accidents which have occurred to private steamers, the native dealers in raw silks are said to have resolved not to make use of them any longer.

OPIMUM SALE.—The seventh opium sale was held on the 15th of May, and shows a more favourable result than the last. The sale yielded Rs. 21,15,425. Patna averaging Rs. 835, and Benares Rs. 789 per chest. This is an increase of Rs. 80 on the former, and Rs. 68 on the latter.

MOORSHEDABAD.—The Englishman hears that Major-General R. V. Raper will be unable to return to his appointment on account of ill health, and that Mr. H. Turrens will therefore be permanently appointed agent to the Governor-General at Moorshedabad. Mr. Cecil Beadon permanently retaining Mr. Torrens' place at the Salt and Opium Board.

CALCUTTA STEAM-TUG ASSOCIATION.—It has been decided that Messrs. Gordon, Stewart, & Co., are to continue as secretaries to this association.

FAILURES.—Several failures in Calcutta are reported, though the names have not yet been published.

CONSERVANCY COMMISSION.—We learn that Mr. J. Rowe has been appointed surveyor to the Conservancy Commissioners on a salary of Rs. 600 per mensem.

SECTION WRITING, it is said, has been abolished in the Beugal Secretariat's office, and that the reform is eventually to extend to all the public offices; the writing is to be done by "copying clerks," permanently employed on salaries of from twenty to one hundred and seventy rupees per mensem.

SIKH POWDER MAGAZINE.—A correspondent of the Mofussil's says that the Sikh Powder Magazine at Meeran Meer, near Lahore, has been blown up by the British authorities at Lahore, as the Sikh populace were helping themselves to the ammunition it contained.

LIEUT. ROBINSON.—A report of the murder of this gentleman, near Umritsar, appears in the Calcutta Star of May 20, but it requires confirmation.

COTTON.—Reports state that the Court of Directors has sent out orders for discontinuing the experiments on the culture and preparation of cotton which have been for some time carried on at Agra under the auspices of Mr. Thomason, the Lieut.-Governor.

CARGO FLATS.—The first of the large single cargo flats intended to supersede the small double ones hitherto used by the I. G. S. N. Company has been launched at Garden Reach. She is intended to carry 12,000 feet of cargo at a draft of two feet six inches.

BONDED WAREHOUSE.—At the half-yearly meeting of the Bonded Warehouse, held on the 22nd May, a dividend of Rs. 11 per share was declared on the profit of the last half-year, "to be paid when sufficient funds are collected." Messrs. C. J. Richards and J. J. Mackenzie were elected Directors in the place of those out by rotation, and Messrs W. Earle and C. Campbell in place of Messrs. Church and Larpent.

MESSRS. OSWOLD, SEAL, AND CO.—The copartnership carried on under this firm was dissolved on the 31st of May last; all debts are to be adjusted by Mr. W. F. Fergusson.

UNION BANK IN LIQUIDATION.—Mr. J. L. Russell having resigned the secretaryship of the Union Bank, Mr. R. C. Jenkins has been appointed to that office, subject to confirmation or otherwise at the next general meeting, on the 24th of June. The Supreme Court decided on Saturday, May 13, that no judgment can be put in operation against the shareholders of the Union Bank until means have been taken to realize the debts due to that institution.

THE RANEE.—A letter of late date from Lahore, speaking of the deportation of the ranee, mentions that her highness "was seen by and spoke to some of the officers of her escort, who describe her as being pretty, and say that she would have been decidedly so only for her nose, that being the bad feature in the Punjab. Hands and feet, perfect, which they say she is perfectly aware of."

AFGHANISTAN.—The news from Afghanistan is to a late date but unimportant. The news of the Moultan affair reached Cabul on the 6th May, but does not appear to have had any very exciting effect.

LAHORE.—The country round Lahore is said to be now perfectly quiet.

MOULTAN.—A recent letter from Moulton states:—"The country about here is now quiet, but at Moulton the insurrection seems to be on the increase. From all I can learn, the Commander-in-Chief will take the field about November with an army of 25,000 men, and a large artillery force."

THE SUPREME COURT has granted a rule nisi for a scire facias against four reputed wealthy shareholders of the bank, but the proceedings against them have as yet gone no further.

LOSS OF THE FRENCH SCHOONER INCONVILLE.—The vessel lost on the Arrakan coast was the schooner Inconville, Captain Hairen, of about 400 tons, from Havre to Akyab. She got to the northward of her port among the reefs between Oyster Island and the coast. When she got into seven fathoms water, on the evening of the 2nd May, an anchor was let go, and subsequently a second. She held on during the night, but at 9 A.M. of the 9th, parted from both cables in a heavy squall, and went ashore at the entrance of the Myon river, which is in lat. 20 deg. 15 min. N. and about 15 miles north-west of Akyab, and became a total wreck. The crew were all saved. The wreck was sold at Akyab on the 26th ultimo.

TESTATE ESTATES.—A draft of a legislative act has appeared in the Gazette, for taking intestate estates out of the hands of the ecclesiastical registrar, and placing them under the care of an administrator-general, appointed by the Government, and for doubling up and regulating the offices of the Supreme Court.

SIR HENRY SETON, who, since the departure of Sir J. P. Grant, has been the only puisne justice here, is compelled, by failing health, to leave the country forthwith, after about ten years of incessant and assiduous attention to the duties of his office.

THE HON. J. E. D. BETHUNE.—The Governor of Bengal has appointed the Hon. J. E. D. Bethune to be president of the council of education.

INADEQUACY OF THE FORT.—Since last March one wing of the European regiment has been stationed in the fort, and the other at Dum Dum. Among the former, twenty deaths have occurred, while only one has taken place at Dum Dum. This fact needs no comment.

NATIVE DOCTORS.—We hear that Doctors Bhowe and Seal have received, or are to receive, immediately government appointments with a monthly salary of Rs. 250 per mensem each; the former, it is said, will have charge of a hospital in town, and the latter will hold an appointment in the Medical College.

SIR THOMAS TURTON.—It is reported that the judges of the Supreme Court have sanctioned the resumption by Sir Thomas Turtton of the toga of an advocate of the court.

ARMY OF MOULTAN.—The Dalhi Gazette states that the arrangements for the army of Moulton are already sketched out, and that it is to consist of six troops of horse artillery, two light field batteries, three European cavalry regiments, nine regiments of cavalry, regular and irregular, six regiments of European infantry and sixteen of native infantry, with a large baggage train, in all, nearly 30,000 men.

UNION BANK.—We learn from an advertisement in the last Calcutta Gazette, that the sheriff of Calcutta was to put up to sale on Thursday, June 8, the Union Bank premises, and the interest of the bank in the following indigo factories: Dutsing Serai, Bowarah, Cootooriah, Bowsing, Mundertollah, and Cossipore. These factories were to be sold for delivery on the 1st of October, the executive committee of the Union Bank undertaking to concur in giving delivery to the possessors. The sheriff would also sell, at the same time, the right and title of the said bank to a certain sum, due from the Bank of Bengal to the Union Bank, and now at the credit of the executive committee, amounting to Rs. 56,000, and other sums due to them by insolvent firms. A list of the debtors to the bank appeared in the Hurkaru, of May 22.

Messrs. LIVINGSTONE, SYERS, & Co.—At the meeting of the creditors of the firm of Livingstone, Syers, and Co., held on Tuesday, the 23rd of May, last, it was announced that Punna Lall Seal had, for some time before the failure of that firm, been a partner in it. Strange to say, this fact, instead of having been discovered on the spot, has been announced from England. It appears that it was fully known to Messrs. Thomas and Allan, who were the solicitors of Baboo Mutty Lall Seal, the millionaire of Calcutta, and the father of the youth, but they considered themselves bound by the principles of professional honour not to disclose the fact, though they were also the solicitors of the defunct firm. We think that the partners, at the least, were bound to have made known to the creditors a fact so material to the settlement of their affairs. The concealment of this circumstance will, it appears, vitiate all the proceedings of the trustees.

ASSISTANT SURGEON O'MAUGER.—We learn from a division order issued from Benares on the 26th April last, the officer commanding the Artillery division is to select a steady European non-commissioned officer to proceed to the presidency, in charge of assistant surgeon O'Mauger, M.D., who is in a state of mental derangement.

DAKH BETWEEN FERROZPORE AND LAMKEE.—We understand it is the intention of the post-master at Ferrozpore to run a carriage dakh between that station and Lahore.

THE GREAT TRUNK ROAD.—An official notification from Agra states that the arrangements for the supply of provisions and for the protection of travellers along the Grand Trunk Road have lately engaged much of the attention of the Government. Reports and suggestions on the subject have been called for from the local officers, and Major Steel, after marching along the whole course of the road, has furnished his remarks for the consideration of the Lieut. Governor. He says, all inquiries shew that there is a great and increasing traffic along the Grand Trunk Road. This traffic may become the source of great profit to the zemindars and residents along the road, if effectual measures are taken in every district to protect the people from oppression on the part of civil and military servants of the Government and other travellers who may pass along its course. It is also necessary to make adequate arrangements for the supply of the necessary wants of travellers, and to protect them and their property from injury on the road. He then suggests various measures conducive to these ends.

MILITARY PRISONS.—Orders have been issued by the Military Board for the immediate construction, at all stations at which native troops are cantoned, of military prisons in which epeyos, sentenced to short terms of imprisonment, not involving discharge from the army, are to be confined. They are to be built on some eligible spot in the lines.

THE RANEE.—A correspondent from Ferrozpore says that the Ranees is most strictly watched in the house in which she is located (near the Artillery bazaar), having sentries at every corner. She is said to be under the temporary charge of Capt. Maitland, of the 72nd. The 51st furnish the wing for her escort to Loodianah. An express, received on the evening of the 20th inst. is said to have conveyed orders for sending back a slave of the Ranees to give evidence on a fact recently discovered, and it is added she left immediately by dak. Our correspondent says the slave is the notorious Mungia; but on this subject he must permit us to express a doubt, as, if we remember rightly, that lady was removed to Kangra somewhere about the time her mistress was sent off to Shaikhoopora. It may be that the authorities allowed her to return, at the urgent solicitation of the Ranees. If they did, they did wrong.—Dalhi Gazette.

MOOLRAJ.—A letter from Lahore, dated May 1, says,—"Moolraj is filling up the wells about Mooltan; however, he can't well turn the river on one side; about 6,000 Sikh cavalry are to proceed to Mooltan, to scour the country and prevent the people from paying revenue to Moolraj; if these troops are driven back, we shall begin to look foolish."

CHANGES IN THE MEDICAL SERVICE.—The Englishman gives us on this date that the following changes will shortly take place:—Physician-general H. R. Hough is to retire on the pension of his rank, which vacancy will promote Surgeon-general William Patton to physician-general, Inspector-general of hospitals G. Lamb to surgeon-general, Superintending-surgeon W. S. Steven to inspector-general of hospitals, and Surgeon G. Angus to superintending-surgeon. In consequence of the above arrangement, Assistant-surgeon A. Kean, M.D., at present civil surgeon of Moorsheadabad, will become a full surgeon.

SEVERE DRAKE FROM DROWNING.—A young man of the name of Arthur Piploe Godfrey, who lately joined the preventive service, is supposed to have met with his death from drowning on Monday night. He had been posted on board the French ship Ocean, and was seen last at night, when all were retiring. In the morning he was missed from the ship, and is nowhere to be found on shore.—Hurkaru.

CAPT. MACKENZIE'S TROOP OF HORSE ARTILLERY, the 14th irregular cavalry (Skinner's), and the two corps of native infantry from Julundhur, 1st and 57th, reached Lahore on the morning of the 19th.

THE NUSSEER RIFLE BATTALION, and Sirmoor battalion, are both on the list of corps to form the "Army of Mooltan."

GENERAL GILBERT, it is said, will take command of the army that is to march against Mooltan.

COMMERCIAL MORALITY.—The Englishman gives us the particulars of a meeting of the shareholders of the Ocean Insurance Office last Monday, and quotes the proceedings as a triumphant proof of the soundness of the commercial world of Calcutta. Messrs. Smith, Cowell & Co. the secretaries, some months ago were constrained to call their creditors together, but have since resumed the management of their own affairs. In the insurance office of which they were secretaries, it was found that the company's paper to the amount of Rs. 90,000 was all right and safe: it was endorsed over to three of the directors. The loss sustained by the insurance society has arisen from their London agents, Messrs. Phillips & Co. against whom some of the shareholders wished to proceed, on a charge of breach of trust.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE LONDON MAIL.—The Steamer Haddington, having on board the London Mail of April 24th, arrived in the Roads on the 31st May.

THE NIZAM'S TERRITORIES.—From the Nizam's Territories we have news to the effect that Major Beatson, the Cavalry Brigadier, had proceeded against a large body of Rohillas engaged in plundering the Berar district. It is reported that the Brigadier, has addressed a strong recommendation to the Nizam's Government to pay these men their just dues.

MILITARY INSPECTION.—The annual inspection of the troops at Bangalore has commenced. The first in order were H. M. 15th Hussars, with whom Major General Aitchison, is said to have expressed himself highly satisfied.

MUDDOOR BRIDGE.—We are informed that the excavations for the embankment of the Muddoor Bridge have been entirely filled up by the freshes. This has suspended operations, and but for certain landmarks, the situation of the works could not be seen. Major Pears, it is thought, will shortly resume operations, but many anticipate his total failure, unless the work be deferred until after the monsoon, as there is every probability of the recurrence of similar freshes to that which has already arrested the work. The gallant major will no doubt, soon find it useless to proceed.

THE LATE LIEUT.-GENERAL BISHOP.—Our obituary records the death of a veteran officer of the Madras army, Lieut.-General Bishop; he entered the service of the Hon. Company as a cadet in 1796, was promoted to ensign 29th July, lieut. 21st Dec. 1797; present in the war against Tippee in 1799; at the storming of the Hill forts of Shoolugerry and Rutnagerry; in the Soeingull Pullams in 1800; promoted to capt. 21st June, 1804; served with Col. Moneyenny's force in the Chittoor Pollams in 1804-5; promoted to major, 15th March, 1810; lieut.-col. 8th April, 1818; commanded a brigade on the south-eastern frontiers of Nagpore, in the pursuit after rebels in the year 1818; promoted to commandant 1st May, 1824; commanded the 2nd brigade Madras troops in Ava, from Nov. 1825 to the end of the war, July, 1826; commanded at Trichinopoly from October, 1827, to Aug. 1829; promoted to colonel 5th June, 1829; commanded Trichinopoly a second time, from 16th Dec. 1831, to January, 1833; and Bellary, from Feb. to June, 1833; and from that period the ceded districts, till relieved; promoted to major-general 10th Jan. 1837, and lieut.-gen. 9th Nov. 1847.

OOTACAMUND.—A report is current at this place, that the officers commanding the Mysore division and Malabar provinces have been authorized to grant leave to officers under their respective commands, to visit these hills within the returns; also that the present public gardens are to be given up, and that others will be established in another quarter.

COLONEL STEEL.—A serious accident happened on the 9th of May to Colonel Steel, military auditor-general, by his horse running away, and dashing the carriage, in which he was driving, against a wall. The colonel was thrown forward against the front of the carriage, and severely wounded in the forehead.

PENSION DEPARTMENT.—In consequence of the discovery of numerous frauds in the pension department, the Governor in Council has directed the publication of an extract from the code of pay and audit regulations, in which it is decided that officers concerned in the payment of pensions shall be held responsible for any losses sustained.

J. B. KEY, Esq., has been installed deputy provisional grand master in masonry of the province of Coromandel.

MADURA.—A letter from Madura states: "There has been a great fire at Arapacotta, the head-quarters of the American cotton experiments of Tinnevelly and Madura. The cotton crop has turned out better than was anticipated of it. It is not so short in quantity nor so inferior in quality, as it was expected it would be; but what does it signify? there is no one to buy it—there is not a single order from Madras; all in consequence of the unsettled state of the English market, and the high rates of freight and insurance, of course. This will incommode the ryots not a little, who rely upon paying their kists from this source of produce."

GENERAL AITCHISON.—It seems the period has at last arrived, when the character of the system of authority exercised by General Aitchison is forced upon the consideration of the Commander-in-Chief. Grievances have accumulated until the bounds of even military forbearance are overpassed; and at this moment, there is a universal chorus of indignation from all sides. We are in possession of a variety of facts which shall shortly be laid before the public: the least important of which is the circumstance that charges have been preferred against Dr. Mouat the elder, who has been placed in arrest, at the instance of Col. Key, of the 15th Hussars; the presiding authority being perhaps prompted by the recollection of the old adage, of "better luck next time."—Athenæum, June 8.

MEDICAL OFFICERS ON SICK LEAVE.—We were not previously aware that the government of Madras profit by the sickness of its medical officers, and reap a bounty from the effects of their misfortune. It appears that a surgeon on sick certificate draws only the ordinary pay of his rank, and that the sum of Rs. 165 only is paid during his absence to the assistant-surgeon in medical charge; the government pocketing the difference between that sum and the full staff allowance—a gain of Rs. 135. Now, if the basis of this arrangement is the supposition that the medical duties are not so well performed by the subordinate in charge, the overplus ought to be distributed amongst the unhappy men under the care of the medical makeshift, as a compensation for doubtful prescriptions, or deficient attendance.—Athenæum.

BOMBAY.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ARRIVAL OF THE LONDON MAIL.—The Mozuffer, having on board the London Mail of April 24, arrived at Bombay on the 25th May.

THE BOMBAY CHAMBER OF COMMERCE is about to be broken up.

COTTON.—Eighty-four bales of ginned cotton, produced at Dr. Burn's experimental farm, were lately sold, at a rate per candy, Rs. 92 higher than that of the native cotton cleaned in the usual way.

COMMANDER CAMPBELL, I.N.—The papers state that Commander Campbell has sent in a memorial against the acts of the superintendent of the Indian navy.

YOUNG BOMBAY.—From the Gentleman's Gazette we learn that Young Bombay are going a-head apace. A discussion has arisen among the natives learned in English, as to the necessity of the people of India having some control over the public expenditure.

THE SURGEON-GENERAL.—The Bombay papers state that R. Wight, Esq., surgeon-general of Bombay, has retired from the service, and proceeds shortly to Europe. Inspector-General Thwyse is to succeed to the vacant post.

REWARD FOR ATTAINMENT IN NATIVE LANGUAGES.—The following is extracted from a despatch from the Court of Directors to the Bombay government:—"We have much satisfaction in authorizing you to present Captain Cormack and Lieutenant W. D. Dickson with the sum of Rs. 1,000 each, as a mark of our approbation of the proficiency they have gained in several native languages."

H. M. SHIP "VERNON."—We are informed that the Admiralty having left it to Capt. Fitzgerald's option to take home her Majesty's ship Vernon, or dispose of her at Bombay, he has determined on pursuing the former course. We have not heard when the vessel is to leave.—Telegraph and Courier, May 29.

DR. KAYE.—The Assay Master, who has been for some years in civil employ, has appealed to Government against the step recently adopted in passing him over without his consent, and asks to be allowed to take the promotion due to his standing in the service. The case is rather a peculiar one, and there will perhaps be some difficulty in acceding to the worthy doctor's wishes, inasmuch as the gentlemen promoted over his head have actually received their appointments. Should Dr. Kaye be advanced to superintending surgeon, the post of Assay Master will become vacant.

HYDERABAD.—A letter from the dominions H. H. the Nizam informs us that the British contingent had been paid for January in the middle of May—a pretty illustration of the mode in which financial matters are now managed at Hyderabad. Compared to the Nizam's own troops, however, the officers and men of the contingent are lucky indeed. There are many unfortunates at the capital who would consider payment after only four months' delay liberal and princely beyond measure.

VISCOUNT FAULKLAND.—The Right Hon. the Governor took his departure for the Deccan, with his family and staff, on the 30th May.

THE BANGRIA BUND.—We have been favoured with the following letter, which contains intelligence of considerable interest:—"You may not be surprised to hear that the Bangria Bund is again up and active. They have set upon several villages in the northern part of the Tanna collection, and levied tribute from two, and (I hear) killed the patell of a third. The leaders are persons who belonged to the Bangria Bund, two Gowras, and one Thigla. We shall now find that it would have been better to have allowed an officer like Lieut. Gell to remain in these parts. The name alone was worth 500 of the Tanna Invincibles. We shall also find that if the judicial department is allowed to manage matters as they did on the former occasion, much money will be spent in vain, and a bad name will be gained for the Sircar. I am a simple native, but what I say is true."—Gentleman's Gazette, May 31.

NERBUDDA COAL.—We are informed that Captain Fenwick has reached Broach from Chikuldee with 1½ tons of Nerbudda coal, part of a consignment of sixteen tons now on its way to Bombay. He found the transit easy and safe. The coal was brought from Sonadeh (Hosingabad district) by land to the Dauree Hills, and from thence by water to Chikuldee. Captain Fenwick, finding that the season had too far advanced to allow of his proceeding with the whole of the coal by water, determined on leaving the greater portion at Chikuldee, and taking as much by land as would enable him to test the nature of the roads and the expense of conveyance. Water carriage will be obtained for the remainder as soon as the season opens. In the Hosingabad district, the coal is of excellent quality and very plentiful: the natives, however, are said to throw obstacles in the way of obtaining it, as they are accustomed to worship the hills near which it is found.—Telegraph and Courier, May, 30.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

OFFICERS OF THE INDIAN NAVY.

Bombay Castle, May 3, 1848.—The Right Hon. the Governor in Council is pleased to direct the publication in General Orders of the following extracts of a despatch, dated the 22nd March, conveying the decision of the Hon. the Court of Directors upon a number of memorials presented, in September and October last, by officers of the Indian Navy,* which contained comments upon the constitution and administration of the service to which they belong, and highly improper reflections and imputations upon their superiors.

The Right Hon. the Governor in Council desires the most serious attention of all the officers of the Indian Navy to the observations of the Hon. the Court of Directors; implicit obedience to their instructions will be strictly enforced; and the Government trusts that the leniency shewn in the decision now promulgated will be duly appreciated, and induce the young officers who have been misled to join in an act which is characterised by the highest authority as a flagrant breach of discipline and subordination, to endeavour, by their future behaviour, to retrieve the confidence of their superiors, and obliterate the recollection of their misconduct on this occasion.

The suspension awarded to Lieut. Manners of six months, and to Lieut. Etheridge and Midshipman Pengelly of three months, from pay, allowances, and the active duties of the service, will take effect from a date which will be hereafter fixed. Lieut. B. Hamilton is admonished, in conformity with the Hon. Court's instructions, and cautioned to be more circumspect in his conduct hereafter.

Letter from —, dated 10th Sept. 1847 (No. 86), and 1st Oct. 1847 (No. 99).

Transmitting, with the observations and proceeding of Government thereon, nineteen memorials addressed to Court by certain officers and midshipmen of the Indian Navy, respecting the removal from the service of Lieut. Bird, under Court's orders, respecting also the power vested in the superintendent of the Indian Navy, and the mode in which those powers are exercised; the inadequacy of the pay of lieutenants, their severe duty, consequent on the paucity of commissioned officers, and the employment of strangers in command of Indian Navy vessels, to the disadvantage of the officers of the service; respecting, likewise, the system under which officers of the Indian Navy take relative rank with the Royal Navy, their not being granted honorary distinctions, &c.

"With respect to the memorials from the officers and midshipmen of the Indian Navy, we concur generally in the view taken by your president in his Minute of the 14th September, 1847, and we consider those documents, not less from their offensive tone, than from the manner in which they have been severally framed and presented, as highly objectionable, and altogether inadmissible."

Letter from —, dated 15th Oct. 1847 (No. 101).

* Lieuts. Peavor, Twynan, Dakin, Batt, King, Fraser, Manners, Constable, Adams, Etheridge; Messrs. Giles, Hellard, Toby, Robinson, Taylor, Rankin, Mitcheon, Broome, Stroyan, Pengelly.

"Every individual in our service is at liberty to represent his case to us if he feel aggrieved, but his appeal ought to be couched in temperate and respectful terms. That privilege, however, does not admit of a body of officers sending in memorials of a similarly offensive character, both in substance and in terms, as the memorials alluded to are.

"It can scarcely be known to the officers of the Indian Navy, that among the members of a military body, such combination is, under any circumstances, highly irregular, and punishable as tending to the subversion of discipline; but in a case like the present, where the parties, under the pretence of presenting a memorial for the redress of alleged grievances, presume to call in question the acts of the constituted authorities, and to cast imputations and reflections upon the conduct of their superior officer in the discharge of his public duty, the combination constitutes a military crime, and the parties so associated should be made to understand that they are guilty of a grave offence, subjecting the individuals to serious penalties.

"With reference to the imperfect state of the law at the time, there would, we are sensible, have been great difficulty in convening a court-martial for the trial of the offenders; but, as the tone and language assumed by them are both intemperate and disrespectful to superior authority, and involve points of which they could not properly take cognizance, and as an insubordinate spirit and contempt of authority were evinced in the very presentation of the memorials, after the memorialists had been made aware, by their superior officers, of the impropriety of the course they were pursuing, we cannot determine otherwise than to visit this flagrant breach of discipline and subordination with punishment.

"In proceeding to notice the conduct of the memorialists, we cannot divest ourselves of the impression that the spirit of insubordination, the discontented temper, and the disposition to resist authority, which have been displayed by the younger members of the service, have been connived at and encouraged by those of more mature age and of higher rank, who ought to have shewn a very different example, and to have repressed the rash proceedings of their juniors, who were permitted to proceed, step by step, in a course alike injurious to themselves and to the service.

"We are disposed, however, to make every allowance for the youth and inexperience of the junior officers and midshipmen, and to attach all due regard to your intercession in their favour; but it seems to us imperative, that for the vindication of discipline, the upholding our authority, as well as that of your government, and of the superintendent of the Indian Navy, the memorialists should be made to understand that their conduct cannot be passed over altogether with impunity."

(The Court then directs, by way of example, that Lieut. Manners be suspended from pay and allowances, and from the active duties of the service, for the period of six months; that Lieut. Etheridge and Midshipman Pengelly be suspended from pay and allowances, and from the active duties of the service, for the period of three months; and that Lieut. Hamilton be admonished, and informed that his conduct has made a very unfavourable impression upon the Court.)

"We are of opinion that the superintendent of the Indian Navy has a right to expect all the support which can be accorded to him by the local authorities; and we observe with satisfaction that your government, under whose immediate orders he is acting, and who have consequently the best means of forming a judgment on his official conduct, have distinctly declared that you 'regard the imputations and reflections cast upon his conduct and motives as wholly unfounded, and that your confidence in this able and strictly upright officer is undiminished in the slightest degree.' We beg you will assure Sir Robert Oliver of our cordial concurrence in these sentiments."

THE NICOBARS.—The Flying Fish, Mills commander, arrived off town on Thursday last, the 27th inst. from the Car Nicobars, which she left on the 16th idem, with a cargo of coconuts. Her commander has kindly handed us a copy of a declaration signed by the chiefs of the island, where he was taking in his cargo, in which they make it over to the British Government. The declaration runs as follows, and the signatures of the chiefs are witnessed by three gentlemen, so that no doubt can exist of its authenticity.—

The declaration of the Elders or Chiefs of the people on the Island of Car Nicobar.

We, the undersigned, with the view to secure our customs and our trade, which are in danger from the threatened invasion by the Danes, do this day declare our wish to belong henceforth to the British nation, and to accelerate the fulfilment of this our wish; we have also this day hoisted the British flag, and have empowered Captain M. F. Crisp to communicate the same to the British Government.

By the above, we should understand that the Danes have threatened an invasion; but, from what we have been able to pick up, it would appear the Nicobarians have allowed themselves to be too easily frightened, for the threatened invasion consisted in a Danish vessel or two visiting the island, a month or so back, for water and whatever supplies could be obtained, and during their brief stay there, the Danish officers merely sounded the chiefs, as to whether they would have any objection to a settlement being formed on the island. No violent or menacing language was used to the people, nor have we heard that any thing was done to the injury of the place or its inhabitants. However, the inhabitants formed their own opinion on the subject, and the British flag has been, in consequence, hoisted, or rather made fast to a tree on the beach, and the island handed over to the British Government. Captain May Flower Ship has been empowered to communicate the wishes of the islanders to the Government, and, in the capacity of envoy, will no doubt strenuously advocate the advisability of it acceding to their wishes, by taking possession of the place and establishing a colony.—Chronicle, April 29.

THE LAUNCH OF THE DALHOUSIE.—On Thursday last the launch of one of the most magnificent ships ever built in these provinces, took place at the building-yard of Messrs. Cochrane & Co., on the Natmoo estate. The commissioner had most kindly placed the Honourable Company's steamer Prosperity at the convenience of the gentry of Maulmain, to convey them to Natmoo, to witness this splendid, though in this port, not uncommon sight; and, on their arrival at about half-past four p.m., they found every thing in readiness for the launch. A vessel started; and after a little application of the screws, the vessel started; and received the name of Dalhousie from the fair hand of Mrs. McFarlane and Miss Haden, who honoured this splendid ship by performing her baptismal ceremony in the most gallant style, making the bottles ring against her noble stem as she ascended from the platform, and dashing the generous wine over the thunders, which, it is hoped, may for many, many years, brave the stormy waves of the boundless ocean. The Del-housie is a large ship of the most approved model, and speaks volumes in his favour, for the manner in which she is finished and turned out of hand by her builder, Mr. Smith; she is about 768 tons new measurement, and will probably carry much more; and few who have seen her can entertain a doubt that she will be a fast sailor, as well as a most profitable vessel. At the time the people of the yard were using the screws, endeavouring to start her, several elephants were also attached to the bilge-ways for the same purpose; and, when the ship began to move, were all, with the exception of one poor animal, unbooked from their dangerous position; as she moved down to what is always called her "native element," this huge monster of the forest must have felt himself very uncomfortable—by degrees, and in a few moments his chains began to grow tighter and tighter, and his astonishment must have been great to find himself at last rolled over and over, two or three times, as if he were a mere trifle, and not one of the largest of the animal species. Here, what might have been an unfortunate, as well as a painful spectacle, ended by the chain breaking, and the poor creature was afterwards lifted up by a brother elephant, and, to the joy of all the spectators, pronounced to be uninjured, except, perhaps, by the fright and the many bruises he must have sustained. The company, amongst whom were many ladies, most of the civil and military officers of Malakmain, and several of the merchants, then adjourned to the hospitable mansion of J. C. Sutherland, Esq., at Natmoo, where, at 7 p.m., they sat down, about fifty in number, to a splendid dinner, and did ample justice to the many good things before them. After the cloth was removed, several excellent toasts were proposed and responded to with much enthusiasm, and none more so than the health and prosperity of the excellent host himself, proposed, in a very neat speech, by Captain Phayre, and drunk with much satisfaction by all present. At about half-past ten the steam was known to be up on board by the noise it made, and, the steam being tolerably well up on shore, it only remained for the guests to wish the host "good-bye, and every success," and repair on board for a passage to Maulmain, where they arrived in safety about midnight.—Free Press, April 25.

SINGAPORE.

GUTTA PERCHA.—The trade in this article is progressing in importance every day, and is engaging the attention of the natives to such an extent as to lead them to neglect other pursuits. The quantity imported into Singapore, during the last four months, appears from the official returns to be upwards of 750 piculs, but this is probably much below the mark. The price has latterly risen about 30 per cent.

H. M. BRIG ROYALIST, Lieut. Gordon commanding, arrived here on Monday, from China, having visited Cochin China in her course down, for the purpose of rescuing Mr. Victor Howes from the hands of the Cochin Chinese. We are glad to learn that this object was successfully accomplished, and that Mr. Howes has been delivered from the disagreeable, if not dangerous situation in which he was placed.

CHINA.

ARRIVAL OF THE LONDON MAIL.—The Pekin, having on board the London Mail of March 24, arrived at Hong Kong on the 10th May.

We have this morning received the following important communication from a correspondent in Canton. He justly draws the conclusion that it is a great step towards the legalization of the trade in opium; for if Lew-tsin is permitted to make up the deficiency in the branch of the public revenue under his charge by a tax on the drug, the emperor can scarcely interfere to prevent other mandarins from doing the same, and in the present straitened circumstances of the imperial exchequer, it may be supposed that a supply from such a source, if found very productive, as it could scarcely fail to be, will not be much longer rejected:—

Canton, 11th March, 1846.

OPIMUM.

As is well known, the imperial laws of China prohibit the importation of opium. About ten years ago Heu-nae-tse, then holding a high post at Peking, but formerly criminal judge, was, with several other high mandarins, commanded by his imperial majesty to send in a report respecting opium and the use of it by the Chinese people.

Heu-nae-tse stated in his memorial, that his majesty ought to permit the growth of the poppy in China; and allow foreigners to import opium at a fixed duty, &c. As this was contrary to the emperor's views, he deprived Heu-nae-tse of his post for having dared to make such a statement, and adopted in preference the severe prohibitory measures recommended by the celebrated Lin, which ultimately led to the war with England.

Since the conclusion of the peace, the laws against the use and importation of opium have, indeed, remained unchanged in the penal code, but their enforcement has been constantly becoming more lax. This is so much the case with respect to those against smoking, that they may be almost regarded as obsolete; and Lew-tsin, who was appointed last year intendant of the Nan-shau-teen circuit, soon after his appointment gave orders to the Shau custom-house to permit opium to pass at a fixed duty of four mace, six candareens per bag or piece, each bag or piece weighing three catties, or four pounds avoirdupois.

The Shau custom-house is situated in the north part of Kwantung, and on the south side of the Meiling mountains. It lies upon the great route by which all merchandise must pass in going from Kwantung to the central and northern provinces of China. About four years ago upwards of 210,000 taels of silver was paid into the emperor's exchequer by the mandarin who had the superintendence of the Shau custom-house as the amount of duties taken there for one year; but Leang-sing-yuen, who was intendant of circuit before Lew-tsin, was unable to raise that sum from the duties, and had in consequence to make up the deficit from his private purse. If he had not done so, he would have been deprived of his post. The deficiency was caused by large quantities of the merchandise which formerly went by that route, being now imported through the other four newly-open ports.

Lew-tsin, the present intendant of the Nanshaou-teen circuit, is a member of the Han-lin College, and has therefore a literary rank that always gives its possessors a certain degree of power. He is, what is more important, likewise a protégé of Paou-king, a manchoo, one of the members of the privy council. About two years ago he was prefect of Kwangchow, and had his Yamun in Canton burnt down by the populace, in consequence of his having ordered a man to be beaten in the streets. When promoted to his present post, he found that the annual receipts of the lawful duties would not amount to the sum which he was imperatively required to deliver, and which had formerly been paid to the emperor. He, therefore, trusting to his influence at court—where money is at present extremely scarce—commenced the new system for mandarins, of directly giving orders to the custom-house officers to take duties on opium at a fixed rate. It is taxed as medicine, and the measure may be regarded as a great step towards the legalization of the trade in the article, for other mandarins will probably follow the example of Lew-tsin, when they see that the Peking government finds no fault with the new system, which serves to secure the imperial revenue against decrease.—Singapore Free Press, April 18.

HIS EXCELLENCY'S VISIT TO THE BOGUE.—On Saturday last his Excellency the Governor, accompanied by Mrs. Bonham, General Staveland, and others, proceeded in the Medea to the Bogue, and afterwards visited Canton, returning to Hong-Kong on Tuesday evening.

It has been understood the main purpose of the trip was a complimentary meeting between the two new plenipotentiaries. Accordingly his Excellency went on shore at the Bogue, and partook of a banquet prepared for him by Sen, the Chinese minister, who, accompanied by Li, the admiral, returned the visit the same evening; but from some cause unexplained, the interview was very short, and took place on deck, the imperial commissioner courteously but firmly declining to descend to the cabin, where preparations had been made for him.—China Mail, May 4.

SHANGHAI.—Mr. Consul Alcock has at length succeeded in coercing the Chinese authorities into conceding his peremptory demand to have ten of the junkmen who maltreated three English missionaries at Tying Poo given up for punishment at Shanghai. The accompanying documents shew that the result has afforded general satisfaction to the foreign residents, although we miss several respectable names in the list of those who tender their "cordial congratulations and best thanks to Mr. Consul Alcock." We do not imagine that these gentlemen have kept aloof from dissatisfaction at the issue of the negotiations, but probably concurring in Mr. Alcock's dictum, that "the result cannot affect the character of the steps taken before it could even be predicted with safety," they may possibly differ from their fellow-countrymen as to the policy of such steps being resorted to by a local officer, in a case where there was no reason to apprehend imminent peril from such delay as would have been necessary to make a reference to Hong-Kong. Every one, however, will admit that much credit is due to Mr. Alcock for the promptitude and decision with which he acted and for having ventured upon so serious a responsibility, which he must have felt success alone would justify; and the issue will be doubly gratifying to him, should he find that his assumption of the ship might detain the party is a possibility. One first impression was that it would not; but his work was suffered to elapse before the Fury was despatched, and as she was not to go direct to Shanghai, the information that this necessity was satisfied with the utmost cheerfulness by the command; though we must still entertain some misgivings on the point, until the fact is authoritatively announced.

Despite the uncertainty, Mr. Alcock has the satisfaction of being able to point to the general approval of his proceedings, not only by so large a body of his countrymen at Shanghai, but by the representatives of other nations, who seem throughout to have willingly co-operated with the British consul.

We could have desired, in addition, some declaration that Dr. Macpherson and his party were not beyond the prescribed bounds at the place they were attacked, and that they could have been, or intended to be, back at Shanghai within twenty-four hours after leaving it—a point which might easily be settled by showing how long the party had been absent at the time the affray occurred. We do not hold that the mere fact of being beyond the bounds excuses their being maltreated; but while it was the duty of the Chinese authorities to convey them in safety to the nearest port, they cannot guarantee straying foreigners any more than their own countrymen, from highway robbery and kidnapping; and, if the offence was committed beyond the pale, it is yet to be explained why the punishment has been inflicted at Shanghai instead of Tsing-poo.—China Mail.

TEAS.—In Blacks there has been more activity than in either of the two preceding months, and for this season of the year a fair amount of business done. In most cases previous rates have been obtained; they may be quoted nominally in last month, and with too high to show any remunerative return. 50 chops in the quantity named as settled, 50 or 6 being for the American market. The stock is considered large, there being above 50 chops. Arrivals of the new crop may be looked for in 5 or 6 weeks. In Souchongs there has been some movement, 9 or 10 chops settled at from 17 a 20 tael good to fine, and 12 q 13 tael for common, leaving 3,500 packages on the market. Flowery Pekoe, some trifling sales have been made. Scented Teas, 2,000 d 3,000 ten cattles Caper sold at 13 a 17 tael; stock 6,000 a 7,000. 1,000 half chests Orange Pekoe at 20 a 22 tael; stock 3,000. The new Chulan flower is about coming in.

Greens.—The sales are estimated at 15,000 packages. Young Hyson of common quality 10 a 31 tael, fair to good 30 a 31 tael, superior 30 a 33 tael; 2,000 a 4d—the stock small. Hyson of the better kinds have all disappeared, the few remaining mostly of inferior quality; 3,000 are supposed to have been settled, say at rather under the last quotations; Imperial and Gunpowder about 1,000 sold. Tearing 21 a 22 tael to 23 a 24 tael. Twankay and Moonie kinds 28 a 31 tael to 33 a 36 tael; no good to be had, 500 packages left. Skins 3,500 taken, principally for Sydney, at common 10 a 13 tael; good 15 to 18 tael; stock 2,000. Twankay 1,000 d 1,500 packages settled from 10 to 17 tael; 1,000 left, consisting of the lower grades. Canton Teas, 2,000 Young Hyson taken for England at 10 a 12 tael for common, and 15 a 17 for good; 1,000 Gunpowder and Single at 14 a 16 tael.

Manilla, April 26, 1898.

EXCHANGES.

On London 6 months' bills last sales, 4s. 4d, per dollar; Bank bills, at 30 days' sight, 4s. 2d.
 On Canton, 2 per cent. discount.

IMPORTS.

There is but little doing in the market at present, and very heavy stocks, while a scarcity of money amongst the Chinese dealers renders sales of magnitude extremely difficult; and few or no goods are purchased beyond those required to supply the weekly retail trade.

AMERICAN BROWN SHEETINGS.—A parcel of 2,000 pieces ex Lebanon has been sold at Sp. Drs. 3½ for 40 yds. 37 inches. The DRILLS by the same vessel are 2,500 pieces. This article is extremely dull, and no offers better than Sp. Drs. 2½ have been made for 32 yds., at which the above are reported to be sold.

EXPORTS.

SUGAR.—As yet no contracts are known to have been made for the current Clayed for the new crop, and the nominal quotation is Sp. Drs. 4½. The intelligence by the mail from Europe and America is however such as to make purchases at this rate not at all desirable. Of Unclayed Sugar for the Sydney market, large purchases have been made at from Sp. Drs. 3½ a Sp. Drs. 2½ per picul, and so long as the demand for this description keeps up, there is but little chance of a decline in the price of current Clayed, as the preparation of the raw Sugar at the above quotations is more advantageous to the Chinese and other dealers than furnishing the Clayed articles at Sp. Drs. 4½ or Sp. Drs. 4½ per picul. Tail, but little coming in, and not of good quality; nominal at Sp. Drs. 2½ per picul. Zebu in little demand at Sp. Drs. 2 a Sp. Drs. 2½.

HEMP.—The steady demand for this article has kept the price much in advance of the rates of former years, and though some small parcels have been purchased at Sp. Drs. 6½ a Sp. Drs. 6½, yet the large consignments from the provinces which were held by agents who refused Sp. Drs. 6½, have all been taken for English account at Sp. Drs. 6½ per picul unscrewed, and this must be considered the rate of the day.

COFFEE.—The little demand which has existed for this article since the coming in of the new crop has gradually reduced the asking price to Sp. Drs. 7½ per picul.

SAPAN WOOD.—In steady demand, but tolerably plenty at Sp. Drs. 1½ per picul for straight good shipping quality.

INDIGO.—No changes in this article. For the few good lots in the market prices are asked above the idea of purchasers, and the large quantities of inferior on hand are without demand.

STICKS.—Are still sold at Government prices.

In other articles of Export little doing, and no material change in the quotations of last month.

FREIGHTS.

For Europe and America none.

LITERARY & SCIENTIFIC INTELLIGENCE.

Some very curious and valuable information respecting the Tibetan country has been collected by the commissioners (Capt. Cunningham, Dr. Thomson, and Lieut. Strachey), appointed to settle the boundaries of the possessions of Maharaja Goliab Sing, in conjunction with Chinese commissioners and agents of the Maharaja. The reports of Capt. Cunningham, the senior British commissioner, to Col. Lawrence, our resident at Lahore, are published in the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, from whence we extract some of the most remarkable particulars.

Capt. Cunningham and Dr. Thomson arrived at Lhassa, the capital of Tibet, on the 24th October last, and remained there seven days; Dr. Thomson intending to proceed thence to Nuhra, and up the Siayok river to its source, crossing the Karakorum range for a few marches to the north on the Yarkand road, returning by the Siayok river, and following its course to Iskardoh; Capt. Cunningham designing to take a southerly course, following the Indus to Khalet, or Kubul, thence to the Dras river, and through the northern part of Cashmere, as far as Gigit.

Capt. Cunningham attests the general accuracy of Mr. Trebeck's survey, but found the surveys of Mr. Vigne in many places erroneous.

At the head of the Kistien-Gunga river is a district named Pakhtawar, which Capt. C. has no doubt is the original seat of the Pakhtans, or Afghans. "The similarity of features of the two people would alone argue their common origin, but their former juxtaposition, the one on the Jakum, the other on the Kishan-Gunga, places the point beyond dispute."

Capt. Cunningham entered the city of Cashmere on the 2nd November. He visited the architectural antiquities and ruins at Pandritan, Avantipur, Bij-Bihari, Martland, and the caves of Bhomajo, of all of which he made plans and elevations by measurement. He observes that "the style of architecture in these ancient temples is distinguished by great elegance of design, combined with extreme solidity of construction. It is," he adds, "superior to anything I have seen in India, and from the simplicity of its outlines and the beauty of its proportions, I think it may be ranked as an order of architecture not much inferior to our own classical models."

He was fortunate enough to procure copious vocabularies of two of the three dialects of the Dardic languages, viz. the Shina, spoken in Gilgit and Hasora, and the Khamti, spoken in Hunza and Nager. They consist chiefly of Sanscrit and Hindi.

He has discovered beyond all doubt the exact position of the ancient capital of Cashmere in Pandritan, the local corruption of the Sanscrit name of Parasnathitana, or Parasnathitan, the chief city; the position of Pandritan corresponds with the description given of the ancient city by the Chinese traveller Hsueh Tsang, A.D. 640, and what places the fact beyond all doubt is, that "in an old abridged copy of the Raja Taringini, which has marginal notes identifying the ancient cities, under their Sanscrit names, with the more modern appellations in the corrupt spoken dialect of Cashmere, is an account of the building of a temple by Nirjita Verma, A.D. 920-921, at Parasnathitana, which name, in the original notes, is identified with Pandritan." He has also identified the ancient country of Bolor with the present Balti, or Little Tibet.

A valuable discovery has been that of three new Sanscrit dramas, two of which were previously known to us by name; but the other was altogether unknown. They are as follows: the Amrgha-Raghava, by Mura-ra-brahmi, a Cashmerian brahman, in which the principal exploits of Rama are dramatized. It is one of the hitherto lost plays, of which Professor Wilson had only noted the name. Another is Sringara-Tilaka, by Sri Rudra-kavi, a Cashmerian brahman, a sort of monologue, in which one actor successively describes and personates the characters of various women. This was only known by name. The new play is called Vasavadatta-sheritra, a short piece, written by Suban-du-kavi, a Cashmerian brahman. Copies of all the dramas were made and forwarded to Government.

Capt. Cunningham reached Hazroo, in Chuch, in December, where he found the passes towards Gilgit closed for the season. The only route left open was through the Dharitawar and Hazroo districts. He has identified the latter with the country of King Abisares of Alexander's historians, and the former with the Varsa Regis of Pliny, the district being called by Hsueh Tsang "U-las-shi," and in the Raja Taringini, "Urasa." He believes that he has found Aornus in the vast hill-fortress of Rami-gat, or Rami-gara, in the Yushai country. "The massive granite walls of this Cyclopean mountain-fortress must always have made it the strongest, as it is the largest, fortified place in this country." The antiquity of the place was confirmed by the discovery of two pieces of ancient sculpture in the ruined citadel; the naked body of a man with the Macedonian short cloak thrown over the shoulders and fastened in front; and a human breast, adorned with a necklace, of which the clasp was formed of two centaurs, boldly designed and gracefully executed.

But what he considers as the most valuable acquisition is the discovery of two short Ariane-Pali inscriptions, in the same character as that found upon the reverse of the Indo-Greek coins: both inscriptions bear dates, and are the oldest dated inscriptions hitherto found in India. The most ancient is dated "Samvat 37, on the first day of the bright half of the month of Sawant, in the reign of Mahadaza, king of the Gushang," a tribe (the most powerful) of the Tochari, who, about the middle of our era, overran Persia and India. The other inscription is dated in Samvat 333.

REMARKABLE HOT WIND IN THE ZILLAH OF PURNEAH. On the 25th May, 1847, a very singular hot blast suddenly destroyed a large extent of indigo cultivation in the zillah of Purneah. Mr. Piddington, of Calcutta, set on foot an investigation into the particulars of this phenomenon, whence it appeared that the blast came about five o'clock in the evening from the west, and lasted four or five minutes, and in its course withered up the leaves of the indigo plant "exactly as if they had been fried in a frying-pan;" that the principal fury of the heat was confined to a narrow slip of land extending from east and west (the direction of the blast) about eight miles, with a breadth of fifteen miles; that the heat was so intense that the villagers flew out of their houses "to look for the fire;" and that the buildings of two factories were blown down by a storm of wind preceding the blast. It appeared that, before noon of that day, it was clear; after noon, cloudy and very hot; and that, during the time the hot blast lasted, the sky and clouds were very red and dark. Some natives, at a distance from the locality, on returning home, stated that fire fell from heaven and killed seven men, whose bodies "became like stones," the fire remaining visible and hot for many hours after it fell, in masses, like large stones or blocks of coal.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

WEDNESDAY, July 26, 1848.

WHEN we threw out a suggestion, in the last Mail, that it was time to drop the Sattara controversy, after the case had been turned inside out before every tribunal that could take cognizance of it, and always with the same result, we were far from expecting the coup de grace it was to receive in the House of Commons on the 14th July. Mr. George Thompson, the hon. member for the Tower Hamlets, leaving the debate he had raised in that House respecting the main question in abeyance,—checking his lightnings in mid-volley,—rushed upon a more vulnerable foe (as he supposed) than Governors, Courts of Directors, and India Boards, and hurled twelve atrocious charges against Colonel Ovens, the British Resident at Sattara. The attack drew forth an ample vindication of that officer,—first, in the strong testimony borne to his honour and integrity; and, secondly, in the contemptuous rejection of the motion for a Committee of Inquiry by a majority of 77 to 8. But it drew forth something more,—namely, a retort upon Mr. George Thompson himself.

This gentleman has generally (not, we believe, invariably) disclaimed the intention of assailing, in this matter, the private characters of those whom he almost indiscriminately accuses; although liberal in imputing or insinuating motives, as well as in arraigning acts, he has generally affected to restrict his accusations to the public characters of the individuals. Thus, at the very time he broadly charged Colonel Ovens with subornation of perjury, with employing bribes and threats to procure false evidence, he went through the form of paying a high tribute to that gentleman's private character: reminding us of a personage in one of Mr.

Dickens's novels, who vented foul slander against poor Mr. Pickwick, but only in his capacity of a member of the club. We cannot understand, though Mr. Thompson may, how a British officer, a Resident at a native court in India, can be guilty of subornation of perjury without any stain upon his private character; but upon his own hypothesis, Mr. Thompson cannot complain if the lantern of scrutiny is turned upon his public character, in the capacity of vakeel.

The Hon. J. E. Elliot, brother of the Earl of Minto, member for Roxburghshire, late in the Bengal Civil Service, charged Mr. Thompson with being a salaried agent of the Rajah of Sattara, whose case he so pertinaciously urges, and further with being a salaried agent of the King of Delhi. He stated in the House, on the authority of a communication from Major Angelo, the Commandant of the Palace-Guard at Delhi, amongst other circumstances (some of them sufficiently ludicrous), that Mr. Thompson undertook the office of vakeel to the king, who bound himself by a written agreement to pay him Rs. 12,000 (£1,200) a year; that he received Rs. 5,000 for the expenses of his journey to Delhi; that, when he arrived there, he required a house, and the palace of the late Begum Sumree was provided for him, with table, servants, &c.; that Rs. 200 a month was paid to him for his "table" on his journey back to Calcutta, and that a further demand was made by him of Rs. 1,000 a month during his sojourn at Delhi, which was "reluctantly" paid by the king. Mr. Elliot further stated, on the authority of Major Angelo, that Mr. Thompson had, since his return to England, forwarded to the king a report of a debate at the India House respecting his affairs totally different from the reports which appeared in the ordinary journals, and, it must be presumed, totally different from the truth, since the communication was of such a complexion that the king was with some difficulty restrained from ordering, in the transport of his joy, a royal salute to be fired upon the receipt of the glorious news.

According to the report of the debate on the 11th July, Mr. Thompson did not deny the fact of his being a salaried agent of the Rajah of Sattara, nor the acceptance of the agency of the King of Delhi, for which he was to be paid not a salary, but a sort of commission or poundage upon the money he could get for the king,—upon the principle of "no cure, no pay;"—but he denied that he had ever received one penny from his Majesty. Major Angelo resides at Delhi, and cannot, of course, be communicated with before the Session closes; so that the point at issue, whether he has invented the story of the actual receipt of money, with all its curious incidents, or Mr. Thompson has forgotten the circumstance, must remain for future decision.

If our recollection does not deceive us, the acceptance of the Delhi agency was severely commented upon at the time by the Indian press, and Mr. Thompson was reproached with making his mission to India, in the cause of religion and philanthropy, at the expense of a society at home, the means of ministering to his own pecuniary interests; and our memory must be also much in fault if Mr. Thompson did not vindicate himself by setting the acquisition of this lucrative office in the light of a special interference of Providence, for which, with all humility, he expressed himself "unspeakably thankful."

Upon his own confession, however, Mr. Thompson must in future be regarded, not, as hitherto, as the spontaneous unbought advocate of wronged and oppressed princes, and as speaking only the language of sincere conviction, but as a mere salaried agent, hired to maintain his clients' interests and plead their cause, right or wrong, making "the worse appear the better reason;" like a professional advocate in a court of law, who employs his eloquence and even his tears to persuade a jury of the innocence of a miscreant whom he knows to be morally guilty.

If this were a matter which concerned Mr. Thompson alone, the exposure he has provoked might balance the inconvenience which has arisen from the ignorance of the public as to his real relation to the Sattara affair; but his example may allure imitators, to whom character and reputation are of less account than rupees; and the results of such a species of agitation, practised upon a large scale in India, would be frightful. In no part of the world is there a greater number of wealthy persons who fancy themselves aggrieved; in none is there such an eagerness of competition in the market of litigation. In India, men will squander fortunes in hopeless suits, apparently for the mere pleasure of the excitement, or the gratification of spite. The appearance of European vakeels, proclaiming their powers and tendering their services in England, would quicken into life swarms of dormant griefs, and generate new broods in the prolific hot-beds of avarice, malice, and revenge. Subordinate agents would traverse the country, like Pharaoh's vermin, "corrupting the whole land;" wrongs as old as the days of Clive and Hastings would be revived, and a dozen standing committees of the House of Commons would be unable to keep down the arrears of inquiry. A joint-stock company for redressing the injuries of Eastern princes, starting with a small capital for rigging out a few sharp travellers to collect business in India, might divide enormous profits.

In process of time, these agents might mount from private to public wrongs, and agitate for a "Repeal of the Union" between England and India. Bacon tells us that those who set about convincing mankind that they are ill-governed find willing audiences. India is not likely to be an exception to this rule; and we remember that, in the year 1844, an attempt was made by some natives of Calcutta* to get up a sort of Conciliation Hall there, and at one of their meetings, a young baboo gave vent to sentiments of the most seditious character, in the presence of Mr. GEORGE THOMPSON, whom he belauded, and who, the speaker said, had told him of the "good feeling of many persons in England;" and the baboo urged his countrymen "to co-operate with such disinterested friends."

It is vain to attempt a parallel between such mischievous agency and that which has sometimes been exercised by members of Parliament on behalf of British colonies. There is no sort of analogy between the case of a remote dependency, such as Ceylon or Canada, employing a member of the British senate, with or without a quiddam honorarium, as the guardian of its interests or the medium of its complaints, and that of discontented and treacherous chiefs of India (for it would come to this) hiring European adventurers to get up factitious cases of pretended wrongs, and filling England with mercenary orators and manufacturers of petitions.

The subject deserves serious consideration, and, if it lead to some provision against the growth of the evil we have pointed out, the Sattara agitation will not have been wholly useless.

CORRESPONDENCE.

No. II.—ON THE POPULATION AND MORTALITY IN CALCUTTA.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—Having in the last letter (Indian Mail, 98) considered the mortality amongst the different classes of the inhabitants of Calcutta, we will proceed to a few observations on the mortality amongst native and European children, which would be a very interesting subject of inquiry, but unfortunately the defect of the census, to which I have before alluded, prevents any very accurate result being arrived at, though a table exists of the children dying under five years of age. Without a comparison with the numbers of the living, the most erroneous conclusions would be drawn; and this is a point to which the attention of those medical or government officers to whom it may fall at any future time to prosecute these inquiries, might most advantageously be directed. Dr Burke states the average mortality amongst the children of European soldiers to be as high as 18.29 per cent. If this is intended to apply to children under five years of age, it is indeed an unusual rate; since, in the six large towns of England, enumerated in the preceding letter, the mortality from 1813 to 1830 was but 8.63 per cent. annually under that age, and in London, for the same period, only 8.27 per cent. Dr. Martin considers, however, that up to the age of five or six years, the climate of Calcutta is not unhealthy for children; but that, after that period, they begin to require a change of air. He had not seen one case of smallpox amongst children of a better class, and adds, that in the course of sixteen years' experience he did not recollect an instance of one child born dead: all authorities seem to concur in the belief that it is impossible to rear European children entirely in Calcutta. The hot and cold seasons seem to be equally trying to the constitution, and the attempts, which have been made by experimenting parents, to strengthen their frames by exposure to cold, or to fortify them by a generous diet, have been equally fatal to the objects of their anxious care. Mr. Twining asserts that, after much inquiry, he had not been able to find any where a sample of the third generation from unmixed stock. Dr. Stewart, as quoted in Dr. Martin's work, states the very extraordinary fact, that the ratio of mortality amongst the adult European population of Calcutta is to that of children as five to one; whilst of Portuguese Catholics, the mortality amongst children exceeds that of adults in the proportion of four to one. If this statement prove correct, it demands a most searching inquiry, as it represents the mortality of the children of the latter class to be nearly five times as great as that of the former, presuming that the number of children living bears, in each class, nearly the same proportion to the adults. The following comparison may be made:—

Proportion per Cent. of Deaths. Average for Ten Years. 1826 to 1835.

	Protestant Christians.	Catholics.
Children ...	16.4	81.55
	100	100

The burials in Calcutta amongst Protestant Christians, for eleven years, 1820 to 1830, of children under five years of age, were 18.97 per cent. of the deaths; whilst, in 1841, according to the Registrar-General's Report, the proportion under the same age to 100 deaths was

London ...	40.9
Middlesex ...	38.6
Birmingham ...	48.1

It seems, therefore, evident that a more accurate table of the existing European population must be obtained, otherwise it would appear that the mortality amongst European children in Calcutta is not half of that in London, or even in Middlesex; a result which, however gratifying, if true, is unfortunately contradicted by all experience. The proportion living of children to adults is not given in the census of the city; but the following table relative to the suburbs may be here introduced:—

Of 100 Inhabitants existing in the Suburbs.

	Children.	Adults.
Hindoos ...	28.8	71.2
Mussulmans ...	32.1	67.9
East-Indians ...	21.45	78.55
Europeans ...	15.7	84.3

In the returns from New South Wales, the proportion of children under seven years of age to the whole population was, males, 19.8 per cent., and females, 29.78 per cent.; and in Sydney only, males, 20.63 per cent., and females 24.3 per cent.

Col. Sykes observes, as a curious fact, that in the Orphan School of Calcutta, only one death took place in one year from 1st October, 1842, amongst 270 children, although the admissions to the school hospital amounted to 381, of which there were cholera cases 9, diarrhoea 18, dysentery 43, and fevers 198. To conclude this part of the subject, the following valuable table of the proportion of deaths amongst children, at every age, to the number living, in the above-mentioned Orphan School, is inserted, compared with that of two large cities:—

Proportion of Deaths per Cent. amongst the Children in the Orphan School at Calcutta, compared with those of Children in Liverpool and London, in 1841.

The proportion for the ages above five not being given in the English tables, except for intervals, I have taken the mean of the five ages. The comparison would only be strictly correct if the living at exchange were in the same proportions as those in Calcutta; but the difference is so trifling as to be not worth consideration in the general result. It will be noticed that under five years of age the proportion of mortality, amongst both sexes, is generally in favour of Calcutta when compared with Liverpool; but quite the reverse after the first year of life when examined with the London table. After five years of age the climate or some other cause begins to act with more fatal effect on the health of children, and from five to nine the mortality is 2½ times, and from ten to fourteen, 4 times as great as that amongst male children in London; and twice and thrice as great as amongst females at those periods of life respectively.

INFLUENCE OF SEASONS ON HEALTH.

Several observations have been made by which the effect of the seasons upon health, and the different classes of diseases prevalent at different periods of the year, may be ascertained with comparative accuracy. Dr. Martin considers the most healthy season to be from February to April, excluding epidemics, which prove most fatal in March, April, and May. During the cold season, from November to February, damp fogs prevail at night, and a cold N.E. drying wind by day. That the human frame is in some degree acted upon by the latter may be conjectured by observing its effect upon articles of furniture, which crack under its influence, and plaster newly laid on falls from the walls. From the middle of July to October may be considered the hot season, though the rains commence usually in the middle of June, when a moist, close atmosphere produces feelings of great languor and oppression, and profuse and exhausting perspiration weakens the constitution. Fevers and dysenteries are the natural consequences of this state of the climate. The average range of the thermometer gradually falls from June to November, and the mortality, as a general rule, appears to increase with the advance of the cold season. The following table exhibits, in the first column, the average range of the thermometer, in months, from Dr. Martin's Report, and in the second column, the proportion of mortality in each month to the total number of deaths, according to the returns given by Col. Sykes, on the average of the years 1826 to 1842, inclusive. The average number of deaths in each year amongst the native population, Hindoos and Mussulmans, was 11,170. Then follow some returns from Dr. Stewart, by which the influence of the seasons on children, when compared with adults, may be examined, both amongst the Protestant and the Catholic populations. In the next column is an important return from Dr. Strong's Report to Government "On the Mortality amongst the prisoners committed to the Allipore and the Russaspah gaols," and as they are mostly employed on the public roads, and in the open air, the effect of climate may be considered as more than usually apparent. The total average mortality is very high, being almost exactly the same as that of the European troops in Fort William. The average number of prisoners for twenty years, from 1820 to 1839, was 1,711; and the mortality 7.75 per cent. per annum. Two-thirds of these prisoners are confined for life. As the number of the prisoners varies so much in different months, it has been necessary to give the mortality per cent. on the average population existing in each month; and, for the sake of comparison, the succeeding columns are reduced to the same proportion. Dr. Martin considers both Allipore and Russapagh more healthy than Calcutta, the former especially, which being better drained, and at a greater elevation than the other suburbs, suffered much less from the epidemic fever in 1833.

It does not appear that, up to the period at which these observations were brought together, any very accurate records were kept in the hospitals, by which the frequency, duration, or fatality of different classes of diseases, could be compared with the whole population. Neither are the diseases for which patients have been admitted classed; so as to afford a comparison with those in other parts of the world. In the military hospitals of H.M.'s troops this object has been steadily pursued, and the consequence has been some very important additions to medical statistics, from which, in Cpl. Tulloch's admirable Reports on the sanitary condition of H.M.'s forces in various parts of the world, many new and interesting deductions have been drawn, and practically acted upon in the distribution of troops, the localities for barracks, and other circumstances important to the health and efficiency of the soldier. No doubt a better system in recording the facts to be observed now prevails in the hospitals in India, and, in a few years, the information will probably prove of great value. In the mean time, the summary of such observations as have been made may be interesting to others besides the medical profession. It is stated that the cholera is found to prevail most in the months of March, April, May, and June; and this will account for the increased proportion which, in the previous tables, is perceptible in those months. On an average of six years, Dr. Stewart estimated the deaths by cholera, amongst the Hindoos, to be 1.86, and amongst the Mahomedans .656 in every 100 of the existing population; and that they constituted respectively 22.25, and 25 per cent. of the deaths in each class. Amongst Europeans, out of 15,293 admissions into the Presidency General Hospital, 803 were cases of cholera, and of these 372 proved fatal, being 51 per cent. of all the admissions, whilst of those admitted 46.3 per cent. died. Previous to 1815, when the cholera appeared as an epidemic, Dr. Martin remarks, that November was the most fatal month; but since then, the following table will shew the way in which the general results are affected by this disease, both amongst natives and Europeans. It may be observed, in connection with this subject, that by a return to Parliament recently made, exhibiting the mortality amongst the European and the native troops in the East-India Company's service, in the presidency of Bengal, the average number of deaths for twenty years, 1825 to 1844, was, of Europeans, 7.29 per cent.; of natives, 1.8 per cent., of which the deaths by cholera were respectively 1.04 and .21 per cent. of the strength; the latter being not so much as one-third of the deaths by the same disease, even amongst the Mahomedans, and not one-sixth of those of the Hindoos, as estimated by Dr. Stewart. The soldier, however, not only enjoys superior comforts, but is always within reach of the best medical skill. The fact proves, at any rate, how much the condition of the native is capable of being improved.

Assuming the population returns of 1837, the deaths by cholera of Hindoos, being 15,304 in seven years, in a population of 157,473, were 1.47 per cent. per annum, and those of Mahomedans, being 2,911 in the same time, were not quite .7 per cent. per annum. It was observed, that amongst the admissions in the Presidency General Hospital, which were principally of Europeans, 68.2 per cent. were admitted in the four months from March to June, inclusive, and that out of the total number of admissions by cholera, 31.6 per cent. died within these four months only.

I have been thus particular in separating the statistics of this disease from those of all others because, from its fearful character, it presents itself to the mind of an European in the most striking light. It is singular, that even on the average of the five years, 1840 to 1844, which, according to the Government returns before alluded to, exhibit the greatest mortality by this disease in the whole twenty years, its ravages amongst the European troops in Bengal are still somewhat less fatal than amongst the Hindoo inhabitants of Calcutta, as stated above; being only 1.44, compared with 1.47 per cent. A much greater difference will be found in favour of the European, if the same periods be examined. This result, probably, does not accord with the generally received opinion, and may tend to remove much of the alarm with which the effects of this disease on the health of Europeans are generally regarded. I propose to conclude this subject in another short letter, with a few observations on the causes which appear principally to produce the great mortality which is observed amongst the native population in Calcutta, and by the removal of which, it will be easily perceived, a corresponding benefit may be confidently expected in ameliorating the health of the European community.

I remain, Sir, your obedient servant,
Equitable Office, Blackfriars, SAMUEL BROWN.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, July 11.—Col. Ovans.—Mr. G. Thompson moved for "a Select Committee to inquire into the conduct of Lieut. Col. Ovans while British political resident at the Court of Sattara; and into the proceedings of the Bombay Government, and the Court of Directors of the East-India Company, in relation to certain charges preferred against that officer." He disclaimed any imputation upon the private character of Col. Ovans, whom he accused only as a public servant, and declared that, in spite of the assertion of Col. Ovans that the charges against him were false, he could establish them to the very letter. He accused him of suborning evidence against the deposed Rajah of Sattara by bribing one of the rajah's servants, and in another instance of extorting evidence by duress; he might prefer, and believed he could substantiate, other charges against Col. Ovans, if a Committee were granted.

The motion was seconded by Mr. Hume.

The Hon. E. Elliot (who had spent the greater part of his life in India) directed the attention of the House to the course which Mr. Thompson had pursued respecting the Sattara question. After bringing forward a motion upon the subject in April, and deferring the resumption of the debate upon it from time to time, he had dropped it, and brought forward a new motion, in order to have an opportunity to make a new speech. Mr. Elliot defended Col. Ovans, and observed that Mr. Thompson ought to satisfy the House that he had no personal feeling in this matter, and no pecuniary interest; and he then proceeded to state upon the authority of a statement made by a gentleman who had met Mr. Thompson in India, and seemed well acquainted with his movements, and who stated, that on the return of the late Baboo Dwarkanauth Tagore to India from his first visit to England, he was accompanied by Mr. G. Thompson, as a sort of itinerant philanthropist; that Mr. Thompson, happening to see an advertisement circulated by the King of Delhi, calling for tenders of services from parties desirous to proceed to England to advocate his claims before the home authorities, offered his services; that Mr. Thompson undertook to proceed to England as his Majesty's vakeel, his Majesty undertaking to advance Rs. 5,000 for the expenses of his journey to Delhi; that the king agreed to give Mr. Thompson a salary of Rs. 12,000 a year, and a written agreement to that effect was drawn up; that, on Mr. Thompson's arrival at Allahabad, he intimated his wish that a house might be prepared for him on his arrival at Delhi. The palace of the late Begum Sumroo was with some difficulty provided for Mr. Thompson, who also required the king to provide both table and servants, besides making a subsequent demand of Rs. 200 a month for table expenses during his journey from Calcutta. Mr. Thompson subsequently demanded and obtained a further advance of Rs. 1,000 a month for the period of his sojourn at Delhi, which was most reluctantly paid by the king. On Mr. Thompson's arrival in England, he submitted his Majesty's claims before a meeting of East-India proprietors, at which it appeared, from the outlines of the debate received by the mails, that Mr. Thompson made use of such intemperate and indiscreet language as to call down upon him the severe rebuke of the Chairman; but by the same mail Mr. Thompson forwarded the King of Delhi a newspaper called the Indian Advocate, supposed to be edited by himself, containing a full report of a totally different version of the debate. The statement added, that he accompanied it with a letter from himself, claiming great credit for complete success, and reminding the king of the promised remuneration; that the king sent to Delhi, directing a royal salute to be fired in commemoration of Mr. Thompson's victory, but that the commandant of palace guards pointed out that all the reports of the debate that he had seen gave quite a different view of the case from this very peculiar report; that further explanation followed, and the salute was never fired, nor did Mr. Thompson pocket another stiver of his Majesty's money; that the king's reply was, that he waited for official confirmation of Mr. Thompson's success; that other copies of the report of Mr. Thompson's version of the debate were sent to several natives of rank, probably with an eye to their becoming profitable customers. That the king, having conferred the title of ambassador upon Mr. Thompson, and thereby enlisted him, as he imagined, in his sole employ, was much annoyed at finding that he also became the paid agent of the late Rajah of Sattara, as well as by Mr. Thompson forwarding from England repeated demands for large sums of money, said to be required for copyists, though the £1,200 per annum was, under Mr. Thompson's own handwriting, to cover all demands except the reward for ultimate success. The gentleman who had put this statement into his (Mr. Elliot's) hand was Major Angelo, who was commandant of the palace guard at the time; and he would be ready to confirm the statement, if the hon. member should get the committee. Mr. Elliot justified the conduct of the British-Indian Government in relation to the deposal of Pertab Singh. He chose to have European agents at Bombay, and that agency establishment caused his ruin. The rajah became involved in difficulties in consequence of placing himself under the guidance of designing men.—European agents. The evils resulting from the practice of native princes having recourse to European agents was forcibly depicted in despatches written by Sir John Malcolm, Mr. Elphinstone, Sir J. Carnac, and Col. Ovans. The last-named gentleman stated that, up to 1839, the Rajah of Sattara had paid £36,000 to his European agents at Bombay alone. If the House wished to inflict the greatest curse possible on the people of India, it was only necessary to give encouragement to complaints of this description. Any discontented person in India might find an agent to act for him in this country. The hon. member had shewn in a letter which he wrote what he expected if he succeeded in the case of the King of Delhi.

Mr. Thompson denied that he had written a letter of the description alluded to.

Mr. Elliot said, that the fact had been communicated to him on authority in which he placed confidence. The hon. member might not remember the circumstance, he had no doubt, that he wrote a letter to the King of Delhi, asking for the remuneration which the hon. member deemed himself entitled to for his services.

Mr. Thompson.—I deny it.

Mr. Elliot.—The hon. member had perhaps forgotten the circumstance; it was some time since it occurred. If the hon. member should succeed in obtaining the committee, he might go back to India to-morrow and return in a year with £100,000 in his pocket. Only let it be known that the hon. member had succeeded in appointing a committee to inquire into and set aside the decisions of all the constituted authorities in India; and the hon. member might not only enrich himself if he chose, but do more towards ruining the British power in India than could be effected by any other means. Only furnish the natives of India with evidence that the hon. member could succeed in what he undertook, and he could have as many constituents as he pleased. He had remarked in the hon. member a disposition to act in that way. Within a few days the hon. member had put a notice on the book of a motion for a return of all jagheers, and of all lands held on Enam or Shotrum tenure, which had been resumed by the British Government in the Madras and Bombay presidencies, from the year 1820 to the year 1840, inclusive, shewing the annual revenue of the possessions so resumed, and the causes of their resumption. That would open a fine field for the hon. member and his friends, and if he succeeded in obtaining the committee for which he now moved, five hundred similar cases would be brought under the notice of the House.

Mr. Hume complained that Mr. Elliot, instead of grappling with the facts of the case, had attempted to injure the character of Mr. Thompson, who had taken no step in the Delhi matter without the knowledge of the Government. The charges against Col. Ovans were twelve in number, and it was due to that officer himself that they should be investigated.

Sir J. W. Hogg pointed out the unfair manner in which Mr. Thompson had hung up the debate on this question, and the injustice of placing atrocious charges against a public man upon the votes of the House. Sir J. Carnac had been calumniated by Mr. Thompson, who had spared neither the dead nor the living. Sir J. Hogg entered at some length into the history of Sattara affairs, and shewed the inaccuracy of Mr. Thompson's statements, defending Sir R. Grant and others whom he had attacked, and justifying the conduct of the Indian Government towards the rajah. The charges against Col. Ovans, he declared, were wholly unfounded; there was not in the service a man of higher honour and integrity than Col. Ovans, and there were few who had rendered greater services to their country, both in the field and in the object. He hoped this discussion would expose the poisonous humbug which had been practised with regard to the case of the Rajah of Sattara, and that the vote of the House would satisfy public servants in India, civil and military, that as long as they discharged their duties honourably and faithfully to their Sovereign and their country, there existed that honourable and gentlemanly feeling in the House of Commons which would make them repudiate and spurn charges like those which had been preferred against the distinguished and honourable individuals whose characters had been calumniously assailed on the present occasion.

Mr. H. Berkeley, as he had presented a petition from Bristol, purporting to be signed by the startling number of 1,500 names, and praying for investigation into the case of the Rajah of Sattara, felt it his duty to make some inquiry with respect to that petition. He found the whole 1,500 signatures were in the handwriting of two persons. He wrote to ascertain whether there was any excitement in Bristol on the subject of the Rajah of Sattara. One gentleman said in reply, "Really we are not acquainted with the gentleman." Another said, "If it was Mr. Brooke who was the rajah, there was a great deal of sympathy for him; but as for the Rajah of Sattara, nobody knew anything about him." He held in his hand a return, with the name of Lord Jocelyn on the back of it, of Europeans in the employment of native states and princes in India, with the amount of the payments made to them; and there he found the name of "George Thompson" connected with the payment of Rs. 1,000 per month. There was an opinion abroad that this part of the return applied to the hon. member for the Tower Hamlets. The hon. gentleman would be glad to have an opportunity of contradicting what was extremely prejudicial to his case, and therefore of answering the question, whether he was in the pay of the Rajah of Sattara.

Sir H. Willoughby said, that in the autumn of 1842 Sir James Carnac sought an interview with him, and then told him the reason why he was induced to depose the Rajah of Sattara, and enjoined him to state it, if ever the question should be raised; namely, that, on investigation, he found that the rajah was unfriendly to those articles which formed the basis of the treaty of 1819. As to whether the charge against the rajah was true or false, Col. Ovens had nothing whatever to do with it. The charge was made by Col. Lodwick, and it was utterly impossible for the Government to hesitate to follow up the suggestions made by that gallant officer.

Mr. Thompson replied in vindication of himself against the imputations cast upon him by Mr. Elliot, who had insinuated that he was in the pay of the King of Delhi. Although it was not derogatory to a man's honour to receive remuneration for services honestly rendered, yet he declared that he had not received, either directly or indirectly, any remuneration whatever from the King of Delhi. When in Calcutta he received a visit from two Mussulmans, who stated that they had received instructions from the King of Delhi to wait upon him, and confer with him on questions then pending between him and the Government at Calcutta. The hon. gentleman then related in detail his proceedings while in India, and stated that offers of large sums were made to him, but that he uniformly refused to accept them. Whatever he did in India was known to the Government of Calcutta. He refused to accept a guarantee for certain remunerations, and he declared solemnly that he had not since his return to England asked the King of Delhi, or had ever received from him, a single penny. He would admit that he had told the Rajah of Sattara at Benares, that if his attention to the advocacy of the rajah's claims should withdraw him from the labours and exertions which were necessary for the maintenance of himself and his family, he should expect compensation on that account. But if the House would grant him a committee, he would lay bare every sum he had ever received for his advocacy of the rajah's claims, and then it would be seen how small a sum had been made to go a long way in this agitation. There was not one fact alleged by the hon. baronet (Sir J. Hogg) in reply to him which he would not undertake to rebut if the House would grant him a committee, and he declared before the House, the country, and his God, that he could prove every fact that had been alleged.

On the motion of Mr. G. Thompson, a return has been ordered by the House of Commons "of all Jagheers, and of all lands held on Enam or Shetrian tenure, which have been resumed by the British Government in the Madras and Bombay presidencies from the year 1800 to the year 1840, including showing the annual revenue of the possessions so resumed, and the causes of their resumption."

Lord Dudley Stuart has given notice of a motion, on the 25th July, for a select committee to inquire into the claims of Criaum Rao Withul, of Baroda, on the East-India Company.

DEBATE AT THE EAST-INDIA HOUSE.

A Special General Court of Proprietors of East-India Stock was held on the 5th inst., at 12 o'clock.

The minutes of the last general Court having been read, and certain returns to Parliamentary orders laid on the table,

The Chairman (Lieut. Gen. Sir James Law Lushington, G.C.B.) acquainted the Court that it had been specially summoned at the request of nine proprietors, whose requisition would be now read.

The following letter was then read:—

"London, June 22, 1848.

"To the Chairman and Directors of the East-India Company.

"Honourable Sirs,

"We, the undersigned proprietors of East-India Stock, duly qualified by law, request that you will convene a Special General Court of Proprietors for the purpose of taking into consideration the annexed resolution.

(Signed) "J. SULLIVAN, J. W. GRAHAM,
ARTHUR J. LEWIS, GEO. THOMPSON,
JOSEPH HUME, CHARLES GRANT,
CHARLES FORBES, J. WILLIAMS,
JOHN POWERS.

"RESOLUTION.—That the Hon. the East-India Company having by a treaty concluded with Pertaub Shean, the Rajah of Sattara, on the 25th September, 1819, ceded the territory of Sattara in perpetual sovereignty to him, his heirs and successors, the East-India Company cannot alienate the territory of Sattara from the rightful heir (of the deceased Rajah Pertaub Shean) without a flagrant breach of the treaty and of public faith."
